CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

SIXTY-SECOND CONGRESS, SECOND SESSION.

SENATE.

MONDAY, March 11, 1912.

The Senate met at 2 o'clock p. m.

AUGUSTUS O. BACON, a Senator from the State of Georgia, took the chair as President pro tempore under the previous order of the Senate.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday last was read and approved.

COTTON GOODS IN ITALY (H. DOC. NO. 611).

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, transmitting, pursuant to law, a report by Commercial Agent Ralph M. Odell on cotton goods in Italy which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by D. K. Hempstead, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House had passed the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 83) making appropriations to meet certain contingent expenses of the Senate.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

IMMIGRATION STATISTICS (S. DOC. NO. 401).

Mr. LODGE. I ask to have printed as a Senate document a table of statistics relating to the coming in of immigrants during the last 10 years. It is a very brief table, and it is desired for use in the debate on that subject.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts asks for the printing of a table he has indicated. It will be so ordered, without objection.

PELATIAH WEBSTER AND THE CONSTITUTION (S. DOC. NO. 402).

Mr. LODGE. I wish to ask for the printing of another brief document. Some time ago some papers were printed as a Senate document relating to Pelatiah Webster and the Constitution. This paper bears on the same matter. It will make a document of only two or three pages, and it is necessary to complete what has been printed. I ask that it may also be printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it will be ordered accordingly.

REGULATION OF IMMIGRATION.

Mr. LODGE. I will take this opportunity to give notice that on Wednesday, immediately after the routine morning business, I shall call up the bill (S. 3175) to regulate the immigration of aliens to and the residence of aliens in the United States, as the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] desires to address the Senate on that bill.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN, from the Committee on Public Lands, to which was referred the bill (S. 2186) to set apart certain lands in the State of Oregon as a public park, to be known as the Saddle Mountain National Park, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 473) thereon.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (S. 4714) for the relief of Martha E. Conklin, submitted an adverse report thereon (No. 472), which was agreed to, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

REPORT OF NATIONAL MONETARY COMMISSION.

Mr. SMOOT, from the Committee on Printing, to which was referred House concurrent resolution 28, reported it favorably without amendment, and it was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That there be printed, for the use of the House of Representatives, 30,000 copies of the report, with accompanying bill, of the National Monetary Commission, to be delivered to the superintendent of the folding room of the House of Representatives for distribution.

FERTILIZER RESOURCES OF THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. SMOOT, from the Committee on Printing, to which was referred House concurrent resolution 40, reported it favorably without amendment, and it was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to, as follows:

DEVELOPMENT AND CONTROL OF WATER POWER.

Mr. SMOOT, from the Committee on Printing, to which was referred Senate resolution 238, for the printing of 500 copies of Senate Document No. 274, submitted by Mr. BURTON February 28, 1912, reported it without amendment, and it was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That there be printed 500 copies of Senate Document No. 274 for the use of the Corps of Engineers, United States Army.

WEATHER BUREAU OBSERVATORY BUILDING AT BILLINGS, MONT.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. From the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds I report back favorably, without amendment, the bill (S. 4566) to provide for the purchase of ground and the erection of a Weather Bureau observatory building at Billings, Mont. (S. Rept. 471).

Mr. MYERS. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill just reported by the Senator from Utah.

The Secretary read the bill, and, there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It proposes to appropriate the sum of $18,000 for the purchase of ground and the erection of a Weather Bureau observatory building at Billings, Mont., the construction to be under the supervision and control of the Chief of the Weather Bureau; plans and specifications to be approved by the Secretary of Agriculture.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

R. 19212), which was ordered to be printed, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

PROPOSED PENSION LEGISLATION.

Mr. POMERENE. I desire to give notice that, with the permission of the Senate, I will make some remarks on proposed pension legislation on next Friday, at the conclusion of the routine morning business.

THE PRESIDENTIAL TERM.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning business is closed.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, I desire to submit some brief remarks upon Senate joint resolution 78, proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States. I will ask to have the joint resolution laid before the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the joint resolution indicated by the Senator from California. It will be read.

The Secretary read the joint resolution, introduced by Mr. WORKS February 13, 1912, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the following be proposed as an amendment to the first paragraph of section 1 of Article II of the Constitution of the United States, which will be valid to all intents and purposes as part of the Constitution when ratified by the legislatures of three-fourths of the States, namely: Amend said paragraph to read as follows:

"The Executive power shall be vested in a President of the United States of America. He shall hold his office during the term of six years and shall be ineligible to a second term, and, together with the Vice President, who shall hold for a like term, and shall also be ineligible to a second term, be elected as follows:"

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, I have offered a resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States that will fix the term of office of the President of the United States at six years instead of four years, as now provided, and making him ineligible to a second term. It was at once assumed in some quarters that this was intended as a movement for some candidate for President and against some other candidate. I assure the Senate at the outset that in proposing the amendment I was influenced by no such consideration and had no such intention. This is no place to talk politics or do politics. My purpose is to do what I can to keep politics out of the White House. I wish I might, with the help of other Members of this body, banish politics from the Halls of Congress forever and confine the Congress of the United States, one of the greatest legislative bodies in the world, to its lawful and legitimate functions, uninfluenced by the passions and sordid selfishness of politics.

I am not urging this amendment to the Constitution because of the length of time a President may serve, but to prevent his holding a second term, with all the evils resulting from the use of patronage to secure a renomination and reelection. I would not object to the holding of a second term if such second term did not follow immediately after the first. I would rather—much rather—see one term of 10 years than two terms of 4 years each in immediate succession.

Mr. President, this movement to bring about the amendment of the Constitution is not the result of a sudden impulse. It is not a personal matter. It has no connection with the coming political campaign. It is intended to correct a great evil that has grown up under the Constitution as it now is and which is growing with every political campaign. If this change were made, the American people would be spared the humiliating spectacle of a President of the United States traveling up and down the country, guarded by an Army officer and private detectives, making political speeches and urging his own reelection. The White House would not be turned into a political press gallery, managed by the Secretary to the President. The official head of this great Nation would be free from the overpowering temptation to use his office and his power as such to secure a second term. Time was when such efforts to secure the great office of President of the United States was looked upon as a disgrace to the Nation and unworthy of a candidate therefor.

It was an unfortunate day for this country when one of its distinguished, honorable, and well-beloved citizens inaugurated the system, as a candidate for President, of receiving delegates at his home and discussing political questions, ostensibly for their information but, in fact, to be sent broadcast throughout the country. That was the beginning of an evil and wholly inexcusable custom, by which the great office of President of the United States was brought down to the level of self-seeking politics and personal appeals for office. Now, and for a long time, the candidate does not wait for delegations to come to him. He goes out on the stump and discusses political questions, abuses his opponents, and urges the continuance in power of his party, involving his own reelection. To me it is a pitiful and humiliating spectacle. Who does a President represent in his official capacity during his term of office? Presumably the whole people of the country of every political faith and shade of belief. But does he, in fact, under present conditions? No, Mr. President, he does not. The President has come to be regarded as the head of his political party. Instead of laying aside politics and assuming the position of representative of the people, he becomes, if he had not been so before, a politician, the titular head and leader of his party, with all that that implies. And what does it imply and what follows? Every appointee of his, from the highest to the lowest office, considers that he owes him not official loyalty alone, but political and personal loyalty as well. He seems to feel that he must support the President in his political views and aspirations, personal and otherwise, even to supporting him for reelection, or get out of office. Few of them choose the latter course.

Mr. President, the evils of such a system are too obvious to need comment. Every thinking man sees and knows the evils of it; but what are we doing to prevent it? One President may very well say, in his justification, or by way of excuse, for nothing can justify it: "Other Presidents have done it before me. It is the custom. Why should I not secure a second term by such means as my predecessors have done?" I have lived in hopes that some time we would elect a Chief Magistrate of this Republic with moral courage and determination enough to put this pernicious and obnoxious custom under his feet. I have been disappointed. I realize that the temptation to follow the custom, and thus secure a reelection, is a tremendous temptation. So far it has been an overpowering one.

Let us look for a moment at the consequences, or some of them, that flow from this condition of things. The President has the power to appoint thousands of public officers. They are found in every city, town, and village in the country. Every one of these appointees, from a Cabinet officer down, with very rare exceptions, considers himself as owing political allegiance to the President personally. In fact, with most of them, this personal political allegiance is looked upon as far more binding than their official obligation to the public. When the presidential term of office is about to expire you will find them all from the highest to the lowest lined up for him and supporting him for a second term. If they are capable of it they take the stump in his behalf. If not stump orators, they belong to the gum-shoe brigade that works so effectually with the individual voter. The question of his fitness for a second term or his convictions on fundamental governmental questions has no weight with them. He is their political chief, as they understand, and their support is his absolute right. But there is another consideration of no little weight with the President's appointees. If he is not reelected they will lose their jobs and thereby the country be deprived of their most valuable services. Does anyone believe that the people of this country are satisfied with this condition? Certainly they are not. They do not believe in it. It is a custom that has been under public censure and condemnation from the time it was inaugurated.

It is not alone that such a system enables the President to build up a great political machine, with representatives in every county of every State in the Union, through which he may force his renomination, that it meets with public condemnation, but because it imposes a burden upon the presidential office that it should not bear. Why should the President be burdened with the appointment of the thousands of Federal officials now subject to his choice? Why should Senators and Representatives in Congress be burdened with the power of recommending applicants for appointment or given that right? Why should not these appointments be placed under the classified civil-service rules and made to stand upon merit and not on political or personal favor of Senators or anyone else. I am glad to know that the present incumbent of the office of President has recommended that this be done. It does him credit. It is evidence of the fact that he recognizes the evils of the present system and is willing to see it destroyed. I hope his recommendation in this respect may be heeded and acted upon favorably by Congress.

Mr. President, the proposed amendment to the Constitution that I have offered would, if adopted, go a long way toward removing the evils of the present system. It would take away from the President every opportunity or temptation to strive for his own reelection or to use the power or influence of the thousands of his appointees to secure his reelection or the success of his party. It is a consummation devoutly to be hoped. Congress owes it to the people of the United States to adopt this amendment and allow the legislatures of the States to pass upon it.

I am not wedded to any particular term for the President, long or short. As I have said, the length of term is not the important matter to be considered. It is the right of the President, under the present rule, to succeed himself that I am combatting.

I would have no objection to four years or eight years as the term of office. I would not be willing to go beyond eight years. What I desire to impress upon the Senate is my unalterable objection to two terms, one following the other. I hope Senators will not pass this matter over lightly. I hope they will not regard it as in any sense political or as an effort to affect the political aspirations of any individual. I do not believe in changing the Constitution except for grave reasons affecting the public interests. I am particularly averse to any effort to changes affecting the fundamental principles of government. But I consider the change I am seeking to bring about as one of profound interest and grave consequence. It will not change the principles established by the Constitution, principles that we should be careful to maintain and preserve, or invade fundamental questions. It simply destroys a condition that has afforded an opportunity to build up a vicious political system that every good citizen should deplore.

The evil of this system is accentuated when applied to the condition of the Republican Party. A Republican candidate for President must look to the votes of the Northern States for his election. As a rule, no Republican electors are chosen in the Southern States. And yet a much greater representation, in a Republican national convention, in proportion to population, is allowed the Southern States than the Northern. Under the present basis of apportionment each State is given 4 delegates at large and 2 for each congressional district, irrespective of the number of Republican votes cast in the State or district. The result is that the Southern States that never send an elector to the electoral college practically control the nomination of the candidates, and the President, if a candidate for reelection, practically controls the selection of delegates to the convention from the Southern States. He controls them because the Federal officers in these States are his appointees, and, under this vicious system, his political supporters and lieutenants select the delegates. It is a notorious fact, that no one presumes to deny any more, that the Federal officers in those States dictate who shall go to the national convention as delegates. The inevitable result is that the delegates from the Southern States, with very rare exceptions, are for the President for renomination, all because of the pernicious patronage system that prevails and the power the President has as a result, when seeking a reelection. Let us look a moment at the probable outcome this year. The Republican national convention will have 1,076 delegates; necessary to the choice of a candidate, 539. Of these the 16 Southern States have 366. In these States the Republican vote is very light and has no effect on the result at the final election.

In Georgia, for instance, there are but 41,000 Republican voters, according to the last presidential election; yet those 41,000 Republican voters send 28 delegates to the national nominating convention. California, on the other hand, with 214,000 Republicans, has but 26 delegates in the nominating convention. Georgia has been Democratic ever since 1880, and has never contributed a single vote to the selection of a Republican President. California has been Republican every year with the exception of 1892, when it elected 8 Democratic electors.

Louisiana, with approximately 9,000 Republican voters, has 20 delegates in the national convention.

Mr. THORNTON. Mr. President, will the Senator from California allow me to interrupt him there?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. WORKS. Certainly.

Mr. THORNTON. The statement the Senator has just made that 9,000 Republicans vote in the State of Louisiana was doubtless taken from the statistics compiled some little time back. Just before the recent Democratic primaries in Louisiana four-fifths of them changed their party affiliation in order to vote in the Democratic primary, and there were not more than 1,500 Republican voters left. However, they will all go back again now.

Mr. WORKS. That is a little bit worse than I thought, Mr. President.

Mississippi, with 4,000 Republican voters, has 20 delegates; South Carolina, with 4,000 Republicans, has 18 delegates; Texas, with 65,000 Republicans, has 40 delegates.

All of these States are hopelessly Democratic and make no contribution whatever to Republican success. The party in these States is absolutely controlled by Federal officeholders. They control the party machinery, select delegates, and instruct them to support their political chief, as they regard him. The following data is interesting and instructive. Note the outcome.

	Republicans.	Delegates.
Virginia	52,000	24
Texas	65,000	40
South Carolina	4,000	18
Mississippi	4,000	20
Louisiana	9,000	20
Georgia	41,000	28
Florida	39,000	12
Total	214,000	162

Seven Southern Democratic States, with a Republican population of 214,000, have 162 delegates in the national nominating convention, while 214,000 Republicans in the single State of California, which is invariably Republican, have but 26 delegates. It may be said that the power to fix the basis of apportionment of delegates in the several States rests in the party and that the power of the Southern States may be reduced in that way. Yes; that is true, but unfortunately the very influences that control the Southern vote for other purposes control it to prevent such action. Efforts have been made to correct this palpable injustice, but without effect.

Mr. President, I have here a small table showing the vote and number of delegates in 16 Southern States, giving the name of the State, number of delegates, total vote, both Republican and Democratic, now forming the basis of representation in the convention, and the vote of the State, whether Republican or Democratic, at each presidential election from 1880 to 1908. I submit it for the consideration of the Senate and ask leave to incorporate it in my remarks without reading.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, permission to do so is granted.

The table referred to is as follows:

Southern States.	Number of delegates.	Republican.	Democratic.	1908	1904	1900	1896	1892	1888	1884	1880
1. Alabama	24	41,692	74,374	D	D	D	D	D	D	D	D
2. Arkansas	18	56,624	87,015	D	D	D	D	D	D	D	D
3. Florida	12	39,302	48,591	D	D	D	D	D	D	D	D
4. Georgia	28	41,692	72,350	D	D	D	D	D	D	D	D
5. Kentucky	26	235,711	244,092	D	D	D	R	D	D	D	D
6. Louisiana	20	8,958	63,568	D	D	D	D	D	D	D	D
7. Maryland	16	113,803	115,908	(1)	(2)	R	R	D	D	D	D
8. Mississippi	20	4,505	60,876	D	D	D	D	D	D	D	D
9. Missouri	36	347,203	346,574	R	R	D	D	D	D	D	D
10. North Carolina	24	114,887	136,928	D	D	D	D	D	D	D	D
11. Oklahoma	20	110,558	122,406	D	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....
12. South Carolina	18	3,963	62,283	D	D	D	D	D	D	D	D
13. Tennessee	24	118,519	135,819	D	D	D	D	D	D	D	D
14. Texas	40	65,602	216,737	D	D	D	D	D	D	D	D
15. Virginia	24	52,573	82,916	D	D	D	D	D	D	D	D
Total	366	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....

[1] 2 Republicans, 6 Democrats. [2] 1 Republican, 7 Democrats.

Mr. WORKS. It will be seen, Mr. President, that all of the 16 States, with one exception, have always gone Democratic. There is still hope for West Virginia. She has gone Republican half the time.

These 16 States, as I have pointed out, have 366 delegates out of a total of 1,076; enough, generally, to control the result.

The basis of apportionment is the fault of the Republican Party and has no excuse. The fact that a candidate for President, because he is at the time the incumbent of the office, can use this condition to insure his success is the fault of a vicious system that has grown up under that provision of the Constitution that I am seeking to have changed.

The Republican Party owes it to itself to change the basis of apportionment that results in such rank injustice. The Congress of the United States owes it to the people of this country to so change the Constitution as to remove every temptation and opportunity to use the power or influence of the Presidential office to secure the reelection of the incumbent.

PENSIONS AND INCREASE OF PENSIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The calendar under Rule VIII is in order.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 4623) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors.

Benjamin B. D. Derickson, late of Company H, Ninth Regiment Delaware Volunteer Infantry, $24.

Lewis Childs, late of Company D, Eleventh Regiment New Hampshire Volunteer Infantry, $30.

Charles Young, late of Company A, Thirteenth Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, $30.

John H. Mullison, late of Company B, Twelfth Regiment Pennsylvania Reserve Volunteer Infantry, and Company H, One hundred and ninetieth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, $36.

Emma E. Keyes, widow of William T. Keyes, late of Company C, Tenth Regiment, and Company D, Twenty-ninth Regiment, Maine Volunteer Infantry, $12.

Mr. McCUMBER. On page 9, I move to strike out all of lines 11 to 14, inclusive—the case of Jennie West.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McCUMBER. I ask that in this case the papers be recommitted to the Senate committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. McCUMBER. I also move to strike out all of lines 11 to 14, inclusive, on page 13—the case of Amon H. Johnson—the beneficiary having died since the bill was reported.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McCUMBER. On page 16, line 1, I move to strike out the word "twenty-four" and insert in lieu thereof the word "thirty." Later evidence filed with the committee shows that the soldier's condition has become much worse since the bill was introduced and justifies the increase.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McCUMBER. On page 25, I move to strike out all of lines 11 to 14—the case of Emma E. Keyes; and I ask that the papers in the case be recommitted to the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the papers will be recommitted to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I desire to offer an amendment to be inserted at the end of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If the Senator from Georgia will send his amendment to the desk it will be stated.

The SECRETARY. At the end of the bill insert the following proviso:

Provided, That no one of the said pensions shall be paid until the examination has been made in the Pension Bureau and it has been found that said party has actually served in the Army or the Navy and was engaged in some battle in connection with said service.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Georgia suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BRYAN (when Mr. FLETCHER's name was called). My colleague is unavoidably detained from the Senate.

Mr. JONES (when Mr. POINDEXTER's name was called). I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. POINDEXTER] is detained from the Chamber on account of the death of his mother. I shall allow this announcement to stand for the rest of the day.

The following Senators answered to their names:

Bacon	Culberson	Lodge	Root
Bourne	Cullom	McCumber	Simmons
Brandegee	Cummins	Martin, Va.	Smith, Ga.
Briggs	Curtis	Martine, N. J.	Smith, Mich.
Bristow	Dillingham	Myers	Smoot
Brown	du Pont	Nixon	Sutherland
Bryan	Foster	O'Gorman	Swanson
Burnham	Gallinger	Oliver	Taylor
Burton	Gardner	Overman	Thornton
Chamberlain	Guggenheim	Page	Townsend
Chilton	Hitchcock	Percy	Warren
Clapp	Johnston, Ala.	Perkins	Watson
Clark, Wyo.	Jones	Pomerene	Williams
Clarke, Ark.	Kern	Rayner	Works
Crane	Lea	Reed

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Fifty-nine Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. McCUMBER. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. OVERMAN. Let the amendment be reported.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will again state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. At the end of the bill add the following:

Provided, That no one of the said pensions shall be paid until the examination has been made in the Pension Bureau and it has been found that said party has actually served in the Army or the Navy and was engaged in some battle in connection with said service.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I wish to add what I send to the desk.

The Secretary read the amendment as follows:

Provided, That no one of the said special pensions contained in this bill shall be paid to any one of the parties herein named until the Pension Bureau has made investigation and found the said party to whom the same is to be paid did not enter the service in consideration of a bounty or for a payment made to him to serve as a substitute; and

Provided, That no one of the said pensions shall be paid until the examination has been made in the Pension Bureau and it has been found that said party has actually served in the Army or the Navy and was engaged in some battle in connection with said service.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Georgia offer this amendment in connection with the other, or separately?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Together.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. McCUMBER. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. CULBERSON. I should like to inquire whether each amendment is distinct in itself—I was not completely able to hear them when they were read—and therefore divisible.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. They are undoubtedly divisible, but the Chair asked the Senator from Georgia whether they should be taken together as one amendment, and he replied in the affirmative. Of course, upon the demand of any Senator they may be considered separately.

Mr. CULBERSON. If the Senator from Georgia has no particular reason why they should be considered together, I should like to have them considered separately.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the first amendment.

The Secretary read as follows:

Provided, however, That no one of the said special pensions contained in this bill shall be paid to any one of the parties herein named until the Pension Bureau has made investigation and found the said party to whom the same is to be paid did not enter the service in consideration of a bounty or for a payment made to him to serve as a substitute; and

Mr. McCUMBER. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. THORNTON. I should like to ask the Senator from Georgia whether the record shows that the party in this case actually was in the service of the United States?

Mr. McCUMBER. The records do not show either affirmatively or negatively upon the question whether he came in under a bounty or what consideration impelled him to join the ranks of the Union.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the first amendment proposed by the Senator from Georgia, on which the yeas and nays have been ordered. The Secretary will call the roll.

Mr. CULBERSON. Before the roll is called, I will ask the Senator from North Dakota an additional question to that suggested by the Senator from Louisiana, and that is whether the records of the Pension Office answer the inquiry which is contained in this amendment?

Mr. McCUMBER. I do not think the records of the Pension Office would show that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will proceed with the call of the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BURNHAM (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH]. If he were present, I would vote "nay."

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA], and vote "nay."

Mr. GUGGENHEIM (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. PAYNTER]. He is not in the Chamber, so I withhold my vote.

Mr. GARDNER (when the name of Mr. JOHNSON of Maine was called). My colleague [Mr. JOHNSON] is necessarily absent from the Senate on official business. Were he present, he would vote "nay" on this amendment.

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). I wish to announce my pair with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE].

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. LEA (after having voted in the negative). Has the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. LIPPITT] voted?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is informed that he has not.

Mr. LEA. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. LIPPITT]. Therefore I withdraw my vote. Were he present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. DILLINGHAM (after having voted in the affirmative). I did not observe when I voted that the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] was not in the Chamber. I therefore withdraw my vote, having a general pair with that Senator.

Mr. JOHNSTON of Alabama (after having voted in the negative.) I was absent from the Senate on committee service when the vote was begun. I wish to know whether the question is on both provisos.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Only on the first one.

Mr. JOHNSTON of Alabama. I will change my vote from "nay" to "yea."

Mr. CRAWFORD. I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. GAMBLE] is necessarily absent. He has a standing pair with the junior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. DAVIS]. If my colleague were present, he would vote "nay."

Mr. JONES. I have already announced the absence of my colleague [Mr. POINDEXTER]. If he were present, he would vote "nay" on this amendment.

Mr. CUMMINS. My colleague [Mr. KENYON] is necessarily absent. If he were present, he would vote, upon this question, "nay."

Mr. BORAH. My colleague [Mr. HEYBURN] is absent on account of illness. If he were present, he would vote "nay."

Mr. McCUMBER. I desire to state that my colleague [Mr. GRONNA] is absent. Were he present, he would vote "nay."

Mr. BORAH. I desire to add also that my colleague [Mr. HEYBURN] is paired with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD].

Mr. OLIVER. My colleague [Mr. PENROSE] is necessarily absent to-day. He is paired with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS]. If my colleague were present, he would vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 12, nays 47, as follows:

YEAS—12.

Bacon	Culberson	Martin, Va.	Simmons
Bryan	Gore	Overman	Smith, Ga.
Clarke, Ark.	Johnston, Ala.	Percy	Swanson

NAYS—47.

So the amendment of Mr. SMITH of Georgia was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question now is upon the second proviso offered by the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I withdraw the second portion of the amendment, with the consent of the Senate, and I wish to offer another amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the amendment will be considered as withdrawn, and the amendment now sent to the desk will be read.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add, at the end of the bill, the following proviso:

Provided, That after the passage of this bill it shall be the duty of the Pension Bureau to investigate the record of each party named therein, and if it is found from the records of the Army or Navy that any party therein named failed to have an honorable discharge then the name of such party shall thereafter be stricken and he shall no longer receive any benefit from said bill.

Mr. McCUMBER. I do not know whether the Senator is aware of the fact that no names could be placed upon the pension roll at all unless the soldiers had had an honorable discharge. That is the existing law. The bill applies only to those who have had an honorable discharge.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. But I could not tell, Mr. President, from looking at the bill whether it was not the purpose of the bill in some instances to remove disabilities and to give pensions to men who did not have honorable discharges.

Mr. McCUMBER. No; in any case where there is a question about the party having been honorably discharged it goes to the Committee on Military Affairs, and not to the Committee on Pensions, and the ex-soldier could not be placed upon the pension roll unless he had received an honorable discharge. If the Senator will look at the first clause of the bill he will see that it reads:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws—

One of the provisions and limitations of the pension laws is that the claimant must have an honorable discharge.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. May I ask the Senator a question?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield for a question?

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly. I was through.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Then, in point of fact, there is not a man whose name is on this list who is having in any way the defect of an honorable discharge cured, but everyone on this list has received an honorable discharge.

Mr. McCUMBER. Everyone on this list must have received an honorable discharge.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Then, Mr. President, I will not insist upon the amendment. It is because I did not know the fact, and I was struck with the size of some of the pensions, that I wanted to raise the question. I withdraw the proposed amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment is withdrawn. The bill is still as in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment.

Mr. McCUMBER. Since we have been discussing this matter I have received notice of another death of one of the claimants, which compels me to ask for a further amendment. I therefore move to amend, on page 14, by striking out all of lines 20, 21, 22, and 23, the case of Samuel Beatty.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will report the amendment.

The SECRETARY. Strike out lines 20 to 23, inclusive, on page 14, in the following words:

The name of Samuel Beatty, late first lieutenant Company I, Third Regiment Pennsylvania Reserves Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Amend, by striking out lines 20, 21, 22, and 23, on page 5, the following words:

The name of Francis M. Cox, late of Company B, Forty-fourth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Florida.

Mr. BRYAN. I ask the Secretary to read what appears in the report in this case, found on page 12 of Report No. 205.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the part indicated by the Senator from Florida.

The Secretary read as follows:

S. 562. Francis M. Cox, of Orting, Wash., served as a private in Company B, Forty-fourth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, from February 4, 1865, to September 14, 1865, and was honorably discharged. He is a pensioner at $20 per month under the service act of February 6, 1907. He never filed a claim under the general law, but formerly drew $12 per month under the act of June 27, 1890, granted him on account of total inability to earn a support by manual labor. The testimony shows that claimant is about 80 years of age, and that he is broken down from piles, hernia, and general and senile debility, and is wholly unable to earn a living by manual labor. It further appears that he is without property or means and is entirely dependent upon his pension for support. On account of his age, poverty, and total disability your committee recommend increase of pension to $24 per month; his service was little more than seven months and no greater increase is warranted.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, that, as stated in the report, is an enlistment which covered a period of a little more than seven months. Yet, including the three days of the bloody battle we learned of on Saturday, the great Battle of Appomattox, he could not have served 90 days in actual warfare. He was not injured by reason of his service. He, too, has drawn about $3,400 of pension for the 64 days of service. He, too, has taken a place above all others of his age who had service ranging from one to four years in the Civil War.

I do not intend to delay the action of the Senate further than to call attention to this case, so that it may be understood by Senators as they vote for an omnibus bill, and it may be understood by the country at large just exactly what Congress is doing with reference to special pension legislation.

On Saturday the distinguished Senator from Indiana [Mr. SHIVELY] chided me for picking out from the list of names one name, and he asked me the question whether I considered that typical of the cases being provided for by special pension legislation. I did not have a fair opportunity to answer his question before I was asked another question.

I do not claim, Mr. President, that the case of Mr. Angel is typical; I do not claim that this case is typical; but I do claim that there are a number included in the omnibus bill Saturday and in this omnibus bill to-day of service during the actual continuation of the war of from 40 to 50 or 60 days.

Without taking up the time of the Senate to offer another amendment, I shall use the amendment I intended to offer after this one is voted down, for the purpose of illustrating that there are other cases here.

On page 6 of the bill and on page 13 of the report of the committee it is shown that Mr. Alonzo L. Baker enlisted February 14, 1865, and that he was honorably discharged September 20, 1865; that he, too, has drawn about $3,400; that he was not injured by reason of his service to his country; that he is only 65 years of age; yet that he, nevertheless, also is to be singled out and made an exception of and made the beneficiary of special pension legislation.

Mr. President, a few moments ago a request was made by the chairman of the committee for the yeas and nays to determine whether or not we would undertake to eliminate from the pension roll the bounty jumper. The Senate by an overwhelming vote decided it would not do so. On Saturday I asked for the yeas and nays so as to determine whether or not the name of a soldier of 46 days' service should be stricken from the bill, and I could not get enough hands raised to accomplish that purpose. If Senators believe that it is right and proper to retain the name that I have moved to strike from this list, if they believe that man ought to be elevated above the rank and file of soldiers generally, it does seem to me that at least Senators ought not to object to having themselves so recorded in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. Therefore on this vote I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, a great deal has been said by the Senator from Florida about the war being over before these later enlistments took place in 1865. Without any intention whatever of reviving unpleasant memories, in fact, in a spirit of admiration and of the highest appreciation for their gallantry and valor, and praise for the men of the South who fought in the rebellion, I say that it was very difficult to convince them they had been whipped, although they made little permanent headway against the North and gave way only after the most stubborn resistance. I am going to read, in reply to these statements of southern Senators, the actual condition of affairs as viewed by the commander in chief of the Confederate Army more than two months after the enlistment of the men whose records are being called in question to-day.

I read an address delivered by Jefferson Davis in Danville, Va., on April 4, 1865:

DANVILLE, VA., April 4, 1865.

To the people of the Confederate States of America:

The general in chief of our army has found it necessary to make such movements of the troops as to uncover the capital and thus involve the withdrawal of the government from the city of Richmond.

It would be unwise, even were it possible, to conceal the great moral as well as material injury to our cause that must result from the occupation of Richmond by the enemy. It is equally unwise and unworthy of us, as patriots engaged in a most sacred cause, to allow our energies to falter, our spirits to grow faint, or our efforts to became relaxed under reverses however calamitous. While it has been to us a source of national pride that for four years of unequaled warfare we have been able, in close proximity to the center of the enemy's power, to maintain the seat of our chosen government free from the pollution of his presence; while the memories of the heroic dead who have freely given their lives to its defense must ever remain enshrined in our hearts; while the preservation of the capital, which is usually regarded as the evidence to mankind of separate national existence, was an object very dear to us, it is also true, and should not be forgotten, that the loss which we have suffered is not without compensation. For many months the largest and finest army of the Confederacy, under the command of a leader whose presence inspires equal confidence in the troops and the people, has been greatly trammeled by the necessity of keeping constant watch over the approaches to the capital, and has thus been forced to forego more than one opportunity for promising enterprise. The hopes and confidence of the enemy have been constantly excited by the belief that their possession of Richmond would be the signal for our submission to their rule, and relieve them from the burden of war, as their failing resources admonish them it must be abandoned if not speedily brought to a successful close. It is for us, my countrymen, to show by our bearing under reverses how wretched has been the self-deception of those who have believed us less able to endure misfortune with fortitude than to encounter danger with courage. We have now entered upon a new phase of a struggle, the memory of which is to endure for all ages and to shed an increasing luster upon our country

Relieved from the necessity of guarding cities and particular points, important but not vital to our defense, with an army free to move from point to point and strike in detail the detachments and garrisons of the enemy operating on the interior of our own country, where supplies are more accessible, and where the foe will be far removed from his own base and cut off from all succor in case of reverse, nothing is now needed to render our triumph certain but the exhibition of our own unquenchable resolve. Let us but will it, and we are free; and who, in the light of the past, dare doubt your purpose in the future?

Animated by the confidence in your spirit and fortitude, which never yet have failed me, I announce to you, fellow countrymen, that it is my purpose to maintain your cause with my whole heart and soul; that I will never consent to abandon to the enemy one foot of the soil of any one of the States of the Confederacy; that Virginia, noble State, whose ancient renown has been eclipsed by her still more glorious recent history, whose bosom has been bared to receive the main shock of this war, whose sons and daughters have exhibited heroism so sublime as to render her illustrious in all times to come—that Virginia, with the help of her people and by the blessing of Providence, shall be held and defended, and no peace ever be made with the infamous invaders of her homes by the sacrifice of any of her rights or territory. If by stress of numbers we should ever be compelled to a temporary withdrawal from her limits, or those of any other border State, again and again will we return, until the baffled and exhausted enemy shall abandon in despair his endless and impossible task of making slaves of a people resolved to be free.

Let us not, then, despond, my countrymen; but, relying on the never-failing mercies and protecting care of our God, let us meet the foe with fresh defiance, with unconquered and unconquerable hearts.

JEFF'N DAVIS.

Mr. President, I find no fault whatever with his optimism, although I have always felt free to criticize the patriotism of the distinguished president of the Confederacy. He was misled, undoubtedly, and had hopes that were not justified; but the war was not over when Jefferson Davis made that address to the southern people, who were dismayed but ever dauntless to the very hour of fate and went to final defeat with colors flying and the smoke of battle still heavy on the field; and it is perfectly puerile for anyone to stand in this Chamber and contend that Gen. Grant before Petersburg and Sheridan in the Shenandoah Valley and Custer at Waynesboro, annihilating Early's entire army in March, 1865, were not engaged in a titanic and royal battle for freedom against a worthy foe, but were often doubtful of victory. Gen. Custer issued an address to his command at Appomattox Court House, April 9, 1865, in which he said to his faithful comrades:

Within the past 10 days * * * you have captured 46 pieces of field artillery and 37 battle flags. You have never lost a gun, never lost a color, and have never been defeated.

Mr. President, Southern soldiers did not part with battle flags without a fight; these glorious emblems of their prowess, often tattered and torn and faded, still lured the living soldiers of Lee to battle for disunion even when the maddening current of disaster ran strongly against them; and I have heard it said of the Confederate soldiers that death was at all times preferable to defeat. Sirs, you do them little honor when you say that there was no fierce resistance after the fall of Richmond.

The Battle of Dinwiddie Courthouse, Five Forks, and Sailors Creek on April 6, where 6,000 Confederate soldiers were captured on the way to Appomattox Station, and the capture of the supply trains intended for Lee's army on the Lynchburg Pike by Gen. Custer, cutting off a possible retreat to Lynchburg, hastened events at Appomattox and brought great credit to the Union arms.

I referred on Saturday to Gen. Custer, a Michigan soldier, and his Cavalry brigade, and that his unquenchable valor and his undying heroism may always bloom in the parliamentary annals of this day, I propose to read a letter written by Gen. Sheridan to Mrs. Custer the day following the surrender of the army of Lee to the army of Grant:

APPOMATTOX COURTHOUSE,
April 10, 1865.

MY DEAR MADAM: I respectfully present to you the small writing table on which the conditions for the surrender of the Confederate Army of northern Virginia were written by Lieut. Gen. Grant; and permit me to say, Madam, that there is scarcely an individual in our service who has contributed more to bring about this desirable result than your very gallant husband.

Very respectfully,
PHIL. H. SHERIDAN.

Mrs. GEN. CUSTER,
Washington, D. C.

Mr. President, I know, of course, that no Senator on either side would question the gallantry of Custer. I know that no Senator on either side would withhold the just meed of honest praise that is due to the defenders of the Union, no matter whence they came or how long they served. Their services might have been gallant and heroic, even though they enlisted in the very last days of the war. These latter day enlistments were in obedience to the call of President Lincoln. One of the soldiers who has been referred to as having served but 47 days went immediately after Appomattox with his Cavalry comrades into the West, where they served in the Indian wars.

It is far from my purpose to enkindle any unpleasant thoughts in the heart or mind of any Senator on either side of the Chamber, and yet I remind the Senator from Georgia and the Senator from Florida that it is not enough to say that because a man enlisted in the last days of the war he did not render gallant and conspicuous service, even though the records may not show that he was wounded in battle.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Certainly.

Mr. BRYAN. Does the Senator from Michigan believe that it is equitable to take men who enlisted in February of 1865 and elevate them by special legislation above those who served for one, two, three, and four years in the Civil War?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, I think that is a very fair inquiry, and I will say to the Senator from Florida, in reply, that I would much prefer to see it done in some other and more general way that would give all the needy soldiers of the Union what is their honest due from the Government. Now, the Senator from Florida having asked me a question and having been answered, I will ask him——

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, I submit I have had no answer yet. I asked the Senator from Michigan if he thought it was fair to do that, and he has not answered the question.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. The Senator said "equitable."

Mr. BRYAN. Well, equitable and just.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I consider that anything that is done for a soldier is equitable if it tends to relieve his necessities and lighten the burdens of life.

Mr. BRYAN. The Senator thinks, then, it is just to the other soldiers who, for some reason or for no reason at all, do not have special legislation for their benefit, although they may have served during the whole war, to leave them as the general law leaves them, and take these 90-day militia——

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Oh, 90-day——

Mr. BRYAN. Well, that is this case, and it is the only case to which I have referred—and elevate them above the great body of the veterans of the Union Army?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, I would prefer just and generous general laws; but we have found it impossible to get such legislation for them all. I ask the Senator from Florida if we would vote down these special bills would the Senator from Florida join me in the passage of a general pension law calculated to give these veterans their honest due, such a bill, for instance, as has recently passed the House of Representatives and is now pending in the Senate?

Mr. BRYAN. Does the Senator desire me to answer that question?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I do.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, I have talked so much about pension legislation that I supposed anyone who desired to know my views, if they are worth considering, knew the position I have taken. I say to the Senator from Michigan that I will go as far as he will to vote pensions based upon meritorious service in the Civil War and upon need. I will vote for any pension bill that includes those two items, but, in my judgment, it is not proper legislation to vote pensions to those who do not need them. Nor is it proper to vote pensions to those who enlisted but rendered no service and suffered no injury because of their patriotism.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, does the Senator from Florida indicate by his position that he would not vote to pension a soldier in the Union Army who was not wounded in action?

Mr. BRYAN. I did not say that, Mr. President.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. The Senator says "meritorious." I should like to know what he means by "meritorious." How does he distinguish between men who composed the Army of the Union?

Mr. BRYAN. I said, Mr. President, some time ago that I believed meritorious service and need should coexist as prerequisite to a pension, but because of the fact that there were those now receiving aid of the Government who could ill afford to have that aid taken away, I would vote to pension those who suffered no injury provided they were in need of pension.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. What should be their necessity—poverty?

Mr. BRYAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Old age?

Mr. BRYAN. Does the Senator from Michigan——

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. If the Senator will permit me, I have the floor. Would poverty and old age be reasons for voting pensions to soldiers of the Union Army?

Mr. BRYAN. I think so; undoubtedly.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Would physical ailments, not perhaps the result of wounds, but exposure, be one of the reasons?

Mr. BRYAN. Unless due to the service; no.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. They would not be?

Mr. BRYAN. They would not be. Simply for the reason that a man enlisted, although he rendered no actual service and can not trace any injury to the war, I would not vote to give him a pension or vote for a general bill giving him one.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. No one else proposes to give him a pension if he did no service, but a man may have been a most efficient soldier and not have been wounded in battle. He may have been a most efficient soldier without having a hospital record. He may have been a most gallant soldier and not have suffered greatly at the time, and yet be unable because of that service to withstand its effect upon his declining years. There are hundreds and thousands of men who followed Lee, as there are those who followed Grant, who were not wounded, but the fact that they encountered the long marches, that they may have suffered in Army prisons, that they may have been called upon to brave storms and trials, entitles them to the generous consideration of the Government they helped to save.

Mr. BRYAN. Does the Senator from Michigan agree or does he not agree with a former Congressman from Michigan—I believe he was from Michigan, the Senator's State—and who has been past grand commander of the Grand Army of the Republic, in a statement——

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I recollect what the Senator said on Saturday.

Mr. BRYAN. That over 600,000 of the latter-day enlisted men never saw service, and that it is unfair to put them on an equality with the veterans of the Army?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Even though they were exposed to the rain and the sleet and the snow that were incidental to their long marches and took upon themselves all the burdens and discomforts of war?

Mr. BRYAN. But received no injury from it.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Oh, Mr. President, many a volunteer soldier has gone to a premature grave by reason of the long marches and the suffering he endured in the South; and it will not do to say, because he happened to escape the vigilance and skill of the sharpshooter and was not picked off by a southern bullet, that he rendered no service of distinction to his country.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I do.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, the war closed nearly 47 years ago. It has taken us, therefore, nearly 47 years to learn that the basis of our pension system has been wrong in every respect. All of our pension legislation, based upon service, has recognized the standard of 90 days' service to entitle the soldier to the consideration of his country. Up until the present time we have not changed that law. A man who served 90 days has during all these years received exactly as much for a given condition as the man who served during the entire war.

Mr. President, there must have been something in that basis of pension that appealed either to the American people or to the soldiers who are interested, or it would have been modified and disposed of very many years ago.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield.

Mr. BRYAN. Does the Senator from North Dakota claim that prior to the act of June 27, 1890, there were any pensions paid to those who could not trace injury to their service in the war?

Mr. McCUMBER. I mean to say that since the war closed a given condition has always been the basis of the pension granted—the condition of the soldier—that service or length of service was never taken into consideration——

Mr. BRYAN. But injury was.

Mr. McCUMBER. And that since June 27, 1890, when we passed the pension bill of that date, up until the present time, there has been no demand that we should recognize a different standard than the standard of 90 days' service.

Mr. BRYAN. Prior to 1890 the beneficiary had to trace his injury to the service before he could be eligible to receive a pension?

Mr. McCUMBER. Up until 1890.

Mr. BRYAN. Then it has not been 47 years.

Mr. McCUMBER. But if prior to 1890 a man lost an arm, he would receive the same pension, whether he served one day or whether he served during the entire war.

Mr. BRYAN. Certainly; if he was injured.

Mr. McCUMBER. Congress has made no distinction because of the service origin for which the pension was given, nor has it recognized anything but 90-day service as the standard for the granting of a service pension.

I wish to close this discussion before 4 o'clock, if I can. The Senator has criticized this particular bill. Now, let us see what there is in the bill. The Senator evidently not only disagrees with the Bureau of Pensions as to when the war closed, but he disagrees with the law as to when the war closed. He disagrees with the President of the Confederacy as to when the war closed, and he disagrees with my friend, the Senator from Michigan, as to when the war closed, and with all those authorities against him, especially the authoritative statement of the President of the Confederacy and the law of the land, the Senator ought to admit that the war did not close April 9, 1865.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly.

Mr. BRYAN. I think after the Senator has made that statement he ought to allow me to suggest to him that on Saturday I stated that I conceded that the war was officially declared closed on August 20, 1866, but that, as I had understood, until the Senator from Michigan established his reputation as a historian, and that of the great three days' battle at Appomattox, the war closed on April 9, 1865. I would not question the accuracy of historians. But I would rather question the accuracy of the historian than to have removed from my mind the vivid description of the great battle of Appomattox of three days' standing. So I think it is hardly fair for the Senator from North Dakota to suggest that I have tried to make it appear that the war technically closed prior to August, 1866. I know it did not; and I am of the opinion that those soldiers who served after the real fighting was over assume more the attitude of technical soldiers than of real veterans of a great war.

Mr. McCUMBER. At least we have the record of the Michigan cavalry in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and we have given a great deal of immortality to their history and we have done some good in the time we have taken up. But I do not want to spend any more time upon that battle. At least it is all over now, and I am ready now to get right back to this case of which the Senator complains.

The Senator says the applicant served 47 days, I think, or something of that kind, and I notice that he is now drawing a pension of $20 a month under the act of 1907. Under that act he could not draw a pension of that rate per month unless he had been held to have served 90 days. In looking over the brief record I have here I also observe that he obtained the highest pension—$12 a month—under the 1890 law. That was some time ago. A considerable time ago he made his application under the law of 1890, and was receiving under that law the highest pension that could be granted, and that pension would not have been granted unless the department found he was wholly physically disabled.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President——

Mr. McCUMBER. Just a moment. He is a man 80 years of age, and evidently has not very many years to live. The report shows that he is broken down from piles, hernia, and general and senile debility, and is wholly unable to earn a living by manual labor, and it further appears that he is without property or means and is entirely dependent upon his pension for support. In view of his poverty and general disability the committee recommended an increase of $4 per month. We recognize that the service was short. Had he served a year we certainly would have given him at least $30 a month upon that physical showing.

Now, the Senator complains a good deal about our giving a man who served 90 or 60 days the same amount, under a private pension bill, that we give one who served the full four years.

Mr. BRYAN. No. That is hardly a fair statement.

Mr. McCUMBER. I decline to yield, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from North Dakota declines to yield.

Mr. McCUMBER. We have to have this claimant before us. We have to, as nearly as we can, look him in the face. We have to understand his physical condition, and if his physical condition is worse than that of one who has served one year or two years, then every impulse of humanity, coupled with the sense of national gratitude, demands that we shall give this old, helpless, veteran, who served no longer than four or five months, a greater amount than we would give to a younger one, who is still in his health, who served possibly for six months. This committee is a committee that acts on the equity side, and so long as we recognize a sentiment of generosity toward the old soldier, so long as we feel that we should recognize him and his service, that sentiment should be expressed in a manner to look first after destitution; and we can not do that under a general law. If we did that, and granted every man a pension exactly in accordance with his just deserts, measured one man with the other, there would be as many different standards as there are individuals upon the pension roll.

So I think we have done nothing amiss in granting this old man, 80 years of age, $4 a month more for the balance of his life than he is receiving under the present law.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Florida [Mr. BRYAN]. Upon that the Senator from Florida demands the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. SMOOT. Let the amendment be again stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 5, strike out lines 20 to 23, inclusive, relative to the pension of Francis M. Cox.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DILLINGHAM (when his name was called). I announce my general pair with the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] and withhold my vote.

Mr. LEA (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. LIPPITT.] As I do not know how he would vote on this question, I withhold my vote.

Mr. JONES (when Mr. POINDEXTER's name was called). I desire to announce that if my colleague [Mr. POINDEXTER] were present, he would vote "nay."

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE]. If he were present and I were at liberty to vote upon this particular amendment, I would vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. GUGGENHEIM. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. PAYNTER], who is not here. So I withhold my vote.

Mr. OLIVER. My colleague [Mr. PENROSE] is necessarily absent. If he were present, he would vote "nay."

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I have a general pair with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE]. I transfer my pair to the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA] and vote "nay."

Mr. GARDNER. My colleague [Mr. JOHNSON of Maine] is necessarily absent from the Chamber. Were he present, he would vote "nay."

Mr. CLAPP. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS]. Not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my vote. If he were present, I would vote "nay."

Mr. CUMMINS. My colleague [Mr. KENYON] is absent. If he were here, he would vote "nay."

Mr. CRAWFORD. I desire to again state and have the statement stand for all future roll calls to-day that my colleague [Mr. GAMBLE] is necessarily absent and that he has a general pair with the junior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. DAVIS]. If my colleague were present, he would vote "nay" on this question.

The result was announced—yeas 4, nays 50, as follows:

YEAS—4.

Bryan	Martin, Va.	Smith, Ga.	Swanson

NAYS—50.

Borah	Culberson	McCumber	Shively

So Mr. BRYAN's amendment was rejected.

SERVICE PENSIONS.

Mr. McCUMBER. I ask that the unfinished business be laid before the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The hour of 4 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which is House bill 1.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 1) granting a service pension to certain defined veterans of the Civil War and the War with Mexico.

Mr. McCUMBER. The bill has not been read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the bill.

The SECRETARY. The Committee on Pensions proposes to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert——

Mr. WILLIAMS. I should like to ask the Senator from North Dakota a question before the reading. What bill is this? Is this the so-called McCumber bill or is it the Sherwood bill?

Mr. McCUMBER. It is the Sherwood bill amended by a substitute, which was prepared by the committee.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It is generally known in the press as the McCumber bill, is it not?

Mr. McCUMBER. It seems to be known under several names.

Mr. OVERMAN. It is the Sherwood bill that is up, with this as an amendment.

Mr. McCUMBER. A substitute for the Sherwood bill.

Mr. OVERMAN. The Sherwood bill is up, and this is a substitute offered for it.

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair would state for the information of the Senate that it is a House bill which is before the Senate with a substitute in the nature of an amendment proposed by the Committee on Pensions. Is it the desire of the Senate that the original bill shall be read or merely the substitute?

Mr. McCUMBER. I ask unanimous consent that the substitute, which is the amendment, be read.

Mr. CURTIS. I ask that the original bill be read, as well as the substitute.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The original bill will be read on the demand of the Senator from Kansas.

The Secretary read the bill (H. R. 1) granting a service pension to certain defined veterans of the Civil War and the War with Mexico, as follows:

That any person who served in the military or naval service of the United States during the late Civil War or the War with Mexico, and who has been honorably discharged therefrom, and all members of State organizations that are now pensionable under existing law, shall, upon making proof of such facts according to such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may provide, be placed on the pension roll and be entitled to receive a pension as follows: For a service of 90 days or more in the Civil War, or 60 days or more in the War with Mexico, and less than 6 months, $15 per month; for a service of 6 months or more and less than 9 months, $20 per month; for a service of 9 months or more and less than 1 year, $25 per month; for a service of 1 year or more $30 per month: Provided, That any such person who served in the War with Mexico shall be paid the maximum pension under this act, to wit, $30 per month.

SEC. 2. That any person who served in the military or naval service of the United States during the Civil War and received an honorable discharge, and who was wounded in battle or in line of duty and is now unfit for manual labor, through causes not due to his own vicious habits, or who from disease or other causes incurred in line of duty resulting in his disability is now unable to perform manual labor, shall be paid the maximum pension under this act, to wit, $30 per month, without regard to his length of service.

SEC. 3. That no person shall receive a pension under any other law at the same time or for the same period he is receiving a pension under the provisions of this act.

SEC. 4. That rank in the service shall not be considered in applications filed hereunder.

SEC. 5. That pensions under this act shall commence from the date of filing the application in the Bureau of Pensions after this act takes effect.

SEC. 6. That no pension attorney, claim agent, or other person shall be entitled to receive any compensation for services rendered in presenting any claim to the Bureau of Pensions or securing any pension under this act.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The substitute in the nature of an amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. The committee amendment proposes to strike out the words just read and to insert:

That the act entitled "An act granting pensions to certain enlisted men, soldiers and officers, who served in the Civil War and the War with Mexico," approved February 6, 1907, be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SECTION 1. That any person who served 90 days or more in the military or naval service of the United States during the late Civil War, who has been honorably discharged therefrom, and who has reached the age of 62 years or over, shall, upon making proof of such facts, according to such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may provide, be placed upon the pension roll and be entitled to receive a pension as follows: In case such person has reached the age of 62 years and served 90 days, $13 per month; 6 months, $13.50 per month; 1 year, $14 per month; 1½ years, $14.50 per month; 2 years, $15 per month; 2½ years, $15.50 per month; 3 years or over, $16 per month. In case such person has reached the age of 66 years and served 90 days, $15 per month; 6 months, $15.50 per month; 1 year, $16 per month; 1½ years, $16.50 per month; 2 years, $17 per month; 2½ years, $17.50 per month; 3 years or over, $18 per month. In case such person has reached the age of 70 years and served 90 days, $18 per month; 6 months, $19 per month; 1 year, $20 per month; 1½ years, $21 per month; 2 years, $22 per month; 2½ years, $23 per month; 3 years or over, $24 per month. In case such person has reached the age of 75 years and served 90 days, $21 per month; 6 months, $22.50 per month; 1 year, $24 per month, 1½ years, $25.50; 2 years, $27 per month; 2½ years, $28.50 per month; 3 years or over, $30 per month.

"That any person who has served 60 days or more in the military or naval service of the United States in the War with Mexico and has been honorably discharged therefrom shall, upon making like proof of such service, be entitled to receive a pension of $30 per month.

"All of the aforesaid pensions shall commence from the date of filing of the applications in the Bureau of Pensions after the passage and approval of this act: Provided, That pensioners who are 62 years of age or over, and who are now receiving pensions under existing laws, or whose claims are pending in the Bureau of Pensions, may, by application to the Commissioner of Pensions, in such form as he may prescribe, receive the benefits of this act; and nothing herein contained shall prevent any pensioner or person entitled to a pension from prosecuting his claim and receiving a pension under any other general or special act: Provided, That no person shall receive a pension under any other law at the same time or for the same period that he is receiving a pension under the provisions of this act: Provided further, That no person who is now receiving or shall hereafter receive a greater pension under any other general or special law than he would be entitled to receive under the provisions herein shall be pensionable under this act.

"SEC. 3. That no agent, attorney, or other person engaged in preparing, presenting, or prosecuting any claim under the provisions of this act shall, directly or indirectly, contract for, demand, receive, or retain for such services in preparing, presenting, or prosecuting such claim a sum greater than $5, which sum shall be payable only after the allowance of the claim and upon the order of the Commissioner of Pensions out of the amount allowed and by the pension agent making payment of such pension; and no agent, attorney, or other person shall demand or receive, directly or indirectly, any compensation in advance of such allowance, or other compensation than herein prescribed; and any person who shall violate any of the provisions of this section, or who shall wrongfully withhold from a pensioner or claimant the whole or any part of a pension or claim allowed or due such pensioner or claimant under this act, or shall wrongfully withhold any affidavits or other proofs in support of a claim, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall, for each and every offense, be fined not exceeding $500 or be imprisoned at hard labor not exceeding two years, or both, in the discretion of the court: Provided, That no greater fee than $2 shall be allowed or paid in any claim for increase of pension under this act.

"SEC. 4. That the Commissioner of Pensions shall make, at the time of submitting his next annual report, a separate report for each county of each State, Territory, or District, containing a statement or table which shall contain the names, lengths of service, monthly rates of payment, and residences of all pensioners of the United States; and shall thereafter, as said annual reports are submitted, make separate reports similar in all respects, except that such subsequent reports shall contain only those added to the pension roll during the fiscal year for which each annual report is made."

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, I do not ask that the entire report be read, but I do think it ought to appear in the RECORD. Consequently I ask that the report of the committee, as well as the views of the minority, may be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD following the reading.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. McCUMBER. Just a moment, Mr. President. The Senator wants to have the views of the minority printed? Is that his request?

Mr. CULBERSON. I want to have the entire report printed, including, first, the report of the majority. In other words, I want Report No. 355 printed in the RECORD, which includes the majority and minority reports.

Mr. McCUMBER. I have no objection to that, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

[Senate Report No. 355, Sixty-second Congress, second session.]

SERVICE PENSIONS FOR CERTAIN DEFINED SOLDIERS OF THE CIVIL WAR.

Mr. McCUMBER, from the Committee on Pensions, submitted the following report, to accompany H. R. 1:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1) entitled "An act granting a service pension to certain defined veterans of the Civil War and the War with Mexico," beg leave to report the same back with an amendment, as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"SECTION 1. That any person who served 90 days or more in the military or naval service of the United States during the Civil War, who has been honorably discharged therefrom, and who has reached the age of 62 years or over, shall, upon making proof of such facts, according to such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may provide, be placed upon the pension roll and be entitled to receive a pension as follows: In case such person has reached the age of 62 years and served 90 days, $13 per month; 6 months, $13.50 per month; 1 year, $14 per month; 1½ years, $14.50 per month; 2 years, $15 per month; 2½ years, $15.50 per month; 3 years or over, $16 per month. In case such person has reached the age of 66 years and served 90 days, $15 per month; 6 months, $15.50 per month; 1 year, $16 per month; 1½ years, $16.50 per month; 2 years, $17 per month; 2½ years, $17.50 per month; 3 years or over, $18 per month. In case such person has reached the age of 70 years and served 90 days, $18 per month; 6 months, $19 per month; 1 year, $20 per month; 1½ years, $21 per month; 2 years, $22 per month; 2½ years, $23 per month; 3 years or over, $24 per month. In case such person has reached the age of 75 years and served 90 days, $21 per month; 6 months, $22.50 per month; 1 year, $24 per month; 1½ years, $25.50 per month; 2 years, $27 per month; 2½ years, $28.50 per month; 3 years or over, $30 per month.

"That any person who has served 60 days or more in the military or naval service of the United States in the War with Mexico and has been honorably discharged therefrom shall, upon making like proof of such service, be entitled to receive a pension of $30 per month.

"All of the aforesaid pensions shall commence from the date of filing of the applications in the Bureau of Pensions after the passage and approval of this act: Provided, That pensioners who are 62 years of age or over and who are now receiving pensions under existing laws or whose claims are pending in the Bureau of Pensions may, by application to the Commissioner of Pensions, in such form as he may prescribe, receive the benefits of this act; and nothing herein contained shall prevent any pensioner or person entitled to a pension from prosecuting his claim and receiving a pension under any other general or special act: Provided, That no person shall receive a pension under any other law at the same time or for the same period that he is receiving a pension under the provisions of this act: Provided further, That no person who is now receiving or shall hereafter receive a greater pension under any other general or special law than he would be entitled to receive under the provisions herein shall be pensionable under this act.

"SEC. 2. That rank in the service shall not be considered in applications filed hereunder.

"SEC. 3. That no agent, attorney, or other person engaged in preparing, presenting, or prosecuting any claim under the provisions of this act shall, directly or indirectly, contract for, demand, receive, or retain for such services in preparing, presenting, or prosecuting such claim a sum greater than $5, which sum shall be payable only after the allowance of the claim and upon the order of the Commissioner of Pensions, out of the amount allowed, and by the pension agent making payment of such pension, and no agent, attorney, or other person shall demand or receive, directly or indirectly, any compensation in advance of such allowance, or other compensation than herein prescribed; and any person who shall violate any of the provisions of this section, or who shall wrongfully withhold from a pensioner or claimant the whole or any part of a pension or claim allowed or due such pensioner or claimant under this act, or shall wrongfully withhold any affidavits or other proofs in support of a claim, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall, for each and every offense, be fined not exceeding $500 or be imprisoned at hard labor not exceeding two years, or both, in the discretion of the court: Provided, That no greater fee than $2 shall be allowed or paid in any claim for increase of pension under this act.

"SEC. 4. That the Commissioner of Pensions shall make at the time of submitting his next annual report a separate report for each county of each State, Territory, or District, containing a statement or table which shall contain the names, lengths of service, monthly rates of payment, and residences of all pensioners of the United States; and shall thereafter, as said annual reports are submitted, make separate reports similar in all respects, except that such subsequent reports shall contain only those added to the pension roll during the fiscal year for which each annual report is made."

In the amendment proposed by your committee is involved the prime purpose of our pension system. A word upon that system and its purpose may therefore be proper.

Prior to 1890 all pension legislation relative to the survivors of the Civil War recognized only specific disabilities incurred in line of duty.

By the act of June 27, 1890, the requirement that a disability should be of service origin was abandoned, and there was substituted in its stead incapacity to perform manual labor, whether such incapacity was due to service or otherwise. This act provided a pension for such disability ranging from $6 to $12 per month. It required but a service of 90 days and was the first purely service pension legislation applied to the Civil War veterans.

The establishing of grades of disability to perform manual labor under this law was difficult and unsatisfactory, and as the age of the claimant advanced the difficulty increased. It finally became necessary to measure the disability by the age test, and Executive Order No. 78 was issued in March of 1904. This order provided that in the adjudication of pension claims under the act of June 27, 1890, age should be taken into consideration in determining disability; that at the age of 62 the soldier should be considered to be one-half disabled for the performance of manual labor, at the age of 65 two-thirds disabled, at the age of 68 five-sixths disabled, and at the age of 70 totally disabled, and should receive for said disabilities $6, $8, $10, and $12 per month, respectively. This order was afterwards enacted into our pension legislation and was the forerunner of the age standard in subsequent legislation.

The act of June 27, 1890, also provided a pension of $8 per month for all widows whose marriage had taken place prior to that date and (as amended by act of May 9, 1900) whose net income was not above $250 per annum.

There was no material change in our general pension laws from June 27, 1890, until February 6, 1907, a period of nearly 17 years.

By the act of February 6, 1907, a very great advance step in broadening and liberalizing our pension laws was taken. Prior to that time the youngest and the oldest veteran were treated alike, except as their pensions were graded by this order, No. 78.

By the act of February 6, 1907, we recognized advancing years as bringing with them increasing disabilities. Up to and including this period pensions were granted upon the assumption that the claimant was disabled and that the Government, in its gratitude for his great services in its time of need, should extend the hand of assistance.

The act of Feburary 6, 1907, was solely an age pension, and granted pensions to all who had served 90 days, as follows: At the age of 62 years, $12 per month; 70 years, $15 per month; and 75 years, $20 per month.

The act of April 19, 1908, abolished the income provision, which had always been of questionable propriety, and the pension of every widow included in its provisions was increased to $12 per month.

By the acts of February 6, 1907, and April 19, 1908, the services of the physical and the financial examiner were discontinued. Industry and economy were no longer penalized, and the soldier of the most extended hospital record had no advantage over him of the most extensive field record.

No pension act has ever given such general satisfaction as the act of February 6, 1907, and yet this act has of late been subject to some criticism. In all of our past pension laws the 90-day soldier stands exactly on the same footing as the 4-year soldier. House bill 1 seeks to remedy this by the enactment of a purely service-pension law.

From careful inquiry your committee believes that whatever degree of popularity this bill has obtained is due more to the amount carried by it than to the basis upon which the amount carried is distributed.

No standard can be adopted that will operate with exact justice to each and every soldier. Many soldiers of short service were hurried immediately into the desperate warfare which marked the last year of the campaign.

If a pension should be granted based upon the severity of the hardships or sufferings which the soldier endured in each case, there would be as many different amounts allowed as there are names on the pension roll.

We may ask properly here, What is the fundamental idea back of pension legislation? We believe we express the consensus of the public idea in our answer, that it is national gratitude. This gratitude seeks, in our pension laws, the most proper mode of expression. Its first and its most natural impulse is toward the relief of suffering and destitution. It recognizes that destitution flows from disability.

If our pension legislation had no deeper significance or sentiment than a sort of moral obligation to pay for services a fixed rate per month, then a pension based solely upon length of service might properly be enacted. But if such legislation springs from the sentiment we have indicated, then it is certain that length of service should not be the sole standard in fixing the rate in any particular case.

We do not claim that a pension, varied in amount according to the length of service, does not harmonize with the spirit that is back of all pension legislation. We simply claim that making it the sole standard smacks too much of the idea of hire. Other things being equal, it may very properly be said that the longer the service given in defense of the country the greater should be the gratitude of that country. The committee agree that we will more nearly approximate exact justice, and more nearly measure out to each soldier that sum which his services entitle him to receive from a given appropriation, by adopting both standards, or a double standard, which shall recognize both advancing age and length of service.

A resolution adopted by the Grand Army of the Republic at its last encampment indicates clearly the tenacity with which that organization holds to the principle of a pension law which recognizes the disability of age.

The chairman of the Senate Committee on Pensions prepared a large number of separate propositions, with varying combinations of the age and service standards, and submitted each proposition to the Interior Department to obtain the added cost of pension legislation, and also requested of the department an estimate of the added cost of House bill 1.

The eleventh proposition, containing the double standard, which was introduced in the form of a bill in Senate bill 4320, in tabulated form, is as follows:

Eleventh proposition.

Age.	90 days.	1 year.	2 years.	3 years.	4 years.

A hearing was had on all of the general pension bills on January 22, 1912, at which hearing the members of the committee on pensions of the Grand Army of the Republic testified. Prior to the giving of their testimony they had met and by resolution declared themselves in favor of the thirteenth proposition, and the testimony of each and all of these members supported the idea of the double standard.

From the hearings and from a very considerable correspondence with veterans of the Civil War it developed that while nearly all preferred the double standard, a very large number preferred to have divisions of six months rather than one year, as contemplated in these propositions. The tables were therefore rearranged in accordance with this idea and the eleventh proposition, as rearranged, was submitted as proposition No. 16, and is as follows:

Sixteenth proposition (eleventh modified).

Age.	90 days.	6 months.	1 year.	1½ years.	2 years.	2½ years.	3 years and over.

The last official estimate of national income and expense for the year ending June 30, 1913, gives us a balance of income over expense, exclusive of Panama Canal disbursements, of about $30,000,000. Assuming that we will be able to maintain the relation of income to expense during the following year, with the practice of a little more rigid economy we could probably expend $33,000,000 in addition to the present cost of pensions for the year ending June 30, 1914, without the necessity of issuing bonds to cover the increased expenses.

Your committee adopted the sixteenth proposition rather than the eighteenth because of our belief that we could increase our appropriation $33,000,000 without a bond issue.

The cause of the second year's appropriation being so much greater than either the first or the third is that the bureau under ordinary conditions will handle about 200,000 applications a year; and it is safe to say that 400,000 would be filed within the first year, and therefore the second year would carry the arrears of about 200,000. Of course this depends upon what time in the year the bill becomes a law. We believe that if we can pass this amended bill before the summer months the bureau will be able to handle more than 200,000 cases the first year. We will thereby increase the estimated additional cost for the first year several million dollars and decrease the second year's estimate an equivalent amount, and thus keep clearly within our income.

Your committee, in reporting a bill which shall carry an additional average annual appropriation for pensions during the next five years of $20,410,000 per year in the place of House bill 1, which would require an additional average expenditure of $56,600,000 per annum, and which ignores what we regard as a very proper element in granting pensions, the disabilities of age, are animated by a desire to at all times maintain a strong sentiment on the part of the public toward this increase and further future increases of pensions, and which sentiment might, to some extent, at least, be jeopardized by advancing pension appropriations in a single bill so rapidly as to necessitate a bond issue to meet its requirements. We believe that the interests of the soldiers will be better subserved and that we shall in the end accomplish more for the comfort of the veterans of the Civil War if we shall advance step by step, keeping within the Government's income under economic administration.

The provisions relating to the Mexican War veterans are the same as those contained in the House bill.

The majority of your committee supported another amendment which recognizes the right of pension attorneys to represent their clients in cases where it was thought proper that a soldier claimant should be entitled to legal service, as indicated in section 3. The amendment is carefully guarded, so that in no case can anything but a nominal charge be made. We believe that this amendment will in many instances be beneficial and that in no case can it operate to do an injustice to any veteran.

The majority of the committee deemed it advisable to further amend our general legislation with reference to publication of names of pensioners on the rolls, as indicated in the foregoing amendment, section 4.

As amended the committee report the bill favorably and recommend that it pass.

[Senate Report No. 355, part 2, Sixty-second Congress, second session.]

SERVICE PENSION.

Mr. CURTIS (for himself, Mr. BROWN, Mr. SHIVELY, Mr. POINDEXTER, and Mr. JOHNSON), from the Committee on Pensions, submitted the following views of a minority, to accompany H. R. 1:

We, the undersigned, being a minority of the Senate Committee on Pensions, present this report after a careful consideration of the various pension bills or propositions which were presented to the committee.

We hope each Senator will duly consider the two propositions pending before the Senate, to wit: House bill 1, better known as the Sherwood bill, and the Senate proposition, known as the Smoot substitute, believing if they do they will vote down the substitute and pass the Sherwood bill.

There are many reasons why we favor the Sherwood bill. In the first place it does partial justice to a large number of Union soldiers who served one year and over, by giving them a dollar-a-day pension, and it will give an increase to a very large number of men who served less than one year, while the substitute will give a dollar a day to only those soldiers who have arrived at the age of 75 years and who had a service of three years and over.

Under the Sherwood bill most of the pension examining boards could be done away with and fewer special examiners would be required.

Under the Sherwood bill, after the new certificates are issued no expense will be incurred for the issuance of new certificates to those drawing pensions under it, but under the substitute new certificates must be issued as the pensioners below 75 years of age advance in years.

The opposition to the Sherwood bill is based upon the ground that it will carry a large appropriation, but we do not believe it just to the Union soldiers to measure their service in dollars and cents. We believe they are entitled to liberal pensions, regardless of the size of the appropriation.

But, after carefully considering the subject, we believe the estimates of the Pension Bureau as to the cost of the Sherwood bill are too high, because they are based on a report over 20 years old, while the figures given by Mr. Sherwood are based upon data taken from the records of the War Department.

We believe that if the Sherwood bill is enacted into law many of those whose pensions will be increased to $30 per month and who are now inmates of soldiers' homes will return to their own homes and firesides.

We believe its enactment into law will greatly decrease the requests for the introduction of private pension bills. While the substitute gives increases to each of the pensioners, yet we do not believe such increases are as large and substantial as they should be under all the circumstances.

We ask you, in considering this question, to remember the debt this Nation owes to the Union soldier; to remember that of that grand army of brave men who offered their lives to preserve the Union it is estimated that at least 36,000 will answer the last roll call this year, and to remember, further, that if anything is going to be done for them, now is the time to do it.

We recommend the defeat of the substitute reported by a majority of the committee, and ask for the passage of House bill 1, known as the Sherwood bill.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

MILES POINDEXTER.

[Senate Report No. 355, part 3, Sixty-second Congress, second session.]

SERVICE PENSION.

Mr. BRYAN, from the Committee on Pensions, submitted the following views to accompany H. R. 1.

This bill enjoys the unusual distinction of not having the support of a majority of the committee which reports it.

Of the 14 Members comprising the committee 5 have signed a minority report, because they prefer the House bill, and the Senator from Oklahoma, Mr. GORE, and myself are recorded as being opposed to both the bill reported by the committee and the House bill.

The House bill recognizes service only. The bill reported by the committee combines age with length of service.

The majority report complains that a service pension "smacks too much of the idea of hire." In the views of the minority, favoring the Sherwood bill, the idea of measuring military service by money is condemned. Yet that is exactly the thing both bills, when analyzed, undertake to do.

The central idea running through the hearings and through both reports is that we are engaged in paying a debt.

If we owe the soldiers of the Civil War a debt that can be paid in money, then the theory of the Sherwood bill is correct.

If mere enlistment for 90 days, regardless of actual service, to be more highly rewarded by "national gratitude" if the soldier enlisted at the age of 25 instead of at 20, ought to be the test, then the bill reported may be conceded to be correct in principle.

Both of these ideas have already found expression in our pension legislation—singly and in combination. It can not truthfully be said, measured by either or both of these standards, that this Government has failed in its obligation.

Mr. Samuel S. Burdett, past commander in chief of the Grand Army of the Republic, at the hearing before your Committee on Pensions made this statement: "If nothing else in our favor were ever done in our day, it never could be said, to-day or in any to-morrow, that the people of the United States were ungrateful to those who served them."

So, therefore, it is not the purpose of either the Sherwood bill or the bill reported to establish any new principle. It is not a question of principle or of "national gratitude." It is purely a question of more money. A member of the legislative committee of the Grand Army of the Republic accurately expressed the "principle" involved in this bill in the following apt language:

"Of course I think you will all concede, gentlemen, that No. 13 is a little better holdout than No. 11. Of course I should favor that myself. It was unanimous with the committee of which I have the honor to be a member."

If $150,000,000 per annum is not a sufficient expression of appreciation, would an additional annual appropriation of $25,000,000 make it so? If not, how much would?

Confessedly the only restraining influence upon the committee is the revenues of the Government, and so this bill is proposed upon the assumption that all these large professions about the reduction of our present tariff laws are not meant to be kept.

This bill undertakes to reconcile two irreconcilable elements, viz, age and length of service. Its incongruities are well illustrated by the statement of former Congressman Gardner, of Michigan, as follows:

"There were over 600,000, as I recall—I could refer to it specifically if necessary—that served three months or less—90-day militia. * * * I say to you what I know to be a fact. While many of these men fought, and fought well, the great body of them simply went to man the forts, to release the three-year men that went to the front and did the shooting. That is a fact, gentlemen. Lots of these men never got the polish off their shoes. It is no disparagement to them. They did all they were called upon to do. They wore paper collars and ate soft bread. It was no fault of theirs. Ohio had how many regiments of that kind, Col. McElroy, that never lost a man?

"Mr. MCELROY. Oh, quite a number of them never saw any fighting and never heard a cannon.

"Mr. GARDNER. Many of them never fired a gun. I say to you, gentlemen—and I am willing to defend this proposition before any Grand Army gathering in the country—that the man who went to war and served only 90 days and received no permanent disability from wounds or anything resulting from his service is not entitled to rank with the man who served two, three, or four years at the front."

It is refreshing that if the bill must pass as reported, the names of the pensioners will be made public. It is to be hoped that an aroused public sentiment may hereafter save to the meritorious and the needy pensioners the humiliation of making common cause with the undeserving whose military service was at best nominal.

If we would take thought of the people who have to pay pensions as well as of those who receive them, if we would limit payment to those who suffered injury because of service in the war and who are therefore entitled to governmental aid, we would remedy the injustices now perpetrated in the name of patriotism.

N. P. BRYAN

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, if the Senator from North Dakota will give me his attention for a moment. I have a very clear recollection that in several general laws we passed increasing the pensions of soldiers there was a provision to the effect that no pension attorney, claim agent, or other person should be entitled to receive any compensation for services rendered, it being held that it was a matter that the Pension Bureau could itself attend to, and that there was no need of attorneys. I observe that in the so-called Sherwood pension bill there is a section covering that point, which reads:

> That no pension attorney, claim agent, or other person shall be entitled to receive any compensation for services rendered in presenting any claim to the Bureau of Pensions, or securing any pension, under this act.

While in the substitute there is a provision that pension attorneys shall be recognized and be paid a certain sum, not a very large sum in each case, but a very large sum in the aggregate.

I take it for granted that there is some special reason why the provision in the substitute should be different from that in the original bill, and I ask simply for information as to the reason that controls the matter. Why was that change made?

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I think I can better express that in the single paragraph which is included in my report, which reads:

> The majority of your committee supported another amendment which recognizes the right of pension attorneys to represent their clients in cases where it was thought proper that a soldier claimant should be entitled to legal service, as indicated in section 3. The amendment is carefully guarded so that in no case can anything but a nominal charge be made. We believe that this amendment will in many instances be beneficial, and that in no case can it operate to do an injustice to any veteran.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, the difficulty about that is that immediately upon the passage of this bill every ex-soldier who is entitled to recognition under this law will receive a letter from 1 or 20 pension attorneys calling attention to the fact that their services are indispensable, and the soldiers will make contracts with those men. They will be anxious to get the increased allowance and thousands and tens of thousands and hundreds of thousands of dollars will be paid by these poor soldiers to the pension attorneys who are watching for every possible opportunity to get a fee in these cases.

I will ask the Senator if, in his judgment, the Pension Bureau can not adjust these claims. It is a mere question of increasing a pension in almost every instance. A man gets $12 now, and he will get $13 or $14 under this bill. Is it necessary for a pension attorney to take up that case and prosecute the claim?

Mr. McCUMBER. In ninety-nine cases out of a hundred I would say no, it would not be necessary; but there are many cases where a question may come up as to the identity of the soldier, as to his service, and other matters where he might need legal assistance, and the fee is so small, a couple of dollars, that the majority of the committee felt that there could be no outrage, at least, perpetrated upon the soldier, and that in many instances he would get his work done more quickly. He would, in many instances, be compelled to take an appeal possibly from the Commissioner of Pensions to the Secretary of the Interior, and in cases of that kind he might need the service of an attorney.

Mr. GALLINGER. The appeal is a perfunctory matter, is it not?

Mr. McCUMBER. It may be, but there are many thousands of soldiers who would not know how to go to work to take an appeal even in a perfunctory way.

Mr. GALLINGER. Then the Senator speaks of a fee of $2. What about a $5 fee?

Mr. McCUMBER. I think it is only $2, if I remember correctly, when it is a small increase of pension, and there are not many of the $5 cases.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator speaks about cases arising where it is necessary to identify these people and all that. Is it not a fact that they are all on the pension roll now? Their status has been established. I remember this was fought out here several years ago on another bill which I happened to have charge of. It seems to me it is an automatic matter, and if the Commissioner of Pensions finds that a soldier is receiving $15 a month and under this bill he is to receive $16, the increase is made on the books of the Pension Bureau. I may be wrong about it, but that is the way it strikes me.

Mr. McCUMBER. We have some testimony on the subject that was given before the committee and was taken down. When we reach that part of the amendment I will present the testimony upon that proposition.

Mr. GALLINGER. The entire amendment is now before us.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield.

Mr. POMERENE. I was going to address myself to the Senator from New Hampshire, to ask him whether he knows what is the view of the Pension Department on this subject of allowing attorneys' fees.

Mr. GALLINGER. I simply remember, Mr. President, that on a former occasion I did consult the Commissioner of Pensions—it was several years ago—and he informed me that there was no need whatever of a pension attorney in a bill of that kind, that the bureau would take care of it. It may be different in this bill; I do not know. But I can not see that there is any difference or any need of such employment in these cases.

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President, I should like to ask a question of the Senator from North Dakota, the chairman of the committee. Is not the third section of the act of February 6, 1907, the service-pension act, still in force? That section provides:

> That no pension attorney, claim agent, or other person shall be entitled to receive any compensation for services rendered in presenting any claim to the Bureau of Pensions or securing any pensions under this act.

Have any abuses developed under it which make it desirable to change the judgment which Congress reached at the time that act was passed?

Mr. McCUMBER. There are a great many cases in which soldiers were compelled to have investigations, and have an appeal, and have explanations made to them. The department might not be quite as careful of their interest in getting a decision quickly upon any controverted question, and it might not be as desirous of giving the soldier all of the detailed information that he might want in a given case that his own attorney might suggest to him.

I have stated that in ninety-nine cases probably out of a hundred there would never be any occasion for an attorney at all, but undoubtedly there will be occasion for an attorney once in awhile, and it was simply provided that if the claimant himself desires an attorney to appear before the department to present his case for the nominal fee of $2 he shall have that right and the commissioner shall recognize him.

I have not gone into any lengthy discussion of it because, like all the other matters, it was a question in which the committee itself had diverse views.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

Mr. ROOT. I merely wish to ask another question.

Mr. McCUMBER. I might explain the other matter about which the Senator asked. He asked if the other section is not still the law. I will say no; we amend the entire law of 1907 so that it shall read as follows.

Mr. ROOT. By the new bill?

Mr. McCUMBER. By the new bill.

Mr. ROOT. But up to this time it has been the law.

Mr. McCUMBER. Oh, yes.

Mr. ROOT. Then, I will complete my inquiry by asking whether, in the comparatively small number of exceptional cases in which an applicant for a pension needs advice and assistance, it would not be better for us to have an officer connected with the Pension Bureau whose duty it shall be to give the necessary advice to these men. I do not believe in turning loose a horde of hungry lawyers and pension agents upon these old pensioners. I am not much in favor of increasing our pension law, but I think what we are going to do we ought to do in such a way as to make the money that is paid out of the Treasury go to the utmost for the benefit of the men we intend to have it go to. It seems to me that we should seek to do this for them without requiring them to employ lawyers at all.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I desire at this time to say that I will move to strike out section 3 of the bill at the proper time, and insert instead thereof section 6 of the bill as it came from the House of Representatives, which denies to pension attorneys any compensation for services they may render.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I was heartily in favor of the provision of the House bill, as contained in the general act of 1907, but Gen. Michener, deeply interested in the old soldiers' behalf, appeared before the committee.

Mr. BRISTOW. I wish to ask if Gen. Michener is not a pension attorney who would very largely profit by this very provision.

Mr. SMOOT. I know he is an attorney. I do not know how much he would profit by the provision.

Mr. BRISTOW. He is a pension attorney who has made more money out of the old soldiers than probably any other pension attorney.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not know as to that.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. SMOOT. I want to say, however, that at the time he appeared before the committee he made the statement that he is not now practicing law as a pension attorney.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. SMOOT. In just a moment I will be through, and then I will yield the floor.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Proceed.

Mr. SMOOT. I will yield if the Senator wishes to ask a question.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. No; I have no question to ask. I thought the Senator had finished.

Mr. SMOOT. It was on the appeal that was made by Gen. Michener that I decided not to oppose the provision. He stated to the committee why this provision was necessary for the protection of the soldier. I believe it was approved by almost a unanimous vote of the committee——

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President——

Mr. SMOOT. That it was necessary to have legal advice in certain cases such as stated by the chairman.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield.

Mr. CURTIS. I hope the Senator from Utah will not say that the vote on that question was unanimous or nearly unanimous. We have no right, as I understand it, to speak about what the vote was in the committee, but such a statement makes it necessary for each one of us to say that we did not or did vote for it. I want to say for one that I voted against the proposition. I think it is wrong to provide for attorneys' fees in these cases.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I did not say that it was unanimous. I said nearly so. That is the word I used.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. WORKS. I want to say that some time ago I proposed an amendment to the bill by way of a substitute. I am not going to press it on the Senate now, but one section in it applies to this very question. I should like to call the attention particularly of the Senator from North Dakota to it. It was intended to meet this situation. It provides:

SEC. 8. That all pensioners now receiving pensions for service in the Civil War under an act entitled "An act granting pensions to certain enlisted men, soldiers and officers, who served in the Civil War and War with Mexico," approved February 6, 1907, shall be entitled to pensions under this act without further application or examination, and the Commissioner of Pensions is directed to list such pensioners for pensions under this act upon its taking effect, and thereafter no pensions to persons serving in the Civil War shall be granted or paid under said act approved February 6, 1907; and all pensioners now receiving pensions for such service, under special or private acts not in excess of the amount to which they would be entitled under this act, shall also be listed by the Commissioner of Pensions and paid under this act, and not otherwise.

One of the objects and purposes was to relieve the old soldier of the necessity of employing an attorney in making simply this transfer from one list to another.

Mr. McCUMBER. If the Senator from Utah will allow me to just briefly answer the Senator from California, I will say that provision in the bill would compel a soldier who is upon the present pension roll to take a higher pension whether he wanted it or not.

Mr. WORKS. That might be avoided. I will not insist upon that.

Mr. McCUMBER. And for that reason we eliminated that provision in 1907, leaving it discretionary with the soldier as to whether he would seek this additional pension if he is entitled to receive it. Another reason was that it sometimes requires months before the department can be apprised of the death of a soldier and, therefore, they would be misled in making this change and in making an additional change while the soldier might be dead. Complications then might arise in the settlement with the widow or the person entitled to the additional sum, as to what amount should be received. Inasmuch as every soldier, I think, will know that he may apply and receive an additional sum under the present bill, undoubtedly it is safe to leave the matter with him.

I thank the Senator from Utah for yielding to me.

Mr. WORKS. I only suggest at the present time that something should be done, in my judgment, to prevent raids upon these old soldiers by the pension sharks.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I am in full sympathy with the last statement made by the Senator from California [Mr. WORKS]. The only reason that the provision was reported by the committee was to take care of the old soldier and protect his interests; and so far as I am personally concerned, I have no desire for it to remain in the bill if it is not going to accomplish that purpose.

As the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS] has called attention to the fact of how he voted in committee, I might as well say that I voted against the provision in committee, but after talking with Gen. Michener I felt as though it might be necessary, so far as a few of the old soldiers are concerned, that the provision should be made.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MARTINE] previously addressed the Chair.

Mr. GALLINGER. Will the Senator from New Jersey yield to me for one moment?

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I yield to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. GALLINGER. I now move to strike out section 3 of the substitute and to insert instead thereof section 6 of the bill as it came from the House of Representatives.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out section 3 of the proposed substitute and in lieu thereof to insert the following as section 3:

SEC. 6. That no pension attorney, claim agent, or other person shall be entitled to receive any compensation for services rendered in presenting any claim to the Bureau of Pensions, or securing any pension, under this act.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, I desire to make a few remarks on the pending bill, but I am willing that this amendment shall first be voted upon.

Mr. WILLIAMS. One word, Mr. President. I want to offer as an amendment to the amendment just offered by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] the following language:

Nor shall anyone be entitled to a pension under this act who is possessed of an annual income of $1,200 or more.

While I am on my feet, Mr. President, I want to ask the Senator in charge of the bill a question. It seems to me—I may be inaccurate—that this bill discriminates in favor of the 90-day men.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, would the Senator from Mississippi permit the suggestion that his amendment is on an entirely different subject, and would he not let the vote first be taken upon the motion I have made?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Very well. Then I give notice that I shall offer the amendment which I have stated after the amendment which the Senator from New Hampshire refers to is voted upon.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is better, I feel sure.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I want to ask the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER] a question, if I may be permitted to do so. It seems to me—I may be wrong about it—that this bill, as compared with the bill for which it is a substitute, discriminates in favor of the 90-day men and against the long-service men, and it seems to do it simply upon the ground of age. Now, I notice in case such a person has reached the age of 62 years and has served 90 days he receives $13 per month, while if the person has reached that age and has served 3 years or over he receives only $16 per month. But the discrimination is worse when you come to men who are 70 years of age. If they served only 90 days, they receive $18 per month under the bill, whereas the men who served 3 years or over, if they happen to be only 62 years of age, receive $16 per month.

Now, I submit to the Senator in charge of the bill that the degree of pensionableness is not solely the question of age. A man of 70 may be in good health and perfectly self-keeping, while a man of 60 may not be; and the 90-day men under this bill, if they are 70 years of age, will receive $2 more than a veteran who served during the whole war—3 years or over. Does the Senator think that is a just discrimination?

Mr. McCUMBER. If the Senator wants an answer right away I will say that he will find that there are very few 62-year-old men who served only for 90 days—so very few that probably all of them within a year will be entirely eliminated from consideration.

Mr. WILLIAMS. But there are still fewer men, are there not, 62 years of age who served three years or over?

Mr. McCUMBER. Oh, no; there are a great many more 62-year-old men who served for a greater period than that short length of time. By the report we had before us it appeared that there were only 9,573 62-year-old men who served 90 days. When you get up to 6 months' service you find 23,000 of them; at 1 year's service you get 15,000 additional; at 1½ years' service you get 12,764 additional; at 2½ years you get 17,892 additional; and at 3 years and over you get 27,921.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes; I see all that; but the question I want to ask the Senator is: Does he think it just that a man who served only 90 days—and, for a good part, the men who served 90 days virtually did not serve at all—should receive $18 per month, whereas a man who served 3 years or over should receive only $16 per month, simply because he is 8 years younger? There is no other reason.

Mr. McCUMBER. Well, Mr. President, if you use the double standard you have to make your divisions somewhere; and you have got to make them if under a double standard, where you will recognize a certain increase on each subdivision, and you have got to divide those standards in such a way as to result in as nearly equity and justice between the parties as possible. After very thorough study and after hearing the testimony of the pension committee of the Grand Army of the Republic, the majority of the Senate Committee on Pensions adopted this present standard. If the Senator claims that service should be the dominant feature, then he must admit that this bill is far superior to the present law, because under the present law there is no distinction made between the 62-year-old man who served 90 days and the 70 or 75 year old man who served for the full 3 years' term. The 62-year-old man receives exactly as much as the 75-year-old man.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I was not comparing it, if the Senator from North Dakota will pardon me a moment, with the existing law, but with the provision for which it is a substitute.

Mr. McCUMBER. I merely want to say one word in reference to the amendment offered by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER].

Mr. LODGE. Before the Senator does that will he allow me to ask him a question in regard to the figures which he has just quoted?

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes.

Mr. LODGE. It appears that the men now 62 years of age who served three years and over in the Army number 27,921; that is, that 27,921 men entered the Union Army at the age of 12 years.

Mr. GALLINGER. Eleven years.

Mr. LODGE. At 12 years of age. Why, Mr. President, that seems incredible.

Mr. McCUMBER. The Senator from Massachusetts does not understand it. That is between 62 and 66 years of age.

Mr. LODGE. Oh!

Mr. McCUMBER. In the next subdivision they range from 62 up to 66 years.

Mr. LODGE. The question the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] asked was about the men 62 years of age, and the reply was that 27,921 had entered the Army and served three years; that is, had entered the Army when they were 11 or 12 years old. That seemed to me one of the most amazing statements that I had ever heard.

Mr. McCUMBER. I suppose that the Senator who asks the question of course recognizes the division between the 62-year-old men and the next division of 66 and the other division of 70.

Mr. LODGE. I do.

Mr. McCUMBER. I mean the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS]. Therefore, in answering him I answered him assuming that he had all of that class in mind—from 62 to 66 years of age.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If the figures of the Senator from Massachusetts are correct, and if these people who are 62 would have had to enter the Army at 12 years of age, then the people who are 66 would have had to enter it under 16, would they not?

Mr. LODGE. Yes; 16 years.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President——

Mr. McCUMBER. Just a moment. I said to the Senator from Mississippi, and I am now stating it for the benefit of the Senator from Massachusetts, that the number who were 62 years of age and served 90 days was 9,573.

Mr. LODGE. I am taking the 3-year list men 62 years of age. The way it is printed here, of those between 62 and 63 years, there were 27,921. If they are only 62 now, they were in 1861 not far from 11 years old, and I can not believe——

Mr. WILLIAMS. If they were 60, they were not far from a little over 15 years old.

Mr. LODGE. That is surprising, and it does seem that they entered very young.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Will the Senator from Massachusetts yield to me?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. LODGE. I do.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. If the Senator from Massachusetts will permit me, I will read some interesting data regarding the ages of the young men who made up the Union Army. I think it will be very interesting right at this point. There were 846,000 boys in the Union Army 16 years of age and under.

Mr. LODGE. When?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Altogether.

Mr. LODGE. But at what time?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Altogether in the Union Army.

Mr. LODGE. At what period were they 16—when they entered, or when they came out, or during their service?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. When they entered, of course.

Mr. LODGE. When they entered, precisely.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. There were over 2,000 boys under 14 years of age in the Army; there were 1,151,000 boys 18 years of age and under; and 2,159,778 boys at the age of 21 and under, who put down the rebellion in the bloodiest contest ever waged in the history of the world.

Mr. LODGE. Precisely.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. One moment. I will say further there were 618,511 young men who were 22 years of age and over in the Union Army, and most of the officers were under 25 years of age. Fifty thousand of these boys were killed in battle, 40,000 of them died of wounds, 225,000 died from disease, and 280,000 boys were wounded in battle.

Mr. LODGE. Those figures, Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me, sustain precisely the position I was taking.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. That is the reason I offered them.

Mr. LODGE. I am glad the Senator offered them, if that was his reason. They show that 2,000 boys entered the Union Army at the age of 14.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Exactly.

Mr. LODGE. But according to the figures which have been cited by the Senator from North Dakota, we are left to suppose that 27,000 might have entered at 11 or 12, and I find no record of so many having enlisted as young as that.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I noticed that the Senator from Massachusetts was not making much headway with his statement, and I thought that I could verify his contention. The figures I have given bear out that statement and are most striking, as they illustrate the extreme youth of those who composed the Army for the Union, and I dare say are a correct index to the extreme youth of the young men and boys who made up the heroic and gallant defenders of the Confederate cause.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I inquire what is the sum total of the number of men in the Union Army according to the figures given by the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Those figures, Mr. President, are cumulative and relate to different periods, but the classification is accurate.

Mr. OVERMAN. I was going to say that according to those figures there must have been about 3,000,000 men in the Union Army.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. No. I have no doubt there were times when it seemed as though we had that many, but we did not. I dare say the soldiers of the Southern army were as young as those in the northern army and equally as dauntless.

Mr. OVERMAN. I am not talking about the ages, but I was surprised at the number of men who were in the Union Army according to the Senator's figures.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. The Senator from North Carolina need not be surprised; the record is made up and is imperishable; these figures are cumulative and the age classification is correct. For instance, the figures given for boys of 18 years and under include the boys 16 years of age, and the figures given for young men 21 years of age include those both of 18 and 16.

Mr. LODGE. Why, Mr. President, I thought those figures showed the number who entered the Army at a given age.

Mr. McCUMBER. Oh, no; Mr. President, they have nothing to do with the age at entering the Army; they show the number now living of a given age who served a certain length of time.

Mr. LODGE. I understood the figures of the Senator from Michigan represented the number who enlisted in the Army at 14, 16, 18, 21, and 22 years of age; but I did not understand that the figures given of those who entered at 22 covered all who had entered at an earlier age.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. No; Mr. President, the Senator from Massachusetts is correct; the figures given do not include those who enlisted at 22 or over. I was showing the total under 22, classified at 14 years of age, 16, 18, and 21 years.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator stated they were cumulative.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. The figures are cumulative, but there were 846,000 boys in the Union Army 16 years old and under, and 2,000 boys under 14 years of age.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. McCUMBER. I do.

Mr. NELSON. I simply rose to say that the argument is so confusing that I hardly know how old I was when I went into the Army. [Laughter.]

Mr. McCUMBER. Possibly I can give the Senator some light as to how old he was when he entered the Army. Strange as these figures may seem to the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], if he will take the report of the cases of those who applied for pension or increase of pension under the act of 1907 he will find that at that time, five years ago now, there were of those 62 years of age who were granted pensions under that law 104,857. There are now of those 62 years of age who served for three years and over 27,921. The exact number is given of those who served 90 days, six months, and from six months up to a year, and so forth.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me, I have had opportunity to examine the figures of the Senator from Michigan, and, as he has stated, they are cumulative; but what confused me was that after giving the total number for 21 years and under they then added the number 22 years and over and did not make them cumulative. However, as the figures for the age of 21 and under are cumulative—that is, cover all before that time—they harmonize entirely with my statement, which was to the effect that now there can not be practically any soldiers of 62 who served in the Union Army.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, there are some Senators who desire an executive session this evening. I will, of course, move to take this matter up again as the unfinished business to-morrow——

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Before that motion is put——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, that which I have to say may not be interesting, but at least it defines my position on this question.

I beg to say that my kin were on the other side, the side that wore the gray. They lie to-day beneath the southern sun. The little property that they had accumulated before that strife was swept away as dew before the rising sun. There was a time in my life when nothing on earth would have induced me to voice the words to which I now give utterance. At the close of that horrid strife my heart was filled with bitterness, with hate—yes, with vengeance; but, thank God, I have lived since then,

I have grown bigger, broader, more catholic, and, I trust, more Christian. My heart, then filled with hatred and vengeance, thank God, now full of charity, love, sympathy, and humanity. I see things to-day through a different lens than I then saw them, and, thank Heaven, I am brave enough to confess that change.

Mr. President, I insist if there was ever a justification for a pension, that justification is twofold. When they went into the Army the soldiers were young and generally in good health, but to-day they are decrepit, old, and infirm, and, further than that, every man's dollar to-day has been cut in two.

I presume in common with other Senators I have received many letters on this much-mooted question of the pension laws. Those letters bring to me different tales and different thoughts. Some bring to me tidings that should I vote for this measure it will be my political death. Sad, indeed! I trust Senators may press back their tears. I have heard from time to time for 40 years of my political life that this step or that step would be my political death and doom; but I am still worshipping at the same shrine, pleading and preaching the same gospel.

From some letters I learn that the country can illy stand this drain upon its purse. I received such a letter from one who has been a beneficiary of the protective tariff system, the most horrid, outrageous, unjust, and iniquitous system of taxation that ever disgraced the statute books of any country. He says that the country can ill stand the drain on its Treasury that this bill will cause, and yet for 25 years he has been pressing into his coffers the results of that unjust, outrageous system of taxation.

I have letters from another class—one from an old man, who writes: "I am 73 years old. I can no longer work and can scarcely walk. I served three and a half years in the war. I am told," says he, "that I may go to the soldiers' home, but when I ask what is to become of Betsy, they say naught, but point over the hills to the poorhouse."

Other letters also tell me that our Treasury can not withstand this drain. How, they ask, would I replenish it? I answer I would invoke an income tax; I would multiply the tariff on diamonds and foreign wines, and if further income be demanded I would place a tax on tobacco and whisky, that would not be felt by the masses of the people at large, but would yield to this country all the revenue that would be required.

In God's own time—in the nature of things it can not be but a few years—the old soldiers will go to—

> The undiscover'd country from whose bourn
> No traveler returns.

Senators, I urge you to vote for this measure, and I believe as I live that a just God and a generous people will bless and advance our country's welfare.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. McCUMBER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 1 hour and 30 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 6 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, March 12, 1912, at 2 o'clock p. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, March 11, 1912.

The House met at 12 o'clock m.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Eternal God, our heavenly Father, inspire us with longing eyes, brave hearts, and dauntless courage to press toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus. Wealth, fame, power, honestly attained and wisely ministered to the good of mankind, are prizes to be sought, but a God-like character outshines them all. The former things pass away; the latter is eternal.

> "The stars shine over the earth,
> The stars shine over the sea;
> The stars look up to the mighty God,
> The stars look down on me.
> The stars have lived a million years,
> A million years and a day;
> But God and I shall love and live
> When the stars have passed away."

So inspire us, so lead us to the coveted goal, in the spirit of the Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday, March 9, 1912, was read and approved.

REMARKS OF HON. THERON AKIN.

Mr. AKIN of New York. Mr. Speaker, on Saturday, March 9, there was a resolution (No. 443) passed in the House asking that a committee be appointed to investigate certain remarks that I had made in a speech printed in the RECORD of March 7, in which speech it is claimed that I have transgressed the rules and offended the dignity of the Members of the House.

I wish to make request, by unanimous consent, that this speech, which appears in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of March 7, be eliminated entirely from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. After talking with some of my friends on the floor of the House, I wish to say that it seems that I have transgressed the rules of the House. I do not wish to transgress the rules or offend the dignity of this House by making remarks such as should not properly be made in debate. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the remarks of the gentleman will be withdrawn from the RECORD. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the order appointing a committee to investigate the matter referred to by the gentleman from New York [Mr. AKIN], be vacated.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the proceedings looking toward the appointment of a committee to investigate the matter referred to be vacated. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

PHOSPHOROUS MATCHES.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey, by direction of the Committee on Ways and Means, reported a bill (H. R. 20842) to provide for a tax on white phosphorous matches, and for other purposes, which was read a first and second time, and, with the accompanying report (No. 406), ordered to be printed and referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that there be printed 500 additional copies of the report on this bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Jersey asks unanimous consent that there be printed 500 additional copies of the report on the bill H. R. 20842. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

FREE SHIP BILL.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, this morning I filed a report on the bill H. R. 16692, known as the free ship bill. I ask unanimous consent that the minority members of the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries have seven days within which to file their views.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent that the minority members of the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries be granted seven legislative days in which to file their views on the bill H. R. 16692, the free ship bill. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered (H. Rept. 405, pt. 2).

CONTINGENT EXPENSES OF THE SENATE.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Appropriations, I report Senate joint resolution 83, making appropriations to meet contingent expenses of the Senate, and I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York presents a privileged report on Senate joint resolution 83, and asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the Senate joint resolution in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate joint resolution (S. J. Res. 83, H. Rept. 407) making appropriations to meet certain contingent expenses of the Senate.

Resolved, etc., That the following sums be appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the contingent expenses of the Senate of the United States:

For folding speeches and pamphlets, at a rate not exceeding $1 per thousand, $4,000;

For miscellaneous items, exclusive of labor, $40,000;

For expenses of inquiries and investigations ordered by the Senate, including compensation to stenographers to committees, at such rates as may be fixed by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, but not exceeding $1.25 per printed page, $25,000.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the Senate joint resolution.

The Senate joint resolution was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. FITZGERALD, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was passed was laid on the table.

INCOME TAX.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following communication from the governor of the State of Nevada, which, with the accompanying papers, was ordered to be printed in the RECORD:

STATE OF NEVADA, EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT,
Carson City, March 5, 1912.

To the honorable the Speaker of the House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

SIR: I herewith transmit certified copy of assembly joint and concurrent resolution ratifying the sixteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States of America. (Approved Feb. 8, 1911.)

Respectfully, yours,

TASKER L. ODDIE, Governor.

Assembly joint and concurrent resolution ratifying the sixteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States of America. (Approved Feb. 8, 1911.)

Whereas both Houses of the Sixty-first Congress of the United States of America at its first session, by a constitutional majority of two-thirds thereof, made the following proposition to amend the Constitution of the United States of America in the following words, to wit:

A joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled (two-thirds of each House concurring therein), That the following article is proposed as an amendment to the Constitution of the United States which, when ratified by the legislatures of three-fourths of the several States, shall be valid to all intents and purposes as a part of the Constitution, namely:

ART. XVI. The Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes on incomes, from whatever source derived, without apportionment among the several States and without regard to any census or enumeration.

Therefore be it

Resolved by the assembly of the State of Nevada (the senate concurring), That the said proposed amendment to the Constitution of the United States of America be, and the same is hereby, ratified by the Legislature of the State of Nevada.

That certified copies of this preamble and joint and concurrent resolution be forwarded by the governor of this State to the President of the United States, Secretary of State of the United States, to the Presiding Officer of the United States Senate, and to the Speaker of the United States House of Representatives.

STATE OF NEVADA, Department of State, ss:

I, George Brodigan, the duly elected, qualified, and acting secretary of state of the State of Nevada, do hereby certify that the foregoing is a true, full, and correct copy of the original copy of assembly joint and concurrent resolution ratifying the sixteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States of America (approved Feb. 8, 1911), now on file and of record in this office.

In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the great seal of State, at my office in Carson City, Nevada, this 5th day of March, A. D. 1912.

[SEAL.]

GEORGE BRODIGAN,
Secretary of State.
By GEO. W. COWING,
Deputy.

AGRICULTURE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. LAMB. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 18960, the Agriculture appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 18960, with Mr. BORLAND in the chair.

Mr. LAMB. Mr. Chairman, when the committee rose Saturday evening an amendment that I offered was under consideration. I have carefully gone over that, and in order to meet the objections raised by some gentlemen, and to pass an amendment that would reach, we think, the results which the committee had in view at that time, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw that amendment and offer the one which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. LAMB] asks unanimous consent to withdraw the amendment which he offered on Saturday and offers a substitute for the same, which the Clerk will report.

Insert as a new paragraph between lines 10 and 11, page 47:

"Any contract or agreement heretofore or hereafter made for the sale of timber or other forest products of the national forests may be modified by the Secretary of Agriculture as to the amount of such timber or other forest products that shall be cut or removed, and as to the time for the cutting or removal of such timber or other forest products: Provided, That the United States shall in all such cases be fully reimbursed for any expenses or damages incurred in connection with said contract: Provided further, That in no case shall the stumpage price stipulated in the contract or agreement be reduced by such modification or alteration: And provided also, That nothing herein shall be construed to limit the authority of the Secretary of Agriculture to modify, alter, or cancel any such contract or agreement for violation of its terms."

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on that.

Mr. LAMB. Mr. Chairman, I think if the members of the committee will examine this substitute carefully they will see at once the necessity for the legislation, and if they will turn to the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and read the concrete cases that are referred to, but which I would not take the time to read in full as we were hurrying through Saturday evening, they will see that this matter is important, that it is specific, as I said, and that conditions arose last year in administering the sales of forest timber that necessitated just such legislation as we seek here to perfect.

Mr. HOWARD. May I ask the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. LAMB] a question?

Mr. LAMB. Certainly.

Mr. HOWARD. Was that amendment you introduced on Saturday and that you called up a committee amendment or was that an amendment of the gentleman from Virginia on his own initiative?

Mr. LAMB. It was my amendment, suggested by conversation with the Forester and recommended by the Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. HOWARD. I mean, did the Committee on Agriculture consider your amendment before it was introduced?

Mr. LAMB. The committee did not have any opportunity to consider it, because the question did not arise when the committee was having its hearings and making up the bill.

Mr. HOWARD. As I understand, the necessity for this arose last fall, and I notice the letters to the Secretary are dated January 18 of this year. Therefore the committee was in possession of the facts from the Department of Agriculture at the time you considered this appropriation.

Mr. LAMB. They were not. It was impossible.

Mr. HAWLEY. Will the gentleman from Virginia allow me? In reply to the question of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HOWARD], if the chairman will permit, I will say that I have just had a conference with the Forest Service, and they could not present this matter until the decision was rendered by the comptroller's office relative to the power of the Secretary to modify a contract by which a hardship was supposed to have been worked upon the contractor. The decision has recently been rendered by the comptroller's office that the Secretary of Agriculture was without power to modify the contract and that decision was not made until recently and therefore it was made after the committee reported the bill.

Mr. HOWARD. I think there is no more right in equity or in law to abrogate that sort of a contract than there would be between two individuals, and I think the comptroller's decision was eminently correct.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I wish to call the attention of the gentleman from Virginia to the fact that the amendment which he now proposes is much more comprehensive than the one he proposed on Saturday.

Under the amendment proposed originally, upon the application of the purchaser, whenever the purchaser shall show to the satisfaction of the Secretary that, owing to conditions beyond the purchaser's control and arising subsequent to the execution of the contract, the enforcement thereof will work serious hardship or injustice to the purchaser, the Secretary could modify, cancel, or alter the contract. In this proposed amendment the department is not required to have the purchaser show to its satisfaction that because of conditions arising subsequent to the execution of the contract a hardship would be worked, but under the provisions of the pending amendment the department could increase the amount of timber which might be taken under a contract at the price fixed therein. Without reflection upon the department or the officials, I do not believe it is either wise or necessary to give the department a power that would subject it to pressure that might result in conditions which would operate very injuriously to the public service.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Would this amendment which is now offered do any more than give to the Secretary of Agriculture power to make a change in the specifications after the contract is entered into, where he would have the power if he did that before the contract was entered into? For instance, the Secretary makes a contract for the cutting of so much timber, and afterwards concludes that there ought to be a smaller quantity cut. Of course, in the first place, he would have authority to make a contract for a smaller quantity if there seemed to be occasion for it. I think myself that he would have the authority in the contract as to subsequent contracts if he would so insert it in the specifications—authority retained in him to provide for the taking of a lesser amount than is mentioned in the contract. That is a common provision in contracts that the Government enters into.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Let me call the attention of the gentleman to the manner in which the power may be abused by officials of the Government.

Mr. MANN. There is no necessity for that. We all know that; that it may be and it sometimes is.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is very pertinent at this time. Congress authorized and ordered the sale of the old customhouse in the city of New York. Bids were invited by public advertisement and two bids were submitted, one by the National City Bank and the other by the Farmers' Loan & Trust Co. The National City Bank having submitted an offer, I think, of about $3,200,000, as against $3,125,000 by the Farmers' Loan & Trust Co., the award was made to the National City Bank. But when the contract was made provisions were inserted in it that had never been called to the attention of the respective bidders by which it was provided that all of the purchase price should not be paid until the Government was ready to abandon the property, and the Government agreed to pay 4 per cent upon the purchase price as rent to its purchaser, although it retained the title itself; and it also agreed to deposit $3,200,000, which was supposed to be paid, in the National City Bank. The result was that the National City Bank made a bookkeeping transfer of $3,200,000 on its books, the Government retained the title, it paid the National City Bank 4 per cent on the purchase price for five or six years as rent on its own property, the property remained exempt from taxation, and eventually the National City Bank practically got the property for almost the amount that the Government had paid to it in rent. That is what can be done by distinguished gentlemen under pressure.

Mr. MANN. I never justified the action in that case. But here is a case where, as I understand it, the Government proposes to sell timber, say for mining purposes, and it makes a contract for the sale of so much timber, the timber for a mine. It turns out that there is no occasion to use the timber in the mine. The mine may be abandoned. Now the man has contracted to pay for the timber. The circumstances may be such that it would be of very little value for any other purpose. There is no occasion for requiring him to cut the timber. That is not in the interest of the Government, and why should they not have the authority to modify that?

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is easy to remedy that case. It appears that there are two instances in the operation of the Forestry Service in which it is believed that some relief, some modification of existing contracts should be made. I would not object to a provision that would authorize the modification of these contracts, but I do not believe that because these two instances can be singled out it is therefore a justification for the enactment of this provision. It might be subject to abuse in administration.

Mr. MANN. Would the gentleman doubt, as a matter of fact, that hereafter the department, in advertising for bids, might put in the specifications a provision that it was within the power of the department either to increase or decrease the quantity of the timber cut under the contract, and thereby accomplish indirectly the very purpose that is proposed to be accomplished here?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Not at all. If the department puts that statement in its advertisement, prospective bidders then have knowledge that they are bidding upon an estimate which may be decreased or increased, and they all enter fairly into the arrangement. If an advertisement is issued and bidders in good faith submit their bids on the understanding that certain things are to be done, and then a contract is awarded, and the contractors depend to some extent, at least, upon the amount of pressure or influence that can be brought for relief from undesirable conditions, it makes a very great difference.

Mr. MANN. Why would it not do to insert in this amendment a provision making it the law only for the next ensuing year, or until the end of the next fiscal year, making it purely temporary?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I believe there is so much doubt of the advisability of either of the two provisions that I shall insist on the point of order.

Mr. LAMB. Let me make this matter so plain that every gentleman here will see it in a moment. There is no analogy between this case and the cases cited by the gentleman from New York.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I did not say there was.

Mr. LAMB. The conditions are reversed. There the United States Government is contracting to have specific work done. Here the United States is selling timber, and as to these two concrete cases here, this is just the condition: A large amount of lumber was sold to the contracting parties, to be cut within five years. The railroads to which the contracting parties had agreed to furnish this lumber gave notice that they would not need any of it for a year or more, and this contractor would have had to go on and cut this lumber at his own risk, and it would have been a waste. What would have been the result to the seller? Why, the lumber was standing in the forest. All the loss that could possibly be sustained by the Government was the amount of ripe timber that might deteriorate in one or two years. That is the whole case. This amendment proposes to give the Secretary of Agriculture discretion in this matter. Where shall it be lodged, if not with the authorities that have charge of forestry? If you fail to pass this amendment the effect of this will be to check the sales of ripe timber in these forests. What we want to do is to dispose as speedily as possible of ripe timber in order to reduce the amount which we have to appropriate for this service. In my judgment, it is a plain proposition. I have considered it carefully and looked into it in all its bearings. I sent for the Forester this morning and asked him if this amendment would not do away with some of the objections made on Saturday to the amendment I first offered. He said he thought it would.

The Secretary of Agriculture can be trusted. Any other man who will follow him will be a man of high character who can be trusted. You have got to put faith in somebody in all these matters. It seems to me this technical objection to this amendment must fall to the ground when you consider the necessity for this legislation and the importance of it, and the value of it to the country and to the interests of the Forest Service.

I ask for a vote.

Mr. FITZGERALD. There is no technical objection being made to this amendment. The gentleman has submitted a provision on this bill, which is a request for unanimous consent. I do not believe the proposed provision is wise legislation. That is why I oppose it. It is not in the interest of the Forestry Service; it is in the interest of contractors who are trying to speculate at the expense of the Government.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. This amendment that is submitted this morning is much different from the one submitted on Saturday, and I hope the gentleman will see his way clear to withdraw his opposition to it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I shall not, if the gentleman is going to argue about it. I have made up my mind in respect to the matter.

Mr. RAKER. I desire to call the attention of the gentleman to several features of the bill, and particularly the matter as being administered by the Forestry Service.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I have just the same confidence in the Forestry Service that I have in every other department of the Government, and no more.

Mr. RAKER. This amendment simply relates to where a private individual or a corporation has entered into a contract with the department, and the parties have given a bond that they will take so much timber at so much per thousand feet——

Mr. FITZGERALD. And the contract proves to be unprofitable and they want to get out of it.

Mr. RAKER. No; it is not a question of unprofitableness. It is a question of where in the mining districts men have contracted for an amount of timber which they actually need, but after they have worked the mine, it peters out, and there is no more gold to dig, and they can not proceed any further.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Is that the gentleman's understanding?

Mr. RAKER. That is the absolute fact of the case as now presented by the department.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Then, the gentleman has not read the department's letter, because the most important case is one where the Big Horn Timber Co. had made a contract to cut 100,000,000 in five years for the purpose of supplying railroad ties to the Burlington Railroad.

Mr. RAKER. I have not only read the letter, but have also made it my business to see the Chief Forester and the man who sells the timber for the Government, who acts as the agent for the department. They deem it necessary to have this timber cut down simply because the company has a contract. Is it not right and proper that the man should be given an extension of time? Suppose he is given an extension of time; that will relieve him. If he is given an extension of time for a year or six months, the financial situation may change and the business may be so conducted that he will be able to go on, if the department is permitted to give him that extension.

Mr. FITZGERALD. And we had better appoint a guardian for him when he is making contracts.

Mr. RAKER. That might apply to every other man on earth in making contracts. We all make contracts with the expectation of carrying them out.

Mr. FITZGERALD. And making money out of them.

Mr. RAKER. Not necessarily. Of course, every man in business expects to make money, or he would not go into it. If the Government has made this kind of a contract, why should it not be permitted to treat the man with whom it has contracted fairly; and if his financial position has changed and his mind has changed ought not the Government to treat him so that he would not cut down the forests simply because he has a contract? It would be to the interest of the Forestry Service.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from New York be extended five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. ESTOPINAL having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 4314. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors.

AGRICULTURE APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN. Would the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] be willing to let an amendment come in providing that any contract or agreement heretofore made, and so forth, may be modified by reducing the amount of timber or other forest products to be cut, or extending the time for the cutting or the removal of the timber, and so forth, so as to make it apply only to contracts heretofore made, and only authorizing the amount of timber to be cut or an extension of the time within which to cut it as to those contracts already made?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Those are two limitations that should be incorporated in any provision that is offered, but I doubt the advisability of attempting to perfect such important legislation in this way on this bill at this time. I have no objection to passing it over in the hope that some arrangement may be reached which will take care of existing contracts, but I do not believe that it is wise with the information we have, and knowing the effect of this character of legislation, to hastily adopt such an important provision.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I will say to the gentleman from Virginia that as far as future contracts are concerned, where they advertise for bids, it is perfectly feasible to put a provision in the contract and in the specifications authorizing the Secretary to reduce the amount or to increase the amount, for that matter.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think that is true.

Mr. MANN. So what he wants to accomplish is simply to provide a method of removing onerous provisions in existing contracts, if that could be done.

Mr. FITZGERALD. How many more are there besides the two referred to?

Mr. MANN. I do not know. I have asked the Forester about this since Saturday, and he said that there were some contracts with mining companies and miners; but I do not know how many.

Mr. LAMB. I can not answer. I do not know how many, but there are a good many, I understand.

Mr. MANN. And if some provision was not put in the law at all it would result in the cutting of timber that would go to waste practically.

Mr. LAMB. Mr. Chairman, is the point of order made against this?

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is reserved.

Mr. LAMB. Mr. Chairman, I ask that we pass this paragraph without prejudice now.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent that the committee pass without prejudice the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia. Is there objection. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Colorado offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out line 10, on page 47, and insert the following: "387,500."

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. SCULLY having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Coggleshell, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

Senate concurrent resolution 19.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That preliminary to such legislation by Congress as may be necessary to enable the Government of the United States to be properly represented on such occasion the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to confer with the Fiftieth Anniversary of the Battle of Gettysburg Commission of the State of Pennsylvania, and,

First. To cause to be made such surveys, measurements, and estimates as will be necessary in regard to providing for a sufficient supply of good water for the use of those who shall attend the celebration.

Second. To investigate as to the necessary and proper provision required to be made for sewerage, sanitation, hospital, and policing during such celebration.

Third. To estimate upon the tents, camp equipment, supplies, and rations that, in his judgment, will be necessary to properly accommodate and provide for those who shall attend such commemoration, and to estimate what provision will be necessary to be made for local transportation and care of those who may or probably will participate in such celebration, and to give an estimate of the cost, separately stated, of the several provisions necessary to be made.

Fourth. To estimate the quantity of camp equipment, such as tents, bedding, and cooking outfits, necessary to accommodate the people attending, together with the cost per unit of a suitable ration to be issued and as to the best method of providing and issuing such rations.

Fifth. To prepare a plan of camp arrangement suitable to the occasion.

Sixth. To report to Congress upon all of these matters within 30 days after the passage of this resolution.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment resolutions of the following titles:

House concurrent resolution 28.

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That there be printed, for the use of the House of Representatives 30,000 copies of the report, with accompanying bill, of the National Monetary Commission, to be delivered to the superintendent of the folding room of the House of Representatives for distribution.

House concurrent resolution 40.

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That there be printed 10,000 copies of Senate document No. 190, "Fertilizer resources of the United States," message from the President of the United States, December 18, 1911, for the use of the House.

AGRICULTURE APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I call attention to the fact that an amendment is already pending to that paragraph, and the paragraph by agreement has gone over until we read line 7, page 48.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Not to exceed 15 per cent of the total of all sums appropriated under "General expenses, Forest Service," may be used, in the discretion of the Secretary of Agriculture as provided above, for all expenses necessary for the general administration of the Forest Service.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph. Why is it necessary longer to have this paragraph which practically makes a lump appropriation of the whole service?

Mr. LAMB. This was only an addition of the amount paid to employees on the statutory roll.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I refer to the provision above, at the top of the page—the interchangeable item.

Mr. LAMB. That is a margin held over each year for the purpose of apportionment, so that they will not go beyond the amounts appropriated for each item here named.

Mr. FITZGERALD. This permits the increase of any single item of appropriation in the bill by transfer under this item and absolutely destroys the value of making specific appropriations in the bill.

Mr. LAMB. Does the gentleman object to it because——

Mr. FITZGERALD. I am calling the gentleman's attention to the fact that it makes possible the increase in these specific appropriations beyond the amount which the gentleman reports.

Mr. LAMB. No.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Then, what does it do?

Mr. MANN. It is an arrangement that they have down there of apportioning this amount and reserving 15 per cent for a certain time and afterwards making up the rest of it. It is a great, big work.

Mr. FITZGERALD. And it absolutely nullifies the provisions of the ante deficiency act, under which they are required to apportion these appropriations so as to avoid deficiencies.

Mr. LAMB. I will say that it has been incorporated in this bill for four or five years.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I know that; but perhaps it should come out, because it is bad administration. I would have called attention to it if I had had opportunity to examine the bill earlier, but I could not do so, because I was doing other work.

Mr. LAMB. Have we been making mistakes right along in leaving this paragraph as it is?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I have not noticed the other items.

Mr. LAMB. I mean this one to which you object.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think, if the gentleman will permit me, that it is a mistake. The gentleman's committee determines that a specific sum be appropriated for a specified service. Under the antideficiency act the department is compelled to so apportion that appropriation as to prevent a deficiency. This item makes all the appropriations liquid, so that any item can be increased 15 per cent. Instead of having available what Congress contemplates in these appropriations, they can be increased by the use of this floating fund.

Mr. LAMB. Our attention had not been called to it, and I supposed, in looking over the bill when we were making it up, that it just gave a leeway of 15 per cent to these people in apportioning the amounts we gave them.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It was put in here, if the gentleman will recall, at the beginning of the institution of the Forest Service.

Mr. BURLESON. At the beginning of the breaking up of the lump sum for the Forest Service.

Mr. LEVER. At the beginning of the breaking up of the lump sum for that service. That system has only run three years at the most, and it is absolutely necessary to give the administrative officer some leeway by which to administer these forests. For instance, I might cite to the gentleman this example: On a given unit of the national forests this year the expense of administration may be $10,000, but next year there comes in a lumber company or a grazing concern, which requires, perhaps, a transfer of some officer, some ranger, or somebody else, to that forest in order to do the business of that forest. The work may increase.

Now, then, unless you have some leeway by which you can take from these general expenses a small amount, as limited in the bill here, that forest unit would be absolutely tied up. It is absolutely necessary to have this leeway in dealing with these great forests, 159 of them, in order that the service may be administered economically and efficiently; and this proviso was put in the bill for that very purpose and the purpose of good administration.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Any item where appropriations are made for experiments coming under the general expenses can be increased in this way.

Mr. LEVER. Undoubtedly; but it may be necessary even in a case of that kind that the appropriation shall be increased somewhat.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, no. If Congress determines a specific sum should be expended in one year, for instance, for experiment and investigation of range conditions within national forests and the method of improving the ranges, and so forth, I do not believe that it is necessary or advisable that the department should have the authority, if it so desires, to increase the amount to be so expended by 15 per cent over the appropriation.

Mr. LEVER. The gentleman from New York fails to make this distinction between the Agricultural appropriation bill and other appropriation bills which come to the consideration of the House. You know how many regiments of soldiers you are appropriating for in the Army appropriation bill. You know what each soldier costs. You know what the total expense is going to be; but with reference to a department whose work is absolutely scientific and in a great many cases, as in the case of the Forester here, where a lot of emergencies arise from time to time, it is absolutely necessary, in the interests of good administration, in the interests of economy, that there be some small leeway by which the administrative officer may take care of these things as they arise from time to time. Now, as to other bureaus in this service, this item reads 10 per cent instead of 15 per cent.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not believe the gentleman's argument is conclusive. I believe that these scientific investigations can be conducted within the amounts fixed by Congress for a specific year—that is, an investigation up to the amount allowed. A large part of appropriations are expended for salaries—compensation of employees—and there is no reason why Congress should not determine for that department, as it does for every other department of the Government, just to what extent this work shall be carried on.

Mr. LEVER. The gentleman will recognize this fact—that the Forestry Service can not spend a dollar more than the amount of the total appropriation made for it in this bill, so that the gentleman's argument is really whether or not the Forest Service shall or shall not have the right to make these little transfers from one item to the other. It does not go to the total appropriation carried.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman seems to believe that the Forestry Service is under an obligation to spend all of the money that is appropriated to that service for every purpose.

Mr. LEVER. Not at all.

Mr. LAMB. They turn back to the Treasury what is unexpended.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Well, I am of opinion that the sum appropriated for a specific year for the service is the sum to which the department should be restricted, unless there is some reason for giving them another sum. Otherwise, what is the value of considering, or what is the use of wasting our time arguing as to whether the department shall spend one sum or another sum for a specific purpose, if at the end of the bill we destroy the effect of former provisions by such a provision as this?

Mr. FERGUSSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit me one word?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Certainly.

Mr. FERGUSSON. Mr. Chairman, I want to call attention to what I think is an inadequate appropriation for the prevention of forest fires.

Mr. LAMB. We have not reached that provision yet.

Mr. FERGUSSON. I mention that merely for illustration upon this point, that it is absolutely necessary to have an emergency clause in the bill, especially with reference to forest fires. We have dry times in New Mexico, even in the forest regions, where for 12 months at a time there will not be a drop of rain. The dead timber and the fallen timber and the leaves and the bushes become absolutely dry. Not only that, but as the country is settling up there are many farms and farmers who have their houses and barns and haystacks in the region where a forest fire may occur. Another thing is that there is a great amount of travel in New Mexico from the fact that the settled sections of the State are scattered far and wide, and it is necessary for those who travel to camp out, and there is danger of fire on that account. It is necessary, therefore, for the department to have some leeway, certainly as to the appropriation with reference to forest fires, because if the dry season comes it may be a matter almost of life and death; not only is there danger of the destruction of the farmhouses and haystacks, but of the life of the people, the wives and children of the settlers. The whole forest is often but a dry tinder box of timber and dry leaves, which have not had a drop of water for a year. In other words, emergencies will arise when the department ought to be able to spend money freely in connection with forest fires.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from New York yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Certainly.

Mr. HAWLEY. As I recall the explanations made to the committee concerning this transfer of 15 per cent of the money herein appropriated, it was not intended that such transfer should be made to the items for investigations or experimental work or operations of that kind, but simply to meet unexpected emergencies arising in the administration of the forests. No one can tell whether you can administer a forest in any given year for the same amount of money as was required for its administration in a previous year. The probabilites are that you can do so under ordinary conditions, but fires may occur, mines may be developed, stockmen may come in there to graze their stock, or other unexpected conditions may arise that will require an additional sum of money for the care of that forest.

This provision was put in the bill so that when an unexpected emergency arises for which no provision has been made it can be dealt with through the use of a certain amount of money transferred from another item or other items. There would be no way in which to meet such emergencies unless this provision be inserted. It is not to be used for field equipment or experimental work or anything of that kind, but simply for the administration and protection of the forests.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, may I ask the gentleman if this is the same provision that has been in the bill in previous years?

Mr. HAWLEY. Yes; for several years.

Mr. RAKER. Has it worked to the detriment of the forests?

Mr. HAWLEY. No; not to the detriment of the forests, but to their benefit.

Mr. RAKER. Has not this been really of great benefit in the administration of the forests?

Mr. HAWLEY. Yes.

Mr. LAMB. That is what we claim.

Mr. FITZGERALD. If the gentleman believes that this is to be used only in the administration of the forests themselves, I will not object. I think it should be modified so as to restrict it to that particular use. I will withdraw my point of order, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] withdraws the point of order.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, for the purpose of asking a question concerning the language of the paragraph, where it reads, on page 48, line 3, "may be used in the discretion of the Secretary of Agriculture as provided above," and so forth. The words "as provided above" are intended to refer to the appropriation, but apparently they would refer to the discretion, and there is no discretion provided above.

Mr. LAMB. That point is well taken.

Mr. MANN. I think those words, "as provided above," should be stricken out and what is in the current law inserted, "under general expenses, Forest Service."

Mr. LAMB. We are obliged to the gentleman. He can make the suggestion and we will agree to it. I can see the force of that at once.

Mr. MANN. Then, Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the pro forma amendment and move to amend by inserting, after the word "above," in line 4, page 48, the words "under general expenses, Forest Service."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, line 4, page 48, by inserting after word "above" the words "under general expenses, Forest Service."

Mr. LAMB. We accept the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Total for Forest Service, $5,115,245.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the Clerk may again report the paragraph that was passed over and also the pending amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will again report the paragraph and the pending amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the construction and maintenance of roads, trails, bridges, fire lanes, telephone lines, cabins, fences, and other improvements necessary for the proper and economical administration, protection, and development of the national forests, $275,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by striking out the words "two hundred and seventy-five" and inserting the words "five hundred."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the current law carries $500,000 under this item for the construction and maintenance of roads, trails, and so forth, in the national forests. Of course, if we can get along with $275,000 next year, we could get along without appropriating any money except for the mere maintenance of roads there. But we have a large number of national forests, many of which would be sought and visited by the people of the country for the scenic effects afforded, as well as for other purposes of pleasure. We spend every year from our country hundreds of millions of dollars by people going to Europe, a good many of whom would spend their vacations at home visiting our national forests if there were opportunity for them to enjoy themselves in those forests.

In addition to that, we need constantly to increase the construction of fire lanes for fire protection of the forests. The greatest difficulty in the country in the raising and conservation of forests is in affording protection from fire, and the construction of these fire lanes is probably the only method by which fires can be successfully stopped without enormous expense. I do not think the National Treasury is in such a low condition that we ought to decrease the appropriation for this purpose. If I had my way about it I would increase it. The national forests are of great value. We propose to protect them from fire, in the first place, and then we ought to encourage their use by people taking their vacations in our country at home instead of spending their money abroad; and for either reason, for the protection of the forests from fire, and in order to make them accessible and enjoyable by people who use them, we ought to spend not a decreasing sum, but we should appropriate an increasing sum each year.

The amendment which I have offered simply proposes to keep the same standard for the ensuing year that we established for the current fiscal year, and to appropriate a half million dollars for the improvement and protection of forests that are worth hundreds of millions of dollars to the country.

Mr. LAMB. Mr. Chairman, the committee carefully considered all this. It is true that the current law carries $500,000, and it is likewise true that this $500,000 will run up to the 30th of June of this year. The year before the same people, shouldering the responsibility, with all the reasons that have been given and may be given on this subject, appropriated the sum of $275,000, the same that we appropriate in this bill, for this work. Possibly it was increased abnormally in the last session of Congress. There were some on that committee then who said, "Why increase this item so much?" You know how enthusiastic these foresters are. You know as well as I do how these items for forests have increased abnormally in the last few years until the appropriation has run up to such an amount that we hear criticism against it every year. We concluded that to go back to the appropriation of year before last—$275,000—for this work would give these people sufficient money to make these trails and paths through these forests. I do not believe you are going to stop the going to Europe of these pleasure seekers and hunters and turn them into our forests. My friend Mr. MANN usually makes fine arguments. He has made a fine one here, but I doubt whether the pleasure seekers he refers to will go into the forests.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield? For myself, I never have been in Europe, but I have traveled a good deal in places where I wished to goodness there were better facilities, both in the way of trails and roads, in our own country. I expect to continue that habit, if I have the opportunity.

Mr. LAMB. I hope the gentleman will enjoy himself in Europe, and after the 4th of next March perhaps he will have more opportunity to go to Europe than he has had in the last few years. [Laughter.]

Mr. MANN. I hope the gentleman does not wish for that.

Mr. LAMB. Now, Mr. Chairman, seriously, we think that $275,000, with the $500,000 they already have, will meet the necessities of this situation. We have reduced the employees by some 60 or 70. We have only reduced this in proportion to other items of reduction. I do not think anybody is going to suffer by reason of the fact that we curtailed these expenditures where we could in the Forest Service. If I thought there would be any more danger of fire by reason of not supplying the difference between $275,000 and $500,000, I would cheerfully accede to the amendment. But we can only judge the future by the past, and under this $275,000 appropriation the year before last we did not have as many fires as we did under the appropriation of $500,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LAMB. I have never asked for any extension yet, and have tried to compress all I had to say into five minutes. Nor will I ask an extension now, and so far as I am concerned will rest the case right here.

Mr. MORSE of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I call the attention of the Committee of the Whole to the fact that nearly one-half of the appropriation of $500,000 which we put in this bill last year for this purpose has been cut out. This was for roads, trails, and telephone lines, which are needed to call and get men quickly to fight fires. Of the emergency fund of $1,000,000 only $200,000 remain. These cuts are made in the face of the record of 1910, in which 79 fighters and 25 settlers were burned to death in the national forests, because we did not have these trails that we are now trying to appropriate for, and $12,000,000 worth of timber was destroyed. This cut was made in the face of the recommendation of Mr. Graves, the Forester, who is directly responsible to the people for the protection of $2,000,000,000 worth of public property in the national forests, and in the face of full knowledge that as the result of insufficient appropriations the national forests are in great danger of even worse fires. The protection of public property and the lives of settlers and their wives and children, as well as of public servants within the national forests, lies very close to the public welfare. It seems to me that in the face of the fire losses that we had, in the face of the fact that these trails and telephone lines are the very first things that are needed, it is mighty poor economy at this time to cut down the appropriation.

It is time for Congress to face the facts. Before the national forests can be made reasonably safe against fire they must have ten times the present trails and six times the telephone lines now built. It has taken six years for Congress to appropriate enough money to build this small part of what is urgently needed. The standing timber alone in our national forests is worth not less than $500,000,000. In 20 years it will probably be worth over $1,000,000,000. If Congress gave the Forest Service the $500,000 a year it asks for to build trails and telephone lines, it would give only one-tenth of 1 per cent of the value of timber standing to-day in the national forests. You can cut down any other appropriation in this bill and not hurt it half as much as you are hurting it when you cut down this particular appropriation.

Mr. LAMB. Mr. Chairman, my friend is discussing a paragraph that is not under consideration, the $1,000,000 emergency fund.

Mr. MORSE of Wisconsin. Pardon me. I am discussing that in connection with this. You are cutting down this appropriation from $500,000 to $275,000, and you are also cutting down the $1,000,000 emergency appropriation to $200,000. You understand that the Forest Service is asking for this $500,000 to build trails and telephone lines, and it would amount to less than one-tenth of 1 per cent of the value of the timber standing to-day in the national forests. This is a fire-insurance policy which is costing only one-tenth of 1 per cent, if you give all the Forester asks, namely, $500,000.

The $1,000,000 asked for actual fire fighting and cut by the Agricultural Committee to one-fifth that amount, is simply a fund made available for the use of the Forest Service in times of grave emergency. It may be less necessary than the money required to build roads and bridges, telephone lines, and trails. Unless the fires occur, this money would be neither needed nor spent. But should the need arise there could be no more criminal extravagance than not to spend it. It cost $900,000 beyond the appropriation of the service to fight the great fires of 1910. If this money had not been spent, these fires would probably have wiped out the bulk of the forests of northern Idaho, Montana, and western Washington.

Fires have already broken out on national forests in the Southwest as the result of the exceptionally light precipitation this winter. It would be hardly less unpatriotic and unwise to withhold money to equip troops against an invading army than to refuse the appropriation needed to fight these fires and prevent the greater fires which may easily follow.

The National Conservation Association is fighting to get these cuts restored. I urge every friend of the national forests to help secure adequate provision for protecting this great public property.

It is time for Congress to face the facts. Before the national forests can be made reasonably safe against fire they must have 10 times the present trails and 6 times the telephone lines now built. It has taken six years for Congress to appropriate enough money to build this small part of what is urgently needed. The standing timber alone on national forests is worth not less than $500,000,000. In 20 years it will probably be worth well over $1,000,000,000. If Congress gave the Forest Service the $500,000 a year it asks for to build trails and telephone lines, it would give only one-tenth of 1 per cent of the value of timber standing to-day in the national forests.

The preservation of this standing timber controls the preservation of stream flow, whose value is many times that of all the wood which the national forests contain. The value of the range in national forests, which, again, is largely dependent upon forest preservation, is incalculable. The fees for grazing alone bring into the Public Treasury every year twice the appropriation asked for trails and telephone lines. Without these improvements the forests can not be made safe, even with 10 times the present patrol.

Mr. WILLIS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MORSE of Wisconsin. With pleasure.

Mr. WILLIS. I call the attention of the gentleman to the statement made in this connection by the Forester, in which he says that to carry out the plan of trails and telephone lines and lookout stations, even with the appropriation of $500,000 a year that is asked for, it will take 15 years to complete the system, and if this is cut down it will take vastly longer.

Mr. MORSE of Wisconsin. If it is cut down to $275,000, as proposed in this bill, it practically means that we will never be able to complete that work. Fires have already broken out in the Southwest just recently as the result of lack of rain.

Every man who is familiar with the situation, every man who is a friend of the forests, is anxious to see these appropriations restored. It is poor economy, gentlemen, mighty poor economy, to cut at this particular point. It would be like preventing appropriations for building roads to get into your farms; it would be like piling the alleys full of dry-goods boxes, so that the fire fighters could not get to the building when the fire broke out. This is an absolutely necessary appropriation, and it is the height of extravagance to refuse to restore the amount asked for in this bill.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, owing to the long and unnecessary delay in the admission of the State of Arizona, I was not a Member of this House at the time this bill was reported, and I had not an opportunity to appear before the Committee on Agriculture when this item was under discussion. I want to read from a letter which I received recently from Mr. Graves, the Forester, concerning this item in the bill. He says:

The appropriation bill for the current year carries $500,000 for improvement work. This fund is for the construction of trails, fire lines, telephone lines, ranger cabins, bridges, roads, and other permanent improvements. The money is being mainly expended for the construction of such improvements as are needed for the prevention of forest fires. The national forests are still without adequate means of transportation and communication, and this is the greatest difficulty in fire prevention. At the present rate of expenditures it will take fully 15 years to complete the primary system of roads, trails, and other improvements necessary for fire prevention. A curtailment of this work is therefore exceedingly serious in the development of the national forests.

Let me also read from the hearings:

The CHAIRMAN. The next item is:

"For the construction and maintenance of roads, trails, bridges, fire lanes, telephone lines, cabins, fences, and other permanent improvements necessary for the proper and economical administration, protection, and development of the national forests, $500,000."

What do you say, inasmuch as that was increased so much last year, to giving you $300,000 this year?

Mr. GRAVES. That will be a question of consideration of public policy, of how rapidly it is desired to extend the work of the permanent improvements which are necessary to put the forests in shape for protection. In this connection I would like to call the attention of the committee to the fact that the forests are still very inaccessible; that there are vast areas we can not get into for proper patrol or to transport men; and until we do make them accessible there is always going to be the chance for fires starting at a remote point and getting such a start that before we get to them they are almost beyond control.

I ask you to note that the present amount carried in the bill is $275,000, being $25,000 less than the amount suggested by the chairman at the hearings.

As I understand it, Mr. Chairman, the primary purpose of the Forest Service is fire protection. If the forests burn, there will be no timber to sell, the regular flow of the streams will be diminished, and the value of the reserves for grazing purposes will also be cut down. The secondary purpose of the Forest Service is to make the resources of the forest available for use, such as the sale of timber, the granting of grazing permits, and the disposal of water power, and a great variety of other special uses. We may honestly disagree about the methods used by the Forest Service in carrying out its secondary purpose. We have heard on the floor of this House in the discussion of this bill complaints about the manner in which contracts are let for the sale of timber, complaints of favoritism in the granting of grazing permits, and we have also heard the complaints made by gentlemen that the development of the West is being retarded by unnecessary restrictions on the use of water power, and many of us perhaps have been provoked by the petty acts of some department official who seems to think that the regulations of the Forest Service are superior to the acts of Congress, and who, swollen by a little brief authority, attempts to make a record by harassing the settler. But I do believe that there is one thing upon which the whole American people are agreed, and that is that the remaining forests of the United States should be protected from the needless and preventable waste caused by the ravages of fire. I insist that it is false economy to make any reduction in the present appropriation. It is in the nature of an insurance of a great national asset, the value of which runs into millions of dollars, and aside from that in many places it means the protection of human life. When you reduce this appropriation you are cutting at the very heart of the conservation idea. I sincerely hope that this amendment will prevail. [Applause.]

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I am very glad indeed for once to find myself in entire accord with the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] and the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. MORSE] on a proposition touching the forest reserves. It is my opinion—and I do not care to take up the time of the House unnecessarily—it is my opinion, based on actual knowledge of conditions, based upon the fact that I live in a State which, as I have stated repeatedly, is about one-fourth in forest reserves, that this item is the most profitable and beneficial item of expenditure in the entire bill, with the possible exception of the expenditures for fire service. Now, what does this mean? It means that out of an expenditure of more than $5,000,000 in this bill you propose to expend only $150,000 to protect the reserves from fire and only $275,000 for the construction and maintenance of roads, trails, bridges, fire lanes, telephone wires, and all the agencies for administering and protecting the forests.

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. MORSE] truly stated that the Forest Service is very anxious to secure in this bill the same amount carried in this last appropriation bill for this specific purpose, to wit, $500,000; but it is not only the Forest Service which is anxious to preserve without diminution the amount of that appropriation. This is the sole item upon which I have been addressed by my constituents—the securing of appropriations to build and improve roads and trails through the forest reserves. This is due to the fact that we have towns surrounded by these reserves which have no means of egress and ingress except through the national forests, and that we have communities separated from each other by the reserves.

In this connection I want to say that I base my support of this proposition upon a ground not thus far mentioned by gentlemen supporting the amendment, a ground, perhaps, which does not meet with approval by some gentlemen who are supporting it, and that is this:

If you are going to hold these lands out of local taxation, so that we can not locally tax them for the purpose of building roads, bridges, and other improvements mentioned in the paragraph, then vote the Forest Service the money wherewith to make these improvements. We have got to have them. We need them in our communities. We need roads and bridges in the forest-reserve States just as badly as you need them in other States, and if you are going to deny us the only means whereby you can build roads and bridges in the other States, to wit, the taxation of the real property, then I say in all fairness you ought to appropriate the necessary amount, and Heaven knows even $500,000 would be a very small amount to expend annually to build roads and bridges upon 200,000,000 acres of land, an area five or six times as large as all the New England States combined.

Mr. WILLIS. And especially when it would take 15 years to complete the plan.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I have here a number of letters and petitions upon this subject, and I have a number of communications and petitions from commercial bodies, who are not asking the Federal Government to bear all this expense, but who only ask the Government to meet them half way and contribute half the amount of building or improving a road or trail, so as to connect these different communities. We know that no more necessary and beneficial expenditure can be made, and it is the principal thing that does not all go into salaries, clerk hire, and administrative expenditures generally.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I shall attach the communications and petitions which I have referred to, showing the strong demand for road work in localities affected by the national forests:

THE ARKANSAS, RIO GRANDE, GUNNISON & GRAND RIVER HIGHWAY ASSOCIATION,
December 15, 1911.

Hon. JOHN MARTIN,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: The inclosed resolutions are self-explanatory.

We believe that the concerted action of the Colorado delegation can secure for us a liberal appropriation for the improvement of the three passes indicated in the resolution.

The counties constituting the New Santa Fe Trail, Rainbow Route, and Holy Cross Way are manfully under the burden of constructing and maintaining such routes as will constitute first-class transcontinental highways across the State. The commissioners of each of the counties named have made extra levies for these purposes, and if the Forestry Department will assist in improving the routes as indicated it will be of the utmost benefit to the service, to say nothing of the help to the State of Colorado.

SALIDA, COLO., November 14, 1911.

Be it resolved by the Arkansas, Rio Grande, Gunnison & Grand River Highway Association, That the United States Forestry Bureau be requested to spend on the roads over each of Tennessee, Monarch, and Cochetopa Passes and the approaches thereto the sum of $15,000, same to be spent through their local forestry officials; be it further

Resolved, That our Senator and Representatives in Congress be requested to use all honorable means to accomplish this result; be it

Resolved, That the secretary of this association be required to furnish the United States Forestry Bureau and to our Senator and Representatives in Congress copies of this resolution.

Attest:

CHAS. R. McLAIN, President.

ASPEN, COLO., January 31, 1912.

Hon. JOHN A. MARTIN,
National Capitol, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: At a meeting of the Pitkin County Good Roads Association, held in Aspen on last evening, a resolution was unanimously adopted asking for your assistance in securing an appropriation to assist in building a road through the forest reserve from Twin Lakes to Aspen, and in which this community is vitally interested.

I am inclosing a copy of the resolutions and ask that you will give it your earnest and serious consideration.

Yours, very truly, T. S. HAWLEY,
Chairman pro tempore.

ASPEN, COLO., January 30, 1912.

Inasmuch as the highway across Independence Pass, from Twin Lakes to Aspen, supported by this association, lies wholly within the Mount Sopris National Forest Reserve, and has been officially declared to be a primary State road, and when built will form a link in one of the proposed transcontinental routes across the State of Colorado; and further,

As such road will furnish to the forest reserve an economical and ready way for the hauling of timber from the bordering mountains to the mining camps of Aspen, Leadville, and intermediate points, where now no timber is cut or transported on account of its inaccessibility; and as such road will give ready access for fire protection; and as

The Government, for these various reasons, will receive an equal benefit in having the same constructed, and as it appears to us that the cost of construction, approximating $60,000, is more than can be borne by the local interests to be benefited in part by this road: Now therefore be it

Resolved, That our Senator, the Hon. SIMON GUGGENHEIM, and our Representatives, the Hon. EDWARD T. TAYLOR, the Hon. JOHN A. MARTIN, and the Hon. A. W. RUCKER, be requested to use every effort to secure an appropriation from Congress of not less than $15,000 to be used in aiding the construction of this highway from Twin Lakes to Aspen over Independence Pass and across the forest reserve.

DURANGO, COLO., January 22, 1912.

Hon. JOHN A. MARTIN, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.

SIR: Inclosed herewith we beg to hand you a copy signed by the committee only of a petition by the mining men of La Plata County addressed to Senator GUGGENHEIM, asking that efforts be put forth to secure a Federal appropriation for the building of a wagon road through the Durango National Forest in this county to the La Plata Mountains, and on behalf of ourselves and all others interested in the La Plata Mountains we ask your cooperation in this effort.

The La Plata Mountain district is a long-neglected mineral empire. Ores of immense richness have recently been discovered in them. They are now being closely watched and investigated by the mining and investing public. The values are there, as has been proven. We had a road into them, but it was destroyed. They are now nearly inaccessible. We need this road, and need it badly; our county is financially unable to build it. Our opportunity for presenting to the world a great and undeveloped mineral empire is present, but we can not take advantage of it without this road. Federal assistance is our only hope.

We sincerely trust and ask that you will exercise your best efforts to secure this appropriation, and we will be pleased to promptly furnish you any information and data you may desire.

Respectfully, yours,

W. W. PARSHALL.

COLLBRAN, COLO., March 6, 1912.

Hon. J. A. MARTIN,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: At a mass meeting of the citizens of the Plateau Valley, held at the Georgia Mesa schoolhouse on Saturday, March 2, the inclosed resolutions were unanimously adopted, and I was directed to send copy of same to you with the request that you give the subject matter your careful attention. At this same meeting, which was attended by about 50 of the property holders of the valley, it was decided to at once commence the construction of a wagon road up Cottonwood Creek, from a point at Molina, where same will connect with the county road to Grand Junction, to the boundary of the Battlement Mesa Forest on Cottonwood Creek.

It was the unanimous feeling at this meeting that the Forest Service should undertake the construction of a road from the boundary of the reserve at least as far as Cottonwood Lakes. The people of this valley are stocking all of these lakes with fish, and this locality is the pleasure ground for all the citizens of the Grand Valley. At the present time there are no roads entering the Grand Mesa, except very primitive trails. The construction of a first-class road, suitable for all kinds of vehicles, including automobiles, is of the greatest importance to the people of this section, and we feel that the Forest Service should do its share in the construction of this road. We understand that funds are likely to be short, but if the Forest Service could be provided with $5,000 for expenditure this year on this project, it would enable them to at least carry the road to a point where people could reach the lakes, and it could be extended later.

Mr. Arthur C. Johnson, of Washington, is appointed a committee to represent our interests in this matter, and we would be glad to have you consult with him in regard thereto.

Very truly, yours, J. F. SHULTS,
Secretary, Collbran, Colo.

Whereas the people of Mesa County, Colo., are engaged upon the construction of a first-class wagon road up Plateau Creek, a tributary of the Grand River, and it is proposed to extend the said road up Cottonwood Creek to the boundary of the Battlement Mesa Forest; and

Whereas it is the desire of the citizens of said county to have the said road extended to the Cottonwood Lakes and across the Grand Mesa in said forest reserve, to a point where it will connect with a wagon road to Delta, on the south side of said mesa; and

Whereas the construction of this road will be of the greatest importance and convenience for the people of the Plateau Valley, as well as to the people of the said Mesa County and Delta County, as it will provide a means of communication between the Plateau Valley and the Gunnison River Valley, where now a detour of more than 100 miles is necessary, and will also enable the citizens of these counties to reach the pleasure grounds and fishing around the Cottonwood Lakes on said reserve: Therefore be it

Resolved, by the citizens of the Plateau Valley, in mass meeting assembled at the Georgia Mesa Schoolhouse on this Saturday, March 2, 1912, That we do respectfully urge our Senator and Representatives in Congress to take such action as will result in the Forest Service constructing a wagon road on Cottonwood Creek, in the Battlement Mesa Forest Reserve, to connect with the road now being constructed by the people of Mesa County, and that the said road be extended as far as Cottonwood Lakes at the earliest possible moment, and later be extended to the south side of the said Grand Mesa to a connection with some Delta County road.

Resolved, That the secretary of this meeting be instructed to send a copy of these resolutions to the Hon. SIMON GUGGENHEIM, Hon. E. T. TAYLOR, Hon. JOHN A. MARTIN, and Hon. A. W. RUCKER with a request that the matter be given their earnest attention.

THE BUENA VISTA BOARD OF TRADE,
Buena Vista, Colo., October 17, 1911.

Hon. JOHN A. MARTIN, Pueblo, Colo.

MY DEAR MARTIN: We of Colorado have a great time learning how to make roads. Would it not be possible, through you and Mr. TAYLOR, to get the Government interested enough to build a strip of road, say 3 miles, to conenct us with Taylor Park, where the Government is planning to build a large reservoir?

Buena Vista strongly desires to be the base of supplies for this enterprise, and to show our good faith we are now putting the road in good shape to the top of the range, but we want help to reconstruct the road down the other side. I understand the Government in some cases does this for the purpose of teaching the building of roads in difficult places; and besides, the road is a public one, and runs through the forest reserve.

Very truly, yours, ERNEST WILBUR.
President.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I want to call the attention of the committee to the fact that in the State of California alone there are 21,104,068 acres in the reserve, the largest of any

State in the Union. The total amount in the forest reserves is 168,165,163 acres. I want to call the attention of the committee particularly to the fact that in 1910 there was a loss to this Government, irretrievable, by virtue of forest fires, of $26,596,228. In the year preceding the loss amounted to a million dollars. This appropriation is for the purpose, as stated by the gentlemen who have preceded me, of building roads, for the purpose of building trails, for the purpose of building stations where the rangers may be on hand to protect these forests from fire. In the counties of California—and I have no doubt it is the same in Colorado and Arizona and other States—the local authorities are paying half of the expense for the roads through these national forests. They are expending their money side by side with the National Government that we may have public roads and public trails for the purpose of protecting the property of the Government and of protecting the individuals who are living within the reserves or the exterior boundaries as well as protecting the many towns that are within the exterior boundaries of these reserves. Only $500,000 is asked to protect property worth billions of dollars, the destruction of which in 1910 amounted to over $26,000,000. We are asking for an appropriation that the Government might assist in protecting its property, might at least be on hand to see that the private individuals who live adjacent to these forests and who live within the forests and the towns that have been built up within these forests may be protected in property and in life. We have had a history in the West of fires in 1910 where hundreds of people were destroyed simply because there were no roads, because there were no trails and no openings by which the fire could be stopped.

The Forest Service is doing splendid work in this way by opening trails for miles, cutting away the underbrush, so that if a fire should start with a man along this line you save your property, you protect the lives of your citizens. It is a small sum, $500,000, for the purpose of protecting this magnificent forest that we are all talking of conserving, and by means of which we are talking of conserving the watersheds, for the purpose of getting water for irrigation and navigation as well. Why should we stand here and refuse to give this department a sufficient amount of money to protect our property, to protect the lives of our citizens? This is not economy. We lost in one year $26,000,000 by the fire during that year. You could do no more gracious act, you could do no better thing than to give a sufficient amount of money and to give these people power to control, that you may keep that which nature has put there, and not permit it to be destroyed by the hand of man or the act of God. In investigating these fires, you will find that two-thirds, possibly three-fourths of them, are caused by lightning, and with the men on the trail, and on the road, in five minutes they are stopped, with the view stations they have on the mountains, from which they are able to see 5, 10, and 20 miles. In two hours from the time of the starting of the fire a man is there, and that fire has been stopped, whereas without the trails, without the roads, without the ranger stations, which would cost you only a hundred dollars or a thousand dollars, you will have lost in a day or in a week, a million dollars' worth of property. That is not economy.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, at one time and another in years past I have criticized the expenditures of the Forestry Service. Sometimes I have criticized those expenditures, gentlemen have thought, rather severely. I think those criticisms were justified. My criticisms, however, were directed to expenditures for services I thought not directly connected with or necessary to the care and the preservation of the reserves. I want to congratulate the committee and the Forestry Service in that they have reduced this year the general expenditure under the head of salaries some $35,000.

But I want to call the attention of the committee to the fact that this is altogether a different sort of expenditure. This is the only expenditure under the Forest Service in this bill which goes directly to the present preservation and the immediate improvement of this Government property. It provides for roads, trails, bridges, fire lanes, telephone lines, cabins, fences, and other improvements necessary for the proper and economical administration, protection, and development of the national forests.

Mr. Chairman, several of these forests are from 100 to 150 miles in length and are from 25 to 50 miles in width. Portions of the reserves are heavily timbered. Portions of the reserves are occupied by settlers and people engaged in various occupations, developing the industries of the country. Those reserves must be protected, and it is absolutely essential for their protection that fire lanes or lines shall be cut. It came out in the hearings that we had—the investigations after the great fires of two years ago—that on some of the great reserves in the Northwest there were no fire lanes or lines whatever; that after a fire started there was nothing on earth but the providential interposition of a rainfall that could prevent the spread of that fire and prevent it from consuming all of the forest in which it started. It is absolutely essential for the protection of the Government's property that these fire lanes and lines should be cut. The committee has reduced an emergency appropriation of $1,000,000 for putting out fires to $200,000, I believe.

Mr. LAMB. We did not use but $22,000 of it last year.

Mr. MONDELL. It is possible that that emergency appropriation might not be needed, but the only way to so adjust these matters that the emergency appropriations shall not be needed is to increase this appropriation to the amount that the department asks, in order that we may take those measures of protection necessary to prevent the spread of fires once they are started.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I have called attention to the great extent of these reserves, stretching across the country for a hundred miles or more in some cases—an unbroken line of Government forest reserves, part forested and part unforested. The people who live in those reserves, the people who live on either side of them, find it necessary to pass through and across them continuously. If the reserves are going to be safeguarded in the interests of all the people we must have the fire lanes, we must have the telephone lines, we must have the trails, we must have the roads, we must have the bridges, and if the people living in the locality are to have the opportunity of getting across and about the reserves these roads and bridges and trails must be built. Otherwise the reserves will remain indefinitely great barriers to development, great Government reservations across which it is impossible for the people to pass in the development either of the reserves themselves or of the adjacent country. I think the committee could, perhaps, have very properly reduced the appropriation for salaries much more than they did. I believe that the present management of the Forest Service is making a very honest and intelligent effort to reduce expenditures for salaries and I have no criticism to make of what the committee did in that regard, but there is no justification from anybody's standpoint in the reduction by nearly half of the only appropriation carried in the bill which protects the Government's property, which opens the reserves for use, and which makes it possible for the people of the locality to use and enjoy them. Certainly Congress does not expect the Forest Service to protect the reserves from fire without the means of protecting them, and anyone who knows about a forest fire or a prairie fire, for that matter, knows that a fire once started and under heavy headway can not be stopped except with a back fire made against some barrier, and unless there is a noncombustible barrier like a fire lane you can not get men enough on a reserve to check the progress of a great head fire or top fire going through these forests.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I may have five minutes more.

Mr. LAMB. My dear sir, we must finish this bill some time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent for five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MONDELL. In view of the fact that the Forest Service states that until recently it did not have sufficient appropriations to enable it to carry on as it should the work of making fire lanes——

Mr. LAMB. My friend ought not to make this statement. We have appropriated $625,000 for this work. We appropriate $150,000 outright, we give an emergency fund of $200,000, and we give them this $275,000, which is $625,000.

Mr. MONDELL. The chairman of the committee quotes a lot of very large figures that I do not think available for the purposes of this item.

Mr. LAMB. What I have stated is the fact.

Mr. MONDELL. I repeat what I said a moment ago that this is the only appropriation in this bill that can be used for the purpose of providing measures of immediate protection and utilization. There is not another dollar in the bill that can be used directly for those important purposes. And this is, therefore, the most important of all the items in the bill. But it is the one that the committee has proceeded to cut down nearly 50 per cent.

Mr. LAMB. Does my friend bear in mind when he is making these arguments—and he has expression down fine—that we have provided for this special work the sum that was allowed two years ago, viz, $275,000.

Mr. MONDELL. When I have a good cause I can make an argument.

Mr. LAMB. Maybe that is the reason the gentleman is not doing so well now. Does he know that there have been 9,000,000 acres of this forest land turned back to the States, that there has been 1,000,000 acres of it converted into homesteads in the last two years, and that each year the necessity for larger appropriations is not so great? We claim that $275,000 is sufficient for this work.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, the transfer of a few millions of acres clipped from the outer edges of reserves, generally of land that ought never to have been in reserves, land that is nontimbered—for they have not excluded any timberland from the reserves—the exclusion of such land from the reserves in no manner lessens the necessity for this appropriation, and the taking of homesteads in the reserves, instead of lessening the obligation on the part of the Government or necessity on the part of the Government to do the things provided for in this item, increases the demand and the necessity, for the more you settle the reserves, the more industries you have within the reserves, the greater the danger of fire, the greater the necessity for roads, trails, and bridges and telephone lines. The service has had this appropriation for a year—the present amount. It has been impossible with this appropriation for the service to more than make a beginning, much less to complete, a systematic, orderly cutting of fire lines. They have just begun the construction of roads and trails. The work is well organized and is now under way. And I want to call the attention of the members of the committee to the fact that if the forest-reserve policy of the Government is to stand, the Government must do this work. It must do it, first, because if the forests are to be consumed Congress will not continue to pass appropriations for the protection of dead timber. And if the forested areas are not to be prepared for use, then Congress will decline to maintain in those Western States great areas that can not be used and that can not be utilized. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, the committee decreased the appropriation in this item $225,000 upon the theory that the work of the permanent improvement of the forests of the country was a work which must necessarily go along slowly. The testimony before the committee is to the effect that if we were to spend $500,000 a year it would take anywhere from 15 to 20 years to complete a system of trails, telephones, bridges, and roads throughout the national forests, adequate to even an approximate protection of the forests.

We figured from the standpoint of the construction of roads in our own States, many of us; I am sure I did. I figured that if we were to build a system of roads in South Carolina in one year it would practically bankrupt my State. Legislators dealing with a proposition of this kind must necessarily take into consideration the fact that a public improvement involving the appropriation of millions and millions of dollars must necessarily go along gradually. Every member of the Committee on Agriculture, every member of this Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, would desire it, if it were possible, that there should be placed in the national forests at one fell swoop, as it were, a complete system of roads, trails, and bridges. But there is not a man, either of this committee or of the Committee on Agriculture, who believes that such a proposition is possible at one time. It is impossible; we must go at this matter slowly and in a reasonable way.

Mr. Chairman, the appropriation for this purpose has been a variable appropriation since I have been a Member of Congress. I find that in 1909 the appropriation for the construction, maintenance of roads, bridges, fire lines, telephone lines, cabins, fences, and other improvements necessary for the proper and economical administration and the benefit of the national forests amounted to $510,000. Following that, in 1910, the Committee on Agriculture recommended an appropriation of $600,000. Then, in 1911, a more economcal spirit struck the committee, and for that purpose the appropriation was reduced to $275,000. That was the year before last. This is the amount carried in the present bill. In 1912, following that terrific fire in Montana and Idaho, a fire which for intensity has never been equaled, as we understand from the testimony, in the history of this country, the committee recommended the sum of $500,000. And this year the Forestry Bureau asks for an appropriation of $500,000.

Now, gentlemen direct attention to the great fire in 1910, and appeal to the committee on the ground that the only way to prevent a recurrence of such calamities is by making these large appropriations; that does not follow.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I may proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER] asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Graves, in his testimony before the committee, answering a question of mine, says:

> No; of course we hope we will never have another recurrence of such a fire. It was a very exceptional year, and it was to provide in the bill for an emergency of that kind, perhaps, rather than put us in a position of having to come to Congress for a deficiency, which prompted us to insert that in the bill last year for an emergency.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from South Carolina yield to the gentleman from California?

Mr. LEVER. Certainly.

Mr. RAKER. Before the gentleman gets away from that point, will he inform us of the fact that this year the mountains are practically bare, so far as snow is concerned, and such a thing has not occurred in 40 years, and that the fires are now beginning on these national forests—something unheard of in 40 years?

Mr. LEVER. Well, Mr. Chairman, that suggestion does not answer this proposition, for the reason that if we appropriated to-day this $500,000 not one penny of it would become available until the end of this fiscal year, and not one single dollar of it could be used for the purpose of building the trails and other improvements necessary for protection against the bad conditions which seem to exist in the western forests at the present time. I believe that answers the gentleman's question.

But, reverting again to these fires, the testimony before the committee in 1911 says:

> The Weather Bureau, I think, has had records from 1870, and we base that statement on these records, and the statement is that this fire was the greatest fire in the history of this country.

Such a fire as that is not likely to occur again in the next half century, and we can not afford to be swept off our feet by the sentimental argument that by these fires millions of dollars were lost and a number of lives were lost. It is necessary for us to appropriate in a reasonable way for an adequate protection of these forests by the appropriation of a reasonable amount for trails, telephones, and the like of that.

Now, gentlemen of the committee must not fail to bear in mind that the appropriations for the national forests have been increased in the last 10 years at an enormous rate. Let us see how these have increased to show why a halt is necessary. In 1908 the appropriation, I find, was $2,400,000. It was increased in the year 1909 by $1,496,000, and in 1910 it was again increased by $750,000. In 1911 it was increased by $361,000. In 1912 it was increased by $425,000. In the course of four years the appropriation for this service has been increased $3,133,000, in round figures.

The Committee on Agriculture feels that it has dealt generously with this service, and the committee does not underestimate either the value of the national forests or the duty of Congress to provide for their adequate protection. But we believe that with $275,000 the Forestry Service can make reasonable progress in the way of protecting the forests.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to call your attention to the fact that——

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there, before he passes from this subject?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from South Carolina yield to the gentleman from South Dakota?

Mr. LEVER. Yes.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I would say to the gentleman that I was very much interested in the statement made by him in giving the figures as to the increases of the appropriation. Can the gentleman inform us as to whether the forestry area had increased materially during these years; and if so, to what extent?

Mr. LEVER. The gentleman is absolutely correct in the idea that the area of the forests has increased, but just to what extent I am not able to say, though that information is easily available if I could put my hands upon it. Continuing, I desire to call the attention of the committee to a statement of the Chief Forester as to the length of time and the amount of work necessary to be done for the complete protection of our forests.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. LAMB. Mr. Chairman, I ask that my colleague have two or three minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. LAMB] asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from South Carolina may have three minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Graves, in his testimony before the committee last year, makes this statement, which shows the enormity of the undertaking and the necessity of dealing with it gradually and reasonably rather than going at it in too big jumps at one time:

I have an estimate of the construction work which is necessary for the primary control of fires. That includes 6,700 miles of roads, and the testimony is to the effect that it costs about $91.31 a mile to build the kind of roads that they are building in the national forests, and 22,000 miles of trails and about 10,000 miles of fire lines and over 16,000 miles of telephone lines, and so on, which must be built before we have a grip even on the situation. This amount of work must be done before you get even the least grip upon the situation.

That statement does not bear out the theory that this amount of work will protect the forests, but does bear out the idea that the work can not be done in a day or a year. Mr. Graves is a very conservative man, and one of the ablest men in the service, in my judgment—a man who is going to grow in the esteem of this House as we come to know him better and better. [Applause.] He says further:

The entire list amounts altogether to nearly $8,000,000. Now that work can not be done in a year. I do not think it would be desirable for Congress, if it wanted to do so, to hand over to the Forest Service $8,000,000 in one year. I do not think we are organized so that we can develop the work as fast as that. It ought to be stretched over five, six, or eight years; but of course it has got to be done before you have complete access to the forests and the means of controlling fire.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from South Carolina yield to the gentleman from Wyoming?

Mr. LEVER. I will yield in a moment. Mr. Graves tells of a trip which he took to British India, where they have the best system of fire protection of any country except Germany, perhaps, and he says they can not control the fires over all the forests of British India at one time; that they begin on a selected list, and put them under protection, and then the next year they will take on a little more area, and the next year a little more, and so on, until the whole is covered. This is the proper system, in my judgment, and it was the idea of the committee that it was wise to follow old and established customs which prompted it to try to make this appropriation a reasonable one and in keeping with well-defined practices in forestry control. The committee had in mind the fact that the best forestry systems in the world recognize that on these propositions of the permanent improvements we must necessarily go slowly.

Mr. MONDELL. As I understand, the Forester suggests that this work could be done in a systematic and economic way in eight or nine years.

Mr. LEVER. He says in six or eight years.

Mr. MONDELL. On the basis of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] it would require 16 years to do the work. Certainly that is not unreasonable. We are proposing to spread it over nearly three times the number of years suggested by the Forester.

Mr. LEVER. That is true, and if we can complete the permanent improvement of these forests in 25 years we will have done a great service to the country and to posterity. I hope the gentleman's amendment will be voted down. [Applause.]

Mr. LAMB. I move that all debate on this paragraph and amendments thereto close in five minutes.

Mr. MANN. I ask for a division on that motion, and pending that I suggest to the gentleman that he give us a longer time than that. Several gentlemen on this side desire to speak on the subject.

Mr. LAMB. Several gentlemen may want to speak, but we can not take two or three weeks more on this bill. We have not moved a particle from where we were the other evening.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The people who live on these forest reserves ought to have a chance to be heard.

Mr. LAMB. They have been heard; but I will make it 10 minutes instead of 5.

Mr. LOUD. Make it 15 minutes. I want 5 minutes.

Mr. MANN. Make it 15 minutes.

Mr. LAMB. Gentlemen seem to have just begun this fight. The Lord knows what they will do if we give them too much leeway.

Mr. LEVER. I think that those on this side who represent the committee should have 2 minutes out of the 15 minutes.

Mr. MANN. Make it 17 minutes.

Mr. LAMB. No; 15 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia moves that debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 15 minutes.

The question being taken, the motion was agreed to.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, I do not think there will be any difference of opinion on the statement that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], the leader of the minority in this House, has a consistent record for economy and for wise and judicious expenditure of the public money. This amendment is offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] who, as I have stated, is not given to extravagance in voting for appropriations in this House. I venture the assertion that he had no other thought in mind in offering the amendment except the good of the public service, because Illinois is not interested directly in this proposition.

We have not only the testimony of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER], representing this committee, as to the efficiency and faithfulness of Mr. Graves, who heads the Bureau of Forestry, but it is the universal opinion on both sides of the Chamber that a more conscientious, faithful, and efficient public official is not at the head of any bureau of this Government than the present Forester. If he is efficient and has the good of the service at heart, why not follow that proposition a little further and say that he should have what he has appealed to this committee for—a sufficient amount of money to protect the Government interests in the faithful and efficient administration of his important bureau?

Shall the Members of this House accept the statements of the members of this committee, who are not charged with the direct administration of that trust, in preference to the opinion under oath of Mr. Graves, who has every detail of this work in hand, and whose reputation as a public official is for careful and effective use of the money voted by previous Congresses, to carry out the excellent and valuable work of his bureau?

I venture the assertion that if this reduced appropriation becomes a law not one dollar of it will be expended in the great area of the South, in the Appalachian region where, so far, more than 100,000 acres have been purchased at the cost of $1,200,000.

Mr. LAMB. Why does the gentleman say that?

Mr. AUSTIN. If any portion of it is used there then it must come as a sacrifice, at the cost of the efficiency of the service in the Western States, where the national reserve is scattered over thousands of miles.

Mr. LAMB. The gentleman must know that these units of forest have not yet been apportioned in the Appalachian Reserve because comparatively small areas of land have yet been purchased.

Mr. AUSTIN. I make that prediction after a talk with the gentleman's colleague, and one who is actively aiding him in putting this bill through the House, that there is no understanding and no promise and no assurance anywhere that a dollar of this money will be used for the care and protection of the Appalachian Reserve—30,000 acres in Georgia, 80,000 acres in Tennessee, 25,000 acres in North Carolina, and 25,000 acres in Virginia, scattered through four States, and in some instances 80 miles apart.

Mr. LAMB. The gentleman from South Carolina can answer on that subject. We appropriate $30,000——

Mr. AUSTIN. There is no promise, either from the committee or from the Forestry Bureau, that any part of the appropriation will be used in the construction of telephone lines, trails, roads, or bridges in the Appalachian Reserve.

Mr. LEVER. Let me say to my friend from Tennessee [Mr. AUSTIN] that the Forestry Service has full authority to use every dollar that is required to be spent in building trails, telephone lines, and all that.

Mr. AUSTIN. But to give authority and to give the money to do it are two different propositions.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Chairman, I would that every Member on this floor could realize what a forest fire means and what the result of a forest fire can be. The gentleman from South Carolina has said that the last large forest fire occurred in 1910. I am sure he is mistaken. Let me explain. On the morning of the 11th day of last July, just eight months ago to-day, I lived in a thriving community of 3,000 people, with splendid business industries—a happy, prosperous people. The two towns comprising this community (Au Sable and Oscoda) are located on the shore of Lake Huron. We have a forest reserve right to the west of the town. On that day, eight months ago to-day, a forest fire came in from the westward, the burning embers carried by wind blowing 50 miles an hour. Our fire department did their utmost to stop it, but it was useless. The burning embers, carried by the fierce wind, were scattered over the towns, setting fire so fast that no human being could avert the danger. In only four hours the two towns of Oscoda and Au Sable, adjoining each other on opposite sides of the Au Sable River where it flows into Lake Huron, were wiped off the face of the map. Three million dollars went up in flames as the result of this forest fire. Four people were burned to death, and 2,500 people were turned out in three hours' time, homeless and destitute, many of them with nothing in the world left, not even clothing, save the scant clothing worn that summer day. All that night most of them lay on the beach of Lake Huron, unprotected from the cold wind that had changed to the northward, and without a morsel to eat.

Would that I had time to tell the touching story of how the generous people of the neighboring towns and all over Michigan quickly and bountifully responded to alleviate the distress of the stricken community. God forbid that any one of you should ever pass through such an experience, but I would that each of you who oppose this bill could have been there to see the results of a forest fire. While I lost that day a large portion of the accumulation of 40 years' work, my home and all it contained, my loss was as nothing compared with the losses of the poor people who lost their homes and all they had in the world.

The amendment now before this House asks that for the fire protection of the entire forest reserves in the United States $500,000 be appropriated. I hope every one of you will vote for it to the end, perhaps, that no other community in the United States shall ever suffer as my home community suffered that day. I appeal to each of you that you give favorable consideration and your vote for this amendment.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. Chairman, we have heard in the last two or three years a great deal said throughout the United States about State conservation and National conservation. Out in our Northwest country it has become, and is to-day, a leading question, a burning issue, and while, when we get down to the legal points and constitutional phases, there may not be much that can be said in favor of State conservation where National resources are concerned, yet from the viewpoint of justice we have all got to admit that there can be a great deal said. Out in the West they have set aside large areas as forest reserves. The gentleman from Colorado [Mr. MARTIN] said one-fourth of the area of his State is in forest reserves, and in other States there are almost equally as large areas. I submit that that property belongs to the Government, and admit that the Government should have a right to do what it pleases with its own; but, as a moral question, has the Government of the United States any right to go into a sovereign State and set aside large areas of forest and then not adequately provide that reserve with roads and lanes for fire protection, which would safeguard property adjacent, belonging to private individuals and the citizens of that State, from being destroyed, and making possible such a harrowing disaster as has happened in the State of my colleague from Michigan [Mr. LOUD]? In my State we have not only been troubled with forest reserves, which are under national control, but also with Indian reservations, the National Government acting so slowly in providing for roads and trails through forests and also through Indian reservations that the country's growth is actually retarded by the dilatory tactics of the National Government. This is not altogether a question of dollars and cents; it should be a question of expediency, of moral obligation. I say that you people in this Eastern country and in the Middle West can not realize what we out in that great Northwest, where the principal part of these forest reserves are located, are up against, and I sincerely hope, if you intend cutting down the emergency fund, that every dollar of it you cut off you will add to this permanent fund, which we so badly need. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Chairman, let us have the amendment again reported.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be again reported.

There was no objection, and the Clerk again reported the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. LEVER) there were—ayes 65, noes 51.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and the Chair appointed Mr. MANN and Mr. LAMB to act as tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 74, noes 70.

So the amendment was agreed to.

BUREAU OF CHEMISTRY.

Salaries, Bureau of Chemistry: One chemist, who shall be chief of bureau, $5,000; 1 chief clerk, $2,000; 1 executive clerk, $2,000; 5 clerks, class 4; 7 clerks, class 3; 1 clerk, $1,440; 12 clerks, class 2; 1 clerk, $1,300; 18 clerks, class 1; 13 clerks, at $1,020 each; 11 clerks, at $1,000 each; 18 clerks, at $900 each; 1 clerk, $840; 1 assistant property custodian, $900; 1 chief food and drug inspector, $3,000; 1 food and drug inspector, $2,250; 9 food and drug inspectors, at $2,000 each; 13 food and drug inspectors, at $1,800 each; 1 food and drug inspector, $1,620; 11 food and drug inspectors, at $1,600 each; 8 food and drug inspectors, at $1,400 each; 2 laboratory helpers, at $1,200 each; 1 laboratory helper, $1,020; 4 laboratory helpers, at $1,000 each; 4 laboratory helpers, at $960 each; two laboratory helpers, at $900 each; 6 laboratory helpers, at $840 each; 2 laboratory helpers, at $780 each; 20 laboratory helpers, messengers, or laborers, at $720 each; 2 laboratory helpers, messengers, or laborers, at $660 each; 24 laboratory helpers, messengers, or laborers, at $600 each; 1 laboratory assistant, $1,200; 1 tool maker, $1,200; 1 janitor, $1,020; 1 student assistant, $300; 2 messengers, at $840 each; 1 skilled laborer, $1,050; 1 skilled laborer, $840; 2 messenger boys or laborers, at $540 each; 8 messenger boys or laborers, at $480 each; 3 messenger boys or laborers, at $420 each; 1 messenger boy or laborer, $360; 6 charwomen, at $240 each; in all, $254,660.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order on page 48, line 20, to the increase of salary of the inspector from $2,760 to $3,000.

Mr. LAMB. Mr. Chairman, I will just make this statement: The services of this official fully warrant this salary, as the efficiency of the entire inspection force under the food and drugs act depends upon his executive ability and initiative. The promotion is not only justified by qualifications and high abilities demanded in the successful discharge of the duties of this office, but by the additional work imposed upon this official by increased appropriations during the last few years. Mr. Chairman, I concede the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. LAMB. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by substituting the words "two thousand seven hundred and sixty dollars" for the amount stricken out in line 20, page 48.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Line 20, page 48, after the word "inspector" insert the words "two thousand seven hundred and sixty dollars."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend that amendment by striking out the word "dollars." The word "dollars" is already there, and if the amendment is agreed to there will be two "dollars" following one another, which is unnecessary.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order was made against the words "three thousand dollars," and those words were stricken out. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Enforcement of the food and drugs act: For enabling the Secretary of Agriculture to carry into effect the provisions of the act of June 30, 1906, entitled "An act for preventing the manufacture, sale, or transportation of adulterated, or misbranded, or poisonous, or deleterious foods, drugs, medicines, and liquors, and for regulating traffic therein, and for other purposes," in the city of Washington and elsewhere, including chemical apparatus, chemicals and supplies, repairs to apparatus, gas, electric current, official traveling expenses, telegraph and telephone service, express and freight charges, and all other expenses, employing such assistants, clerks, and other persons as may be considered necessary for the purposes named, and rent outside of the District of Columbia, $625,000: Provided, That of this sum the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized to expend not exceeding $5,000 for the purchase of all right, title, and interest in and to the Marsh test for detecting artificial coloring matter in whisky, the same being covered by letters patent 813728, which payment shall include full satisfaction for any and all use that may have heretofore been made of the said process by the United States.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order on the proviso beginning on line 23, page 51.

Mr. LAMB. Mr. Chairman, I concede the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. At this point in the bill it had been my intention to offer an amendment providing that no part of this sum appropriated should be expended to pay the salaries and expenses of the Referee Board. In that connection I desire to make a statement. Three years ago I made an argument upon the legality of the appointment of the Referee Board and was voted down upon the proposition by the House. I believed then and I believe now that there is no authority in law for the appointment of such a board. The Attorney General of the United States, however, has found differently. A committee of this Congress, charged with the duty of the investigation and report upon the matter to the House, has reported differently. I do not in any wise surrender my former belief as to the legality of the creation of this board, but I have felt that the amendment which I intended to offer was an amendment too important, too sweeping, too widespread in its various reachings out to be placed upon an appropriation bill, where consideration of the entire subject was necessarily limited and restricted. I do not believe in that kind of legislation. The pure-food law was enacted for the purpose of protecting the consumer against adulterations and misbrandings of the foods which the people of the country buy and eat. There was no disposition in the enactment of that law, as I understand it, to hamper the manufacturers and purveyors of foods, beyond the point of compelling them to properly brand their foods, and to prevent them from adulterating them. I do not believe that it is the judgment of the House, and it certainly is not my judgment, that any one man in this country should be given the power over the manufacturer or consumer of the foodstuffs of the country, and I have believed for a long time that there should be created by law, and not by Executive order, as is the case of the Referee Board, a board or commission within the Department of Agriculture with functions fully set out and defined by law, and not functions or jurisdiction made by the order of the Executive or the Secretary of Agriculture. I do not believe that Congress should submit to the proposition for a moment of turning over to Executive order and Executive authority a question so large as this.

I believe it would be at this time unfortunate for the future enforcement of the pure-food law if we should abolish the Remsen Board. It is better, in my judgment, that this board shall continue until it has completed the investigations which it was called upon to investigate by the President in his order creating it. So I have concluded in my own mind, with this statement, not to offer this amendment, which at first I had intended to offer, not because I do not have confidence in the Chief of the Bureau of Chemistry—for I do have confidence in him, regarding him, as I do, as one of the great men in this country, responsible in a large measure for pure-food legislation—yet I feel the chief of the bureau himself recognizes the enormous powers put into his hands by the pure-food law. Personally and tentatively I should like to see a board created by law, with its duties set out by legal enactment and not by Executive order, which shall be the final court of appeal—the final court of scientific appeal, if you want to so term it—upon propositions of the misbranding of food and its adulteration.

Perhaps I would not agree to the personnel of the Remsen Board, although I do not question either the integrity of that board or its great ability from an expert and scientific point of view. If I were creating the board involving this great proposition of the proper sale and branding of foodstuffs in this country, I should likely make the personnel consist of a couple of chemists, a couple of business men selected from private life, and a medical doctor—a pathologist. I would make the personnel consist of that class of men whose business has made it necessary for them to see beyond one small direction.

The personnel of the present board is composed of highly scientific men, who probably do not see the various phases of this question. I believe it is the duty of Congress to prepare legislation and act upon it which shall set out in detail the duties of some kind of a board or commission in the Department of Agriculture which shall have the final expert decision upon all of these disputed questions arising under the enforcement of the pure-food law. I am not willing, I say frankly, after three years of consideration of this subject, that any one man—and I am not going back on my former position when I say that—shall have the absolute power to say that a certain foodstuff shall or shall not be sold in this country. My contention three years ago, as my friend from California [Mr. KAHN] will bear out, was that this board had not been created legally, that its functions had not been set out by law, and that the proper thing for Congress to do was to put its foot upon executive orders creating commissions in this Government, the effect of whose work might be to hamper the enforcement of a law passed by the Congress of the United States. From that position I have not wavered one iota, and do not now waver upon it. I am pleading for an orderly way, set out by metes and bounds of legislative action as to how this board shall be created and what its duties, functions, and responsibilities are. That is all there is to my contention. It is the same fight I made three years ago, when this proposition was first discussed upon the floor of the House. I then protested against executive legislation, and I now protest against it as strongly as I did then. I am only keep in mind the practical effects.

Mr. COOPER. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. LEVER. Yes; I will yield.

Mr. COOPER. I observe with interest that the gentleman said if he had the appointing of the board the personnel would not be as it is now, but it would include business men. Would the gentleman include as business men on the board some of the manufacturers of foodstuffs?

Mr. LEVER. I do not hesitate to say to my friend from Wisconsin that I see absolutely no objection to a manufacturer being on this board. I believe that this country is big enough to deal with this proposition in a big way.

Mr. COOPER. Will the gentleman permit me to say one thing? What would an average manufacturer know about what was in the product of any other manufacturer? How could he tell anything about it unless he were an expert chemist?

Mr. LEVER. My answer to that is that there is not a big food manufacturing concern in this country that does not have amongst its employees the highest type of and most skillful chemists.

Mr. COOPER. Exactly. Have all of these manufacturing establishments which have been putting out adulterated food expert chemists in their employ?

Mr. LEVER. I think so.

Mr. COOPER. And would you have one of those manufacturers, who employed a chemist and put out that sort of food, on a board?

Mr. LEVER. I would not. I should leave that to the discretion of the appointing power.

Mr. COOPER. If you had a business man who did not know how to ascertain the constituent elements of a product he would have to rely on the statements of somebody else, would he not?

Mr. LEVER. A business man on this board would be up against this kind of a proposition: He would listen to the advice of the chemist upon that board. He would see it, perhaps, from a broader viewpoint than the average expert in any line of work. Not only that, but it would be within the province of the business man to pass judgment upon whether or not a certain proposition was misbranded.

Mr. HELM. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from South Carolina yield to the gentleman from Kentucky?

Mr. LEVER. I yield.

Mr. HELM. I understood the gentleman a moment ago to say that he was in favor of a body to correspond more or less to a court of appeals in such matters as this?

Mr. LEVER. Scientific and expert appeals.

Mr. HELM. Scientific and expert. Now, we have an Interstate Commerce Commission, and a recent Congress created a Court of Commerce. Your proposition is somewhat analogous, as I understand you. Do you think that that Court of Commerce in that bureau, which corresponds very much to the court, board, or commission that I presume you have in mind, has weakened or strengthened the interstate-commerce act?

Mr. LEVER. I may say to my friend, if I may have a moment to answer his question, that I do not have in mind the creation of any kind of a court. I believe that still the courts of the United States should pass upon these matters, as is provided in the pure-food law, as to the adulteration and misbranding of food products, but I want some legislative enactment which will clearly define the relative duties and responsibilities of all who are connected with the enforcement of this great statute. I do not want any more Executive-made legislation on such an important matter as the food supply of the country, and this idea which I have in mind would be of assistance and an improvement over the court on a great many disputed questions.

Mr. HELM. Do you think the Court of Commerce has weakened or strengthened the interstate-commerce act? And may not the board or commission that you have referred to operate in like manner on the pure-food laws?

Mr. LEVER. I will say to my friend that I am not discussing that proposition now and really have not given any consideration to it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South Carolina has expired.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I may be allowed to proceed for 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent to be allowed to proceed for 10 minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I was glad to hear the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER] say that he did not believe any one individual should be given the great power which is given under the pure food and drugs act to the Chief of the Bureau of Chemistry, without having some board of high authority to review the findings of the chief of the bureau. The Referee Board, or the Remsen Board, as it is popularly called, was appointed by President Roosevelt as a consequence of a condition that prevailed in the State of California with regard to the use of sulphur in the process of drying fruit. There were other questions that were then in controversy, notably the use of benzoate of soda as a preservative, but I believe that it was the use of sulphur in the drying of fruit that brought the Referee Board into existence.

I want to say at the outset that I have a very high regard for the Chief of the Bureau of Chemistry. I believe that he has done a great work in this country. I believe that the people of the country appreciate it. And he is universally accorded the credit that is due him.

But in this matter of dried fruit he issued an order that the use of sulphur was deleterious to the health of the people if the quantity of the sulphur used was in excess of 350 milligrams to the kilogram of fruit. He had taken the matter up with the Solicitor of the Department of Agriculture, Mr. McCabe, and had at first held that 1,000 milligrams to the kilogram was the maximum amount that could be used with safety to the public health; that was not unsatisfactory to the fruit driers of California.

A few days afterwards he reduced the amount to 750 milligrams to the kilogram of fruit, and that was not altogether objectionable. A little later he reduced it to 500 milligrams to the kilogram of fruit, and finally to 350 milligrams of sulphur to the kilogram of fruit. Evidently the Chief of the Bureau of Chemistry was not certain as to just what amount of sulphur would be deleterious.

Germany, which probably is the most advanced country in the world so far as the science of chemistry is concerned, by statute law allows 1,250 milligrams of sulphur to be used to the kilogram of fruit in the process of drying. When an order was finally issued by the Chief of the Bureau of Chemistry that sulphur in excess of 350 milligrams to the kilogram of fruit was deleterious, the fruit driers of California realized that their industry would be ruined if such an order was enforced, and they appealed to the President of the United States and to the Secretary of Agriculture, who happened to be in California at that time, for relief against this drastic order, and as a consequence this Referee Board was appointed. Since then no further action has been taken by the Bureau of Chemistry in regard to the sulphuring of fruit, and we will be content to stand upon the findings of the Referee Board. Now, fruit is sulphured to prevent decay, to prevent the attacks of insects, and sometimes to bleach it. A small oven is built and a number of trays of fruit are put into this oven at a time, while the sulphur is kept burning at the bottom. The tray remains in the oven about an hour. When it comes out it is placed in the open air in the fields and is dried by the direct rays of the sun.

Mr. TOWNER. Will the gentleman allow a question?

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

Mr. TOWNER. I thought you intended to tell us, but omitted to do so—and, at least, I should like to know—what was the finding of the Referee Board.

Mr. KAHN. They have not yet rendered a decision in the matter. It is still pending. And, as I said, we are content to stand by whatever finding the board may make; but we realize that Germany, which, as I said a moment ago, is possibly further advanced than any other country in the world in chemical science, permits by law the use of 1,250 milligrams of sulphur to the kilogram of fruit.

Mr. TOWNER. What are your fruit growers doing now?

Mr. KAHN. They are proceeding as they did prior to the appointment of the Referee Board. The matter is in abeyance and the findings of the Referee Board will determine just what they can do in the future.

I believe that the appointment of the Remsen Board has been fully justified. The members of the board are recognized scientists, who stand high in their profession. They are conducting their experiments in a scientific manner and their findings will undoubtedly be generally accepted by the scientific world. Efforts have been made in some quarters to discredit the board. I do not think those efforts have been successful, as a rule. But that there was the absolute necessity for the appointment of the board is demonstrated by the hearings before the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Agriculture. Let me quote from page 891 of those hearings:

Mr. HIGGINS. From your investigation into the matter of foreign referee boards, are you able to express to the committee any opinion as to the relative cost of those boards abroad and here?

Secretary WILSON. Oh, they cost more than ours, for the reason that they take far more time and they deliberate much longer. The British board on tubercular germs in animals studied about 10 years, and, I think, it cost $375,000 to pay their expenses. All those great nations do that.

Mr. HIGGINS. Some reference has been made, Mr. Secretary, to the Coca Cola case at Chattanooga. That was a case in which the Government prosecuted the makers of Coca Cola?

Secretary WILSON. Yes.

Mr. HIGGINS. Did Dr. Wiley attend that trial?

Secretary WILSON. Yes.

Mr. HIGGINS. What was the result of the case?

Secretary WILSON. We got beaten.

Mr. HIGGINS. Have you any information gained through any investigation of that matter as to Dr. Wiley's declining to testify in that case?

Secretary WILSON. There is a letter that comes up from the Assistant Attorney General down there. I could read a paragraph of that.

Mr. HIGGINS. I wish you would read the letter.

Secretary WILSON. He says:

"I have tried in vain to evolve some plan whereby Dr. Wiley can be utilized on the stand. I have conferred with Mr. McConville most intimately on this point. Dr. Wiley's presence at the argument might be of some value. The argumentative stage will probably be reached Tuesday, and if he should leave Washington about 11 a. m. Monday, he would probably reach here at 10 a. m, Tuesday. Believe me, I would have utilized him if I could, and, you know, it was my personal desire to do so; but, while Dr. Wiley was in full accord with the Government, he expressly stated he could not qualify as a physiologist, a chemist, a toxicologist, a physiological chemist, pharmacologist, or a doctor of medicine to the satisfaction of either himself or the Government. Had you been situated as we were, I am sure you would not have introduced him."

Does that answer the question?

Mr. HIGGINS. Yes.

Secretary WILSON. This is a letter from W. B. Miller, special assistant, dated April 1, 1911.

Mr. HIGGINS. He was representing the Government as assistant?

Secretary WILSON. Representing the Department of Justice.

It will be observed that the letter from the special assistant to the Attorney General of the United States informs the Secretary of Agriculture that the head of the Bureau of Chemistry expressly stated that he could not qualify as a physiologist, a chemist, a toxicologist, a physiological chemist, pharmacologist, or a doctor of medicine to the satisfaction of either himself or the Government in the case in which the Government prosecuted the manufacturers of Coca Cola. In view of that fact, I believe the appointment of a Referee Board of acknowledged scientists was not only justified, but was absolutely necessary for the protection of the consumers as well as of the producers.

Mr. Chairman, we had another experience in California in regard to the branding of sherry and port wines made in the State of California. Our wine producers there labeled them distinctly "California port" and "California sherry." There was no question about the label showing clearly where the commodity was manufactured. There was no attempt to deceive. The word "California," printed in large type, plainly indicated the place of production. The head of the Bureau of Chemistry insisted that the word "type" must follow the word "port" or "sherry," so that the label should read "California port type" and "California sherry type." The California producers, anxious to comply with the rulings of the department, printed their labels accordingly. But the consequence of that was that when the California manufacturers put that word "type" upon their labels their goods were returned by their customers, for the customers said: "We do not want a 'type' of California port; we do not want a 'type' of California sherry; we want the genuine California port; we want the genuine California sherry."

But there was the order of the Food and Drugs Board, insisting upon the word "type" being on the label. Our manufacturers and producers asked for another hearing before that board, and finally, by order of Secretary Wilson, we succeeded in getting that hearing. We contended that that board had no more right to insist upon the label reading "California port type" or "California sherry type" than the hotel and restaurant keepers of this city or of any other city in this country should be compelled to put on their menu cards the words "Frankfurter sausage type," "Irish stew type," or "Vienna bread type," and so on. It would have been just as ridiculous, and perhaps more apt, to compel hotel and restaurant keepers to put on their bills of fare the word "type" in the description of those articles, because the Irish stew surely was not made in Ireland, the frankfurter sausage was not made in Frankfurt, and the Vienna bread was not made in Vienna. Your purveyors of these foods did not have to use the word "type" on their bills of fare, although the wine growers of California were compelled to use it in describing their ports and sherries.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to continue for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] asks unanimous consent to continue for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. KAHN. A full hearing was had and Secretary Wilson himself was present, acting in his capacity as ex officio member of the Food and Drugs Board; and, without leaving their seats, every one of the members of that board, except the Chief of the Bureau of Chemistry, decided that the word "type" should be stricken from the label. Dr. Wiley still insisted that the labels should bear that word. Of course, the majority of the board having decided that the word should be stricken from the label, that word has been stricken from the label ever since. The fact is that the language, "California port," does not deceive a single soul. Everybody knows where that port is made. There is no attempt made to deceive. The words "California sherry" simply show where the sherry is manufactured and produced. There is no attempt at deception.

I merely point out these instances to show that it would be a crime inflicted upon the business interests of the United States to give any one individual unlimited power in the enforcement of this law.

I am glad that the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER] did not undertake to make a point of order against this section or to offer an amendment to it. I am glad that he concedes the fact that it is too much power to place these important questions in the hands of any one man, and that therefore this board, or some other board similar in character, ought to be appointed by the President in order that the manufacturers—the legitimate manufacturers of this country, the honest manufacturers—might have some scientific body to which they could appeal if they felt that their business interests were being seriously jeopardized without any intention on their part to violate any of the laws of the land.

Mr. LEVER. My point is, if the gentleman from California will permit, that this board shall be authorized by an act of Congress rather than be appointed by Executive authority.

Mr. KAHN. I understand the gentleman's position in the matter, of course; but heretofore serious opposition has developed in this House against the Referee Board, and I am glad to see on this occasion that it is unanimously admitted that there should be such a board in order that honest, legitimate business should not be interfered with.

Mr. LEVER. And the gentleman should be fair enough to say that Dr. Wiley has insisted upon that himself, and he is so quoted in the hearings had before our committee.

Mr. KAHN. I am glad that is so. Any fair-minded man will agree to a proposition of that kind. The manufacturers of this country, or at least those of that section of the country where I live, are trying to do a legitimate and honest business. I think that Dr. Wiley has stated repeatedly that California wines are among the purest produced anywhere, and the simple fact that our wine growers have used the word "sherry" on their labels in a generic sense should not subject them to embarrassment. Lexicographers admit that such words as "port" and "sherry" are now used in a generic sense. It is only just that our wine growers should have had an appeal from Dr. Wiley's decision in regard to the word "type" on the label, in order that they might protect their business, which, I may say, is not an inconsiderable one. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn.

Mr. DUPRE. Mr. Chairman, I do not know the present head of the Bureau of Chemistry. I never have seen him. And while I have no sympathy with such vagaries as "autosuggestion," which he was reported to be advocating last summer when the thermometer was hovering around the century mark, or with the doctrine of "whole Democracy," which he announced some weeks ago, about the same time as another similarly rational blast was emitted at Columbus, Ohio [laughter], yet I do believe that he, as head of the Bureau of Chemistry, has rendered valuable services to the people of this country. I sincerely hope that he will long continue to render such services. They are infinitely more useful and beneficial than the more or less ornamental duties that a Vice President is called upon to discharge.

I will say, further, that I am not familiar with the merits of many of the controversies in which Dr. Wiley has been the central figure. I do not know much about benzoate of soda. I know little about "What is whisky?" But I do know something about the manufacture of Louisiana sirup and molasses, and I know that if Dr. Wiley's proposed regulations on that subject had been carried into effect the manufacture of these products in which sulphur is an essential would have been impossible.

I feel, therefore, that as between the final "ipse dixit" of Dr. Wiley or any other head of the Bureau of Chemistry and the required approval of the Secretaries of Agriculture and Commerce and Labor and of the Treasury, these latter officials, in the nature of things, not being chemists, there ought to be some intermediate scientific board to supervise and pass upon the findings of the head of the Bureau of Chemistry and to advise the Secretaries of Agriculture, of the Treasury, and of Commerce and Labor whether such findings are scientifically sound or whether they are merely the whimsical or arbitrary views of one man. The Remsen Board meets this requirement, and I am glad that the pending bill makes possible its continuance by providing an appropriation therefor. [Applause.]

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I understand that there are a number of gentlemen who wish to extend their remarks in the RECORD. I ask unanimous consent that permission be given to them.

Mr. MANN. That can not be done in Committee of the Whole. It can only be done by individual requests made separately.

Mr. LEVER. Then I will withdraw my request, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my pro forma amendment. The gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. DUPRE] has referred to the ipse dixit of Dr. Wiley, and the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] used almost the same idea. There is no doubt but that there is a prevailing opinion in the country that if the Referee Board were abolished Dr. Wiley would have the say as to what would constitute a food or a drug or whether a food or a drug was misbranded or adulterated.

There is nothing further from the truth, possibly. In the pure-food law no such autocratic power was given to Dr. Wiley or to anyone else. In the first place, if it is charged that a food is misbranded or adulterated an examination is made by the Bureau of Chemistry under regulations provided by three Secretaries—the Secretary of Agriculture, the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, and the Secretary of the Treasury. The Secretary of Agriculture is in close connection with those industries which relate to the production of articles from the soil, including agricultural and horticultural products in all of their diversification, and the Secretary of Commerce and Labor is in connection and communication with the manufacturing industries of the country, while the Secretary of the Treasury is connected with all the importations into the country. It is quite well guarded to begin with. In the second place, if the Bureau of Chemistry concludes that an article is misbranded or adulterated they do not determine the matter. It is not left to the determination of an autocrat to settle the question whether the article is misbranded or adulterated.

All the Government does in any event is to have a test of the matter made by the courts, where the person who wishes to maintain that his food is properly branded, or is not adulterated, has full opportunity to present his case before an unbiased court, the same as other people settle their controversies.

Mr. HAYES. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. HAYES. But in the case of such a trial in the court, the testimony of the department officials would of course be competent testimony, and in ordinary cases would be taken, would it not?

Mr. MANN. I presume it would be taken.

Mr. HAYES. Would it not be true that that testimony would outweigh, in the public mind and in the mind of an ordinary jury, any testimony that the defendant might offer?

Mr. MANN. I believe my distinguished friend from California is not a lawyer, or he would not ask that question. Of course it would not outweigh the testimony brought in behalf of the defendant, if the testimony brought in behalf of the defendant ought to prevail.

Mr. BARTLETT. Is it a fact that in the celebrated coca-cola case Dr. Wiley's opinion did not prevail?

Mr. MANN. In many cases Dr. Wiley's opinion has not prevailed. We gave the Department of Agriculture only the right to institute proceedings in court. Of course it is true, and we all realize without question, that the prosecution of a manufacturer or a wholesaler or a jobber or a retailer might do inestimable damage; but in such cases as that named by the gentleman from California, that as a rule is not true. It would have done no material damage to the producers of dried fruits to have their cases tried in court. All the damage that can be done is done by the assertion of some one——

Mr. KAHN rose.

Mr. MANN. I do not yield at present. I should like the opportunity to make a consecutive statement for a few moments.

Mr. DYER. I should like to ask the gentleman one question.

Mr. MANN. I shall be glad to answer it, if the gentleman will wait. The Department of Agriculture does not settle the question. When it takes a case into court, then it becomes a matter for the court to determine. Of course I understand the difficulty of determining, the getting of proper evidence to determine in court some of these controverting questions. The first controversy of great importance that came up was the one in relation to the blending of whisky, where there was a bitter controversy that probably is not yet disposed of. The different branches of the Government wrestled with that, from the Department of Agriculture to the Attorney General and two Presidents of the United States.

When there came up the question of the use of sulphur in the drying of fruits, President Roosevelt evidently concluded that it would be preferable to have a scientific body investigate the subject rather than for the President and the Attorney General to endeavor to determine whether sulphur was deleterious or not under the circumstances, and he appointed the Referee Board. I have never believed that the Referee Board was an illegal body. It was the intention of the pure-food law to give to the Department of Agriculture, or to the three Secretaries, or to the President, who presided over all of them, authority to determine, in the mind of the Government, first, whether there should be a prosecution. The prosecution would not settle the question, but the Government ought, first, before instituting a prosecution, to be fairly well satisfied that the article was either misbranded or adulterated. Some one may determine these questions offhand, and yet after the course of centuries, and after the discussion of these subjects for years, no one yet knows how far the use of sulphur in the drying of fruit is deleterious, or how far the use of benzoic acid or benzoate of soda in the preservation of food is deleterious. No one knows a great many other of these scientific problems, and probably no one will know for years to come.

Mr. MANN. The Supreme Court of the United States is the body which, in the ultimate conclusion, will settle the question so far as the law is concerned, and before that tribunal shall do that it is desirable to ascertain, through scientific methods, all the information that it is possible to obtain. It is not desirable to have food spoil for lack of preservative on the one hand, nor is it desirable, on the other hand, to use an article to preserve food which is distinctly injurious to the system when taken into the stomach in quantities necessary for the preservation of the food.

The original proposition in the pure-food bill was to create a board. In the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce that proposition was changed so as to name the character of persons who should constitute the board, naming certain chemists, physiological and otherwise. In conference that provision went out, and the reason it was put out was not because any one opposed obtaining the information, but because gentlemen who were opposed to it believed that it gave the Government too much power when it came into court; that if we constituted a scientific body on behalf of the Government in this way to settle these questions and to fix a standard, as was provided in the bill, when they should go into court and state that they had fixed a standard it would, as suggested by the gentleman from California about another matter, have too much weight in the determination of the question; that the courts might feel that if this scientific body had investigated the subject and believed that an article was deleterious or injurious—and those are the only cases that would get into court—their opinion would have too much weight with the court, and it was thought better in the end to leave it so that the Department of Agriculture could only institute a prosecution.

Now, the duty of the Remsen Board is quite different. The Remsen Board is purely advisory to the Department of Agriculture. After it has determined that in its judgment an article used in food is not deleterious to health, the Department of Agriculture simply does not prosecute. It is no final settlement of the question. If in the course of time and the study of the subject scientists come to the conclusion that the article so used is deleterious to health, a prosecution can be commenced at any time in the future. The Remsen Board does not compel the Department of Agriculture not to prosecute. It simply advises, and the Secretary of Agriculture does not authorize the prosecution to be commenced. With 1 Remsen Board or 40 Remsen Boards we will not learn too much. I do not quite agree with my friend from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER] that there ought to be business men upon this scientific board. The duty of the board is only to determine the scientific question, the health question. The pure-food law does not prohibit any kind of food, except that it prohibits the wrong branding of articles and the addition of deleterious substances to foods and drugs. If there are no deleterious substances added, we do not prosecute, and in the end we may find out. I do not know whether the addition of sulphur in the drying of fruit is deleterious. I believe it is, when used in any considerable quantities. I do not know whether the addition of benzoate of soda is deleterious. I believe it is, when used in any considerable quantities. But I do not pretend to determine the matter. That will be determined in the course of time.

The gentleman referred to misbranding port wine. The gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] and other gentlemen from California would be extremely quick to object to oranges being branded "Florida San Bernardino oranges," with the "Florida" in small letters and the other in large letters. Now, whether the term "port," which originally meant Oporto, a Province of Spain, has become a generic term or not, is in the end something for the courts to determine.

Dr. Wiley does not determine it. I have great confidence in Dr. Wiley. His business is to discover and stop, if possible, the wrong branding or the adulteration of foods and drugs. He does not pretend that he is an autocrat who has the power finally to determine these things. He is an administrative officer. He is doing and has done great good in that direction; but, on the other hand, the Secretary of Agriculture, whose duty it is to conserve the interests of the producers of agricultural and horticultural products, has endeavored to prevent Dr. Wiley from proceeding too rapidly and without sufficient consideration. And while they have not always agreed they both have done services which render them of great value to the country and entitle them to the esteem and the respect of their countrymen. [Applause.]

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, just a word with respect to what has been said regarding the reasons for the maintenance of the Remsen Board. It has not been purposely said by those who have spoken, and yet, if all of the reasons for the maintenance of the Remsen Board were to be disclosed from those which have been mentioned by Members who have spoken, we would think it was wholly in the interest of the manufacturer or the producer, while the fact is the Remsen Board has just as much reason to exist on account of the consumer as it does on account of the producer or manufacturer. It may be true that in the few cases that have been submitted to the Remsen Board, differences have arisen on account of the producer not seeing things the way the Chief of the Bureau of Chemistry saw them, but it does not require much of imagination to see the Bureau of Chemistry in some future time take such a position that, in the interest of the consumer himself, it might be very advantageous to take an appeal to some board such as the Remsen Board, which could make a more extensive inquiry into the interest not of the producer, not of the manufacturer, but of the great body of consumers of this country. I mention this at this time, not that I think anyone doubts the question, but in order that it may appear alongside of the reasons for the existence of the Remsen Board, to which attention has been called by those who have spoken.

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. With most of what the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] a few moments ago said I am in hearty accord. He said, however, that the Department of Agriculture does not decide these questions, but that they are presented to a court for its decision. Technically, of course, that is so, but, as I suggested, I think it is true that when the department officials have passed upon a question of this sort in the public mind it is settled by their decision. For that reason it seems to me extremely important that these questions should be not only carefully investigated and investigated extensively, as the department can not, owing to the multitude of its duties, always do, but that they should be investigated by men of the highest standing in their profession, although, technically speaking, the questions as to whether certain articles are deleterious or not have to be brought before a court and be settled by judicial determination, yet as a matter of practical effect the question is determined whenever an official board—the Remsen Board, for example—has passed upon and determined that matter as to any article. It seems to me, therefore, extremely important that this board should be continued in existence and the necessary funds appropriated for it.

My friend from Illinois [Mr. MANN] says that he believes that sulphur in the drying of fruit is deleterious to health. Unlike him, I believe that it is not. Ever since I have lived in California my family has consumed fruit that has been subjected to the fumes of sulphur in drying. My children and everybody in the household have eaten it nearly every day in the year. We have yet to discover any deleterious effect as a result of that use. On the contrary, we have found it extremely wholesome and healthful, and even invalids are able to eat it as freely as they can fresh fruit without any deleterious results.

It is true that even good things may be used to excess, and if sulphur is used to excess, of course, it might produce bad results, but used as the people of California use it, in very small quantities, in order to arrest decay in the drying of the fruit and prevent fermentation, it becomes not only wholesome, but an absolute necessity if the fruit is to be dried in a manner to be fit for food. So far as my observation goes, fruit that has not been treated in this manner, unless it contains a very large amount of sugar, will turn black in the process of drying, and when fruit is turned black fermentation or decay has set in, and it is not fit for human food.

Mr. KAHN. The sulphur in the fruit is also used for the purpose of preventing insects from attacking the fruit.

Mr. HAYES. Yes; I was coming to that in a moment. It is also necessary to prevent production of insect life in the fruit. It prevents the laying of eggs by flies and other insects, which would otherwise infest the fruit. All insect life will keep away from fruit when drying which has been thus treated. Without the use of sulphur fumes it would be impossible for the people of California to preserve their fruits as they do, and which, as I believe, has added greatly to the pleasure and the health of all of the people of the United States.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAYES. I should be glad to.

Mr. MANN. Do I understand that sulphur enough remains in the dried fruits after they are dried to prevent any insect life in the fruit?

Mr. HAYES. No; it prevents it while it is drying.

Mr. KAHN. That is it.

Mr. MANN. There is not very much insect life that develops when it is drying.

Mr. KAHN. Oh, yes.

Mr. HAYES. The eggs are deposited while the fruit is drying if it has not been sulphured, I would say to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN. Not if it is dried under proper conditions; there is no chance for any such thing.

Mr. HAYES. In the case of California fruits it is true. The fruit there is dried in the sun, in the open air.

Mr. MANN. I have been eating it for years, supposing that it was clean.

Mr. KAHN. The gentleman's health is remarkably good. No other man on the floor of this House could do the work that the gentleman is doing without impairing his health. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Chairman, I want to say to the gentleman from Illinois that my experience—and my experience is somewhat larger than his in the matter of fruit drying—leads me to conclude that the most wholesome and cleanest dried fruit in the world is that which is dried in California under proper conditions in the sun.

Mr. MORSE of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I rise to oppose the amendment offered by the gentleman from California, to strike out the last two words. The gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] has pretty nearly convinced me of the uselessness of the Remsen Board. He says this board was appointed during the administration of President Roosevelt, which is over three years ago, for the purpose of determining the question of how much sulphur could be safely used in the drying and preservation of fruit. Dr. Wiley had prescribed a certain limit, and said that the use of more than that amount was deleterious to health, and after more experiments he cut that amount down until it got so low that the people of California could not keep the flies off the fruit with the amount of sulphur that they were permitted to use, and apparently were not able to buy screens.

What has this Remsen Board done? It has taken that matter under consideration for over three years, probably nearly five years, and what are the fruit raisers of California doing? They are using all of the sulphur they care to use, paying no attention to the amount prescribed by Dr. Wiley.

Mr. NEEDHAM. Where is the gentleman's authority for that?

Mr. MORSE of Wisconsin. I get my information from the other gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN].

Mr. KAHN. When did I say that?

Mr. MORSE of Wisconsin. Just a few moments ago on the floor of the House.

Mr. KAHN. Oh, no, indeed; I never said anything of the kind.

Mr. MORSE of Wisconsin. I will yield to the gentleman if I can get through in time.

Mr. NEEDHAM. That is not the fact.

Mr. MORSE of Wisconsin. As I understand the situation, there is no limit on the amount of sulphur that they can use at the present time.

Mr. NEEDHAM. Oh, yes; there is.

Mr. MORSE of Wisconsin. The Remsen Board has made no finding, and the amount prescribed by Dr. Wiley has been set aside, and there is just one thing that stands between us and the excessive use of this preservative in fruit, and that is the seared conscience of the man who prepares the fruit. If that is a recommendation for the Remsen Board, I fail to see the value of it. Apparently the gentleman from California is satisfied with the Remsen Board. Why? Because the Remsen Board has set aside the order of Dr. Wiley and utterly failed and refused to make an order of their own, and the fruit growers of California and other places are permitted to use all the sulphur they desire without any limitation by anybody.

Mr. HIGGINS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAMB. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on the paragraph and all amendments thereto close in four minutes. That will give gentlemen plenty of time.

Mr. MORSE of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I hope this motion will not be taken out of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin yield to the gentleman from Virginia for the purpose of the motion?

Mr. MORSE of Wisconsin. I do not, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. LAMB. Mr. Chairman, I understood that the gentleman's time had expired.

Mr. MORSE of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Connecticut.

Mr. HIGGINS. Mr. Chairman, of course the gentleman knows as a matter of fact and as a matter of administration of the pure-food law that the Referee Board makes no order at all, nor has it any power to make any order.

Mr. MORSE of Wisconsin. I know that the Referee Board made no order at all. I know from what the gentleman from California has said, if he is correct in his statement, that the Referee Board has made no finding at all, and that there can be no order made, and that there has been no order made, because the board has made no finding. Therefore I say that the people who are preserving this fruit have no limit except the limit which their consciences prescribe. I do not want to trust my stomach to the consciences of that kind of people.

Mr. HIGGINS. The gentleman understands that there are other questions that have been submitted and are now being considered by the board.

Mr. MORSE of Wisconsin. Some few questions have been submitted and some few questions have been determined.

Mr. HIGGINS. I differ with the gentleman. There are not many.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. LAMB. Mr. Chairman, I renew my motion now that all debate on this paragraph be closed in five minutes.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. LAMB] for the purpose of making a motion.

Mr. LAMB. Mr. Chairman, I renew my motion that in four or five minutes, anyhow, all debate on the pending paragraph be closed.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. This is an important subject, I will say to the gentleman.

Mr. LAMB. Yes; it is; but I must insist that we move on a little faster.

Mr. BARTLETT. How much time does the gentleman from Illinois require?

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Oh, say, five minutes.

Mr. LAMB. I agree, but that is the last of it. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this paragraph be closed in 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] said that these important questions could be and should be decided by the courts. There is no doubt but that the ultimate decision will rest in the courts. As I stated before, the Remsen Board was created during the discussion of the question of the sulphuring of fruit in the process of drying it. The gentleman from Illinois states that the same result could have been obtained by the fruit growers of California if they had taken the matter into the courts. Let me assure the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] that the question was brought to a head at the very time that the fruit-drying season was about to commence. There is upward of $15,000,000 worth of dried fruit produced per year in the State of California. The fruit is set out in trays, and every traveler going over the railroads of that State will see thousands of acres of trays of fruit drying under the rays of the glorious sun that shines unobscured in California during the season from April to November. We use no kilns for the purpose of drying. It is all done in the open air. The quantity of sulphur that is used in the process is probably not as great as the quantity that is used in Germany. Germany has a board which is analogous to the Remsen Board. England has a similar board, and France has a similar board; and these boards, after conducting experiments, report their findings and then laws are predicated upon those findings. It was a case that required speedy action, and the Remsen Board was appointed. I agree with the gentleman from Illinois that there was full warrant in the law for the appointment of this board. To have appealed to the courts for relief would have spelled ruin to a great industry. The situation required immediate action. The law's delay would have been ruinous. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. MORSE] intimates that the quantity of sulphur that is used in California in the process of drying fruit is deleterious to the public health.

I stated a while ago, when the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] made the remark that he had used California dried fruit for years, that he himself is a living example of the benefits of eating California dried fruit. [Laughter and applause.] He does not show any evidence of having been seriously affected by its use. And if the quantity of sulphur used was so large that the health of individuals would be endangered, instead of the demand for California dried fruit constantly increasing from year to year, the California fruit driers would not be able to sell their products. The gentleman also complains because the board has not rendered its decision regarding the use of sulphur. The gentleman has forgotten that the board has also been conducting experiments with other preservatives, and that it has rendered a number of highly important decisions. Although the Remsen Board has not yet rendered its decision in regard to the use of sulphur in drying fruit, we feel confident, from the standing and character of the gentlemen that compose the board, that they will render such a decision as will, at least, be respected by the fruit driers of California.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I desire to detain the committee but a moment. This matter of pure food is, to my mind, of a great deal of importance to the people of the country. The questions of misbranding foods, Dr. Wiley, and the Remsen Board have been in the newspapers almost ever since the pure-food act was passed. I imagine that a good deal of the fight on Dr. Wiley and his methods, although not all of it, has been made by people who want to misbrand and put up adulterated food. I think this Congress could well afford to throw all the safeguards possible around this Bureau of Chemistry, so that the pure-food act may not be broken down. It is possible that one man ought not to have arbitrary power, because he might do a great deal of harm, and yet I want to remind you of this fact, that in all the decisions of Dr. Wiley they have been made, as he believes, on the side of the people, to give them purer food than they have ever had before.

I was somewhat amused when I thought of my friend from California complaining a good deal about the fruit of that great and enterprising State. The enterprising men that they send here to Congress are always ready on every occasion to stand up for the State and its great industries. I have seen their fruit being dried out there in the sun, as spoken of by my good friend [Mr. KAHN]. It gathers, I suppose, the dust and dirt that flies in the atmosphere; gathers the bugs that may, perchance, light upon that food in order to eat it and to lay their eggs, and then when the fruit is sufficiently dried by the sun it is taken into the houses and there it undergoes a process in order to kill the bugs and the germs and embalm them, so that they will keep. [Laughter.] And it is of great advantage to the people of this country that they may eat embalmed bugs instead of seeing the live bugs in order that they may avoid them. And so this great enterprising State and these enterprising, smart, shrewd Representatives that they send here to this Congress advocate the fruits that are prepared in the great State of California. We ought to all be thankful, and when I look at my good friend from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER] I know that he feels thankful in his heart that the Remsen Board has not yet excluded the use of sulphur for embalming the fruits of California. [Laughter.]

And then they are not going to misbrand their drinks that come from that great State. We can look at the label and see where that good drink has been made, and know that it is pure and know that it is just right because it comes from the great State of California. And then it is said here that they will not mix up these oranges that come from the State of Florida with the oranges that come from the State of California. I have seen upon this floor many, many times such enterprise and such great zeal and enthusiasm for the products and the people of California that I can only admire what the Representatives of that State do here, and we can well see how that State has progressed. And in spite of the fact that it is so far from the East when one of our people get out there he never comes back, because they talk to him, and their enterprise and ways of doing things keep him there, and he is so far away that he can not get money enough to return to the East. California is a great State. It is to have two exhibitions held in it at one time. I tell you we ought to be thankful for the State of California and what it is doing for us. [Laughter and applause.]

The Clerk read as follows:

BUREAU OF SOILS.

Salaries, Bureau of Soils: One soil physicist, who shall be chief of bureau, $4,000; 1 chief clerk, $2,000; 1 executive assistant, $2,000; 3 clerks, class 4; 2 clerks, class 3; 3 clerks, class 2; 1 clerk, $1,260; 8 clerks, class 1; 4 clerks, at $1,000 each; 3 clerks, at $900 each; 1 soil cartographer, $1,800; 1 soil bibliographer, $1,400; 1 photographer, $1,200; 3 draftsmen, at $1,200 each; 1 draftsman, $1,000; 1 messenger, $840; 2 messengers, messenger boys, or laborers, at $480 each; 1 laborer, $600; 1 laborer, $300; 1 charwoman or laborer, $480; in all, $50,540.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out this paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Rather I make, first, a point of order upon line 18, which shows the increase of $400.

Mr. LAMB. It is a mere transfer.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Is not that an increase?

Mr. LAMB. No.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. I beg the gentleman's pardon. I move to strike out the paragraph.

Mr. Chairman, I do this for the purpose of testing this committee upon the question of the soil survey. Not that I am opposed to the soil survey nor the head of this work, for I have confidence in his ability and honesty of purpose, because if the committee should vote to strike out this paragraph I should like to insert a similar paragraph under the Bureau of Plant Industry. But I believe, and it has been so stated by Members and in former Congresses, that this Bureau of Soils ought to be by all means in the Bureau of Plant Industry. It has been stated that we have men who go out and make investigations of the soil. They issue beautiful maps of certain sections of the country. They show what those soils may contain or may not contain, and yet when that is over it is about all there is to it.

Mr. LAMB. This is for the physical work.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. I want to say this, that if we had this soil survey in connection with the Bureau of Plant Industry that this plant industry might go ahead when soil surveys have been made and illustrate what is lacking in the soil and what is necessary to put there to make the soil productive of certain crops. That is what ought to be done. And I believe it can not be done successfully and that it never will be done successfully until this matter of soil survey is placed with the Department of Plant Industry. I agree that the plant industry of the country is of great value. I fully agree that the soil survey of the country is of great value, but it can be made much more effective if the two were consolidated in one bureau. Yet as to this soil survey which is made by the National Government I do not believe, so far as the benefits are concerned, that we do derive the good that we ought to receive from the expenditure of this large amount of money, but not due to any fault of the bureau. In the State of Illinois I am glad to say that every county in that great State is being looked after in the soil survey and an analysis of the soil is made by our own State.

Mr. LAMB. I am glad to hear it.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. And I want to say this, that when that soil survey and analysis is made there is immediately instituted the plant-industry investigation, which goes to show what can be done with plants when the proper elements are put into that soil. We do not intend in our State to make soil surveys and then stop and do no more. We expect to go ahead and demonstrate to the people along with the soil survey what that soil will do when the proper elements are placed in it and the best way to do it. I believe that if this soil survey was put into the Bureau of Plant Industry we would get much more benefit from it than we are now receiving.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there for a question? His time has not expired.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield to the gentleman from California?

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Certainly.

Mr. RAKER. Does not the soil survey now make analyses of the soil and determine what plants are best adapted to the soil?

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Yes; to some extent, I suppose; but there is no one to come along afterwards and make the demonstration of what can be done. They do not make these chemical analyses in such a way that the people may get the greatest good out of it.

Mr. RAKER. I understood they are making these chemical analyses and determining what is best to put on the land. I am sending hundreds of these reports to the State of California to show what can be raised on particular tracts of land.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. For chemical investigations we appropriate $18,135, which is insufficient to do the work in a proper manner.

Mr. RAKER. I agree with the gentleman in his opinion. I thought they were doing that now.

The CHAIRMAN. The pending motion is the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] to strike out the paragraph.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For physical investigations of the important properties of soil which determine productivity, such as moisture relations, aeration, heat conductivity, texture, and other physical investigations of the various soil classes and soil types, $11,265.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on that paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois reserves a point of order.

Mr. MANN. What is the theory, may I ask, in changing the bill with reference to these soil items? You carried last year for the investigation of the relation of soils to climate and organic life and of the texture and composition of soils in the field and laboratory $51,600. You have segregated, I suppose, that item into three or four items. What is the purpose of that?

Mr. LAMB. That has been done. The gentleman is correct in that. The chief of the bureau states that three years ago the direction of the committee to them was that they wanted their appropriation separated in a number of items; that is, they wanted a number of items in the lump fund instead of a relatively large amount for general purposes, so that the bureau would know exactly what it should do under the law as to each of these objects. There is no purpose of changing the character of the work, but merely to give the bureau more specific authority for the work. The additional language that appears is merely for that purpose, inasmuch as nothing is being attempted that is not being done at the present time.

Mr. MANN. Have they been interfered with under the existing law?

Mr. LAMB. No. The committee asked them to segregate these items.

Mr. MANN. I did not think it was the committee. How was this estimated?

Mr. LAMB. It was estimated by the department, of course. They recommended that it be divided up.

Mr. MANN. Was it estimated separately, or was it not?

Mr. LAMB. I do not think it was.

Mr. MANN. You say the committee did it. Here was a general provision for an investigation of the relation of soils to climate and organic life and of the texture and composition of soils in the field and laboratory. The gentleman says they did not intimate that they wanted to change the work, and that they have not been interfered with under that provision. Everyone knows, however, that when you go to particularizing either one of two things happens. Either there is a restriction of authority or else an extension of it. Here you do not restrict their authority, and what I want to know is in what way you propose to extend it.

Mr. LEVER. The item of $51,600 contained in the bill last year for the investigation of the relation of soils to climate and organic life and the texture and composition of soils in the field and laboratory has been divided up as follows—divided up not by the committee, but by the bureau itself, through the Secretary of Agriculture—into three items, which, if the gentleman desires, I will read.

Mr. MANN. Oh, the items are in the bill. What is the purpose of putting all this in here—soil composition and soil minerals, the soil solution, solubility of soil, and all chemical properties of soils in their relation to soil formation, soil texture, and soil productivity, and so forth, such as is given below—the determination of the soil's productivity, such as moisture relations, aeration, heat conductivity, texture, and other physical investigations of the various soil classes and soil types? Now, if that was not included in the original language, why is it proposed to be inserted in the bill? And if it was in the original language, what is the purpose of particularizing here, so that they may run up against a decision of the comptroller pretty soon?

Mr. LEVER. Let me suggest to the gentleman from Illinois that he remembers the time when the agricultural appropriation bill was very severely criticized on the floor of the House for the reason that it did not provide for the breaking up of the lump-sum appropriations in the bill.

Mr. MANN. I recollect that, and I recollect I helped to criticize it myself. If the gentleman can explain what these different items mean, segregated, very well. I understood what the original item meant. I do not understand what this means.

Mr. LEVER. The gentleman will see that these segregated items mean no less and no more than the original language, except that they are broken up into specific projects so that the committee and the House hereafter may know exactly how much money is being expended upon each of the projects; so that we may be informed as to whether or not we desire to continue the expenditures along the lines suggested in the segregation of these amounts.

Mr. MANN. As a matter of fact, no one on earth can tell or differentiate between the work that can be done in the first two paragraphs that the gentleman refers to. One includes soil productivity; the other is for the physical investigation of the soil, which determines soil productivity. What is the difference between determining soil productivity and investigations in regard to the soil, which determines soil productivity? If anybody can find the difference between those, I will give him a new hat. [Laughter.]

Mr. LEVER. The first is an investigation of soil composition and soil minerals and soil solution and all chemical properties of soil in relation to soil formation.

Mr. TILSON. Is not this the distinction: The first is treated chemically and the second by physical investigations?

Mr. LEVER. Exactly. I was about to say that.

Mr. LAMB. One is chemical and the other is physical.

Mr. MANN. That may be.

Mr. LAMB. We give them no more money. If they choose to divide it up between chemical and physical investigations, we have no objection.

Mr. MANN. I have been around long enough to know that when these things are divided up by the department it is done either to get more jurisdiction or else it is through a mistake on the part of some clerk, who sooner or later will find that he is up against a decision of the comptroller for being too particular.

Mr. LAMB. Possibly there may be some ulterior motive in dividing this work up. I do not think so. We understand that these investigations are to be divided into chemical and physical investigations. We are not going to give them any more money.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is concerned only about how much money we give them.

Mr. LAMB. I fail to see any harm in what they are trying to do. The physical examinations must be followed up by chemical examinations in order to reach results.

Mr. MANN. Now, while the gentleman is on his feet, I would like to ask him another question: Last year we inserted in the bill on the floor an item in relation to the supply of potash, and so forth. Is that proposed to be carried on by the item on page 54, under the head of fertilizer investigations?

Mr. LAMB. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Here it is mixed up with another item in reference to farm manures. I am decidedly opposed to that. I ask, Why should we not have that item by itself? The gentleman is talking about segregating. Instead of segregating he lumps two matters together, where nobody knows what they will be expended for. I withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman withdraws the point of order. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For fertilizer investigations into the natural and artificial sources of supply of fertilizer material and methods of handling fertilizers and farm manures, $25,000, of which sum $10,000 shall be immediately available.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I reserve a point of order on that.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York reserves the point of order.

Mr. MANN. May I ask the gentleman whether this is intended to cover the investigation of the sources of potash?

Mr. LAMB. Yes; that is true.

Mr. MANN. How much of it is for that purpose, and how much is for the investigation of the methods of handling farm manures? What relation is there between investigating the possible natural sources of potash supply in this country and the investigation of farm manures and the handling of farm manures? I can not imagine any two things wider apart.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman from Illinois is not an up-to-date scientist. [Laughter.]

Mr. LAMB. This is an increase of $12,500, of which sum $10,000 is to be made immediately available, and is for the purpose of continuing fertilizer investigations and methods of handling fertilizers and farm manures. Last year Congress gave an appropriation of $12,500 and directed the bureau to search the country for possible sources of supply of potash and nitrates, and that work has been prosecuted very vigorously, and the bureau has achieved rather phenomenal success. It has searched the desert basins for possible surface deposits of potash and of nitrates, and has made an investigation of the mines and salt deposits in the salt wells and salt mines of the country. It has investigated the possibilities of obtaining supplies of potash from the sea kelp, especially on the Pacific coast, where it has been found that they are far richer in potash than on the Atlantic coast or in most other localities the bureau knows of in the world.

The following remarks by Dr. Cameron made before the committee give the result of this work in detail:

The authority granted the bureau in the wording of the appropriation was very broad, and it has interpreted it in that spirit, and has made an investigation of the three general classes of fertilizers, their sources of supply, and, to a certain extent, into the manipulation of this material to put it in form for the farmers and for use on the soil and with plants. The bureau has carried on investigations into phosphates, especially in Kentucky and Arkansas and Tennessee, following up work which they had done previously in Florida and in the western areas. The bureau has somewhat extended the area of available fields of phosphate, has investigated the cost of production and the cost of manipulation in the factory, and all of these data are included in the report which has just been completed. The bureau has also carried on investigations in regard to nitrogenous fertilizers, especially ammonium sulphate. We are coking enough coal in this country to produce something like 650,000 tons, roughly speaking, of ammonium sulphate, but we are actually producing about 35,000 tons, the rest of the ammonia being thrown away at present, and we are importing about 104,000 tons, especially from England and Belgium. Heretofore they have thrown it all away, but during the last few years they have been putting in the modern by-product oven, in contrast to the old beehive oven, and they are making ammonium sulphate.

That is what we had from the hearings, and I have read it here so as to give it to you, multum in parvo.

Mr. MANN. Do I understand that the appropriation we made last year for the investigation of possible sources of potash in this country has been diverted to these other purposes?

Mr. LAMB. No; not entirely.

Mr. MANN. What have they been making these investigations under? Not under this item.

Mr. LEVER. Let me say to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] that the language of the item carried in last year's bill was—

For exploration and investigation within the United States to determine the possible sources of supply of potash, nitrates, and other natural fertilizers.

Mr. MANN. I understand. That does not include the manufacture of any form of ammonia from coking.

Mr. LEVER. I will say to my friend that the language of this item carried in the bill this year does not provide for that, in my judgment.

Mr. MANN. That was what the chairman read, to show how important it was. Now, last year we were confronted with this situation: Germany is the source of supply of our potash. We were dependent upon Germany for our supply of the potash which is necessary in the manufacture of fertilizers. The German Government at that time was holding up some contracts which some of our people had been able to slip in and get, one night between 12 o'clock and 10 minutes after 12, when the syndicate for that length of time was broken up. We undertook then to find whether we could discover potash supplies in this country. We put one item in the agricultural bill and one in the sundry civil bill. Mr. Tawney, chairman of the subcommittee on the sundry civil bill, made a point of order on the amendment. I was in the chair on that bill, and I asked Mr. Tawney to withdraw his point of order, because, if we could discover a supply of potash in this country which would render us free from the tribute that the rest of the world has to pay to Germany for its supply of natural potash, it would be the greatest discovery that could happen to this country for the benefit of the farming community. We put that item in last year, and apparently the purpose is to divert it to something else.

Mr. LAMB. No; I think the gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. MANN. But we had in mind the discovery of a natural supply of potash. Have they used it for something else?

Mr. LAMB. The language that has been stricken out contained the words "natural fertilizers," and in place of that we put farm manures.

Mr. MANN. We put that wording in because there might be a question as to just what the investigation was to be in the study and effort to discover natural potash. They have made an investigation on the Pacific coast of a certain kind of sea kelp, claiming that that furnishes a supply of potash. That would cover any other natural fertilizers in connection with it, but the appropriation was put there for that purpose and that purpose solely, and I do not believe the department has expended it for these other things.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] is entirely correct, not only in his recital of the history for the reason for the insertion of this paragraph in the appropriation bill, but also in his understanding of the purposes for which this appropriation was to be used. As far as I am concerned, I see absolutely no objection to amending this item so as to meet the view of the gentleman from Illinois, and I would suggest this to him as an amendment to the present language:

For exploration and investigation within the United States to determine a possible source of supply of potash, nitrate, and other natural fertilizers, $25,000, of which sum $10,000 shall be immediately available.

In connection with that I desire to say that my understanding is that none of the appropriation here asked for is to be used at all in carrying out the authority given under the words "and methods of natural fertilizers and farm manures." The purpose of the increase in the appropriation is to enable the department to extend its work in trying to discover potash deposits in this country, and in connection with that I desire to say that the department has made wonderful progress in this direction and believes that it has discovered on the Pacific coast a source of potash supply that will absolutely give to this country all of the potash it needs, and a very great deal more than it needs, and that it can be manufactured and paid for with the by-product that comes from these kelp beds, as I believe they are called. I feel a good deal of personal pride in this proposition, because it was my amendment that authorized the investigation, and the results of the investigation have been so great that it has induced the President of the United States to send the Congress a special message commending the Department of Agriculture for its splendid work.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman from New York if he insists upon the point of order?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I want to know the reason that induced the Committee on Agriculture to report a deficiency appropriation in this bill—in this item.

Mr. LEVER. We have not done that.

Mr. MANN. Oh, yes; the $10,000 to be immediately available would make it a deficiency appropriation.

Mr. LEVER. Yes; if the gentleman desires to call that a deficiency.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, if the department has expended all the funds appropriated for this year and needs additional funds, it should do as the law requires—submit an estimate for an investigation to determine whether it is necessary.

Mr. MANN. This item went into the bill last year as the gentleman now wishes to offer it from the floor and not from the department, to make these investigations concerning any natural supply of potash. I think the appropriation is not entirely exhausted, and the department is quite content to proceed, as far as it is concerned, with the money that is on hand. On the other hand, if we can discover—and it looks as though we would be able to discover—a source of potash supply in this country it is worth millions of dollars to our people both in the way of obtaining potash cheaper and obtaining the supply at home.

Mr. LEVER. And of breaking the monopoly.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, we all know that the German syndicate absolutely controls the price of potash. It completely controls the mines. We talk about trusts here, but that is an absolute syndicate over there, controlled entirely, and when it broke up for a few minutes and they got contracts, as I narrated before, the Government over there promptly put an export tax on any potash that was exported under these contracts, and they were required to go with the combination. If we can discover this, it will be of great value, and they can use this money. That is all there is to it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, yes; they could use twice as much.

Mr. MANN. I mean they could use it profitably and beneficially.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Let me say this: The gentleman has told one side of the story. It is apparent that this appropriation was made without being estimated for by the department, because this bill never carries an appropriation for any service in the Agricultural Department that is not more than sufficient for the service during the fiscal year. An examination of the unexpended balance in these appropriations shows that Congress is more than lavish, and even this department can not spend the appropriations that are made.

Mr. MANN. It shows that it is expended economically. The gentleman ought to give the department credit for that.

Mr. FITZGERALD. No. This department would render more efficient service if it had from two to three million dollars less money than it has got now.

Mr. LAMB. Where would the gentleman start to cut?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I would cut the force here in Washington.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman, of course, represents a city district like myself.

Mr. FITZGERALD. And we are scientific agriculturists. [Laughter.]

Mr. MANN. I am. I do not know that the gentleman is.

Mr. FITZGERALD. You can not walk through the offices up here in this department. The people are so crowded that they are in one another's way. They have three or four men watching one blade of grass grow, whereas if they had one man to watch half a dozen blades of grass grow it would thrive much better.

Mr. MANN. I do not know about that. I do know this: They have not only made two blades of grass grow where one grew before, but they have made many blades of grass grow where none grew before.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That might be true, but they could do it with a lot less people. The law is quite clear. If this department needs additional money for this fiscal year in this service, it should submit an estimate in conformity with the law for a deficiency appropriation. If these appropriations were not made so large in this bill, and this department was required occasionally to make a request for appropriations to supply deficiencies when they legitimately exist, we would be able to reach some of the unnecessary places in the department and effect considerable reform.

Mr. LAMB. Mr. Chairman, this is the lowest appropriation that has been made for several years.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is the only appropriation that has ever been made for this service. Only one appropriation has been made for this work. Last year there was an appropriation of $12,500, of which $2,500 was made immediately available, for the balance of that fiscal year. They had $10,000 for this fiscal year. Now it appears that they need $15,000 for next year, and they would like to have $10,000 for the balance of this year. I do not know what the prospects of final action on the agricultural bill are; but judging from some things that men who have been here for some time can judge by, in connection with appropriation bills, it does not appear that many appropriation bills are likely to become law until just about the termination of this fiscal year. Whether this is an important work or not, there is something else just as important, and that is to have the Department of Agriculture just occasionally—just for a change, just to have it keep informed of the law, that such laws do exist—transmit some estimates in compliance with the law. As far as I am concerned, I shall do my best to prevent deficiency appropriations being carried in the agricultural appropriation bill.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a moment?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Certainly.

Mr. LEVER. I am informed by officials of the department that the $10,000 asked to be made immediately available is to be used in mapping the kelp beds of the Pacific coast, in order that they may indicate to private individuals the location of the most productive and workable ones that have been discovered under the investigations carried in this item; and I want to say to my friend from New York that he can not realize the importance, I am afraid, coming from a city district, of discovering some valuable source of potash control in this country by the American people.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, let me suggest to the gentleman from South Carolina that the mere fact that people live in a city does not make them so absolutely dense that they are unable to appreciate anything whatever relating to the agriculture of the country. Some of the greatest agriculturists in our country live in the great cities.

Mr. LEVER. The gentleman from New York does not know the difference between oats and wheat until they get in the head, and I dare him to deny it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Perhaps I have sown as many of both as has the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. LEVER. Yes; but the gentleman has sown them when they had been gathered. [Laughter.]

Mr. FITZGERALD. I have seen more grown than the gentleman has in his State.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a ruling on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will ask the gentleman from New York to state the point of order.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, it is a deficiency appropriation, and the Committee on Agriculture has no jurisdiction over deficiency appropriations. It makes a part of the appropriation immediately available. If the Chair is in doubt there are a number of rulings to which I can refer the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman makes the point of order to the entire paragraph the point of order to the entire paragraph must be sustained.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I think there is no doubt about the point of order lying against this proposition. I propose to offer an amendment to take care of the proposition as follows, to amend by inserting as a new paragraph:

For exploration and investigation within the United States, to determine a possible source of supply of potash, nitrates, and other natural fertilizers, $25,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment. The paragraph is stricken out on a point of order.

Mr. LEVER. I understand that, Mr. Chairman, but I am offering this proposition as a separate paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment if the gentleman will send it to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

For exploration and investigation within the United States, to determine a possible source of supply of potash, nitrates, and other natural fertilizers, $25,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER].

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the investigation of soils and for indicating upon maps and plats, by coloring or otherwise, the results of such investigations, $155,000.

Mr. TALCOTT of New York. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 54, line 13, strike out the words "one hundred and fifty-five thousand" and insert the words "one hundred and sixty-five thousand."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. TALCOTT].

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking the gentleman in charge of the bill why the proviso which was included in the act of last year, "Provided, That no more than 10 per cent of this sum should be expended in any one State," was left out of the present bill?

Mr. LAMB. That is in the permanent law.

Mr. TILSON. It is not permanent law in the proviso as carried last year.

Mr. LAMB. The provision in last year's bill, "That not more than 10 per cent of this sum shall be expended in any one State," has also been omitted at the request of the chief of bureau.

The demand for soil-survey work is growing rapidly and is becoming more insistent. The demand comes from State legislatures which are appropriating, or propose to appropriate, money to cooperate with and support the soil surveys through various State agencies; from Federal bureaus which require soil surveys as a basis for the best prosecution of their own projects; and from municipal organizations, boards of trade, and prominent citizens in different parts of the country. Approximately $45,000 of the present appropriation is spent annually in reconnoissance surveys, mainly in the Great Plains region, and of the remaining $100,000 for detailed surveys approximately $55,000 is spent in cooperative States, leaving a balance of $45,000 for the remaining 36 States and Territories. It is considered that $10,000 additional should be appropriated for the small distribution of surveys outside of those States.

Mr. TILSON. My question was why the limitation was removed.

Mr. LAMB. I have given you the reason. It was because the bureau asked for it, and I gave you the reason why they asked for it.

Mr. TILSON. It is their purpose, if one State is willing to cooperate to a greater extent than another, to expend more than 10 per cent in one State?

Mr. LAMB. Yes.

The Clerk read as follows:

For general administrative expenses connected with the above-mentioned lines of investigation, $4,280.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph.

On page 53, beginning "General expenses, Bureau of Soils," the language of the bill is as follows:

General expenses, Bureau of Soils: For all necessary expenses connected with the investigation and experiments hereinafter authorized, including the employment of investigators, local and special agents, assistants, experts, clerks, draftsmen, and labor in the city of Washington and elsewhere; official traveling expenses, materials, tools, instruments, apparatus, repairs to apparatus, chemicals, furniture, office fixtures, stationery, gas, electric current, telegraph and telephone service, express and freight charges, rent outside of the District of Columbia, and for all other necessary supplies and expenses, as follows:

Then there are five or six paragraphs, authorizing certain lines of investigation and appropriating money for the purpose. And out of each one of the specific appropriations can be paid expenses of the character which I have read. The total appropriations of these various paragraphs is $236,600.

It can not be possible that any line of expenditure could have been overlooked in the language incorporated on page 53. This is what is sometimes referred to in some of the departments as a "slush fund."

Mr. LAMB. There is no "slush fund" in this bill.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I am going to define what they call it in the departments.

They have every conceivable authority for the expenditure of money out of the specific appropriations. Lest perchance the ingenuity of man has overlooked something, they put in a little additional appropriation, so that by any possibility they might not be hampered in expenditures.

Mr. LEVER. The gentleman will recognize and admit that this language has been in the bill ever since the committee adopted the plan of dividing up and segregating these various lump-sum appropriations?

Mr. FITZGERALD. This particular paragraph has been. But it is made available for the same purposes as the specific appropriations enumerate.

Mr. LEVER. The language that the gentleman read a moment ago has not been changed in the bill at all. It has been carried from year to year.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, yes; there is much additional. "Telegraph and telephone service, express and freight charges, rent outside of the District of Columbia, and for all other necessary supplies and expenses," and that which follows, are in the bill for the first time, and make each of these specific appropriations available for every conceivable expense in the conduct of the investigation.

By the incorporation of the language on page 53, to which I have called attention, all of the $236,000 appropriated for these investigations is made available for general administrative purposes.

Mr. LEVER. This is the suggestion, as the gentleman must see by reading the segregated items as they appear following the general-expense items. For chemical investigation of the soil, for instance, so many dollars; for physical investigation of the important properties of the soil, so many dollars; for soil-fertility investigation, so many dollars; for investigation with reference to the potash supply, so many dollars; investigation of soils and for indicating upon maps and plats, by coloring or otherwise, so many dollars.

And then following that:

For general administrative expenses connected with the above-mentioned lines of investigations, $4,280.

These other little things that must necessarily come up in the administration of these other items are carried in this item by direction of this Congress by reason of the suggestions the committee received upon the floor of the House several years ago, as the gentleman will remember.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Does it not seem apparent to the gentleman from the way in which this bill is now prepared that out of this item for soil types, amounting to $18,135, there can be paid in connection with such investigations every conceivable form of service enumerated in that first language?

Mr. LEVER. That is very true perhaps; and yet, for administrative purposes, and in order that the Congress may be informed exactly as to how this money is being expended, all of these expenses for administrative purposes have been combined and united into one item, which we think is good economy and good administration.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It would be if none of these other appropriations could be expended for that purpose.

Mr. LAMB. Let me say to the gentleman right there that each one of these accounts is set off by the accountant of the department. He keeps a debit and credit account of the expenditures under each of these items, and he will give a voucher for the expenditures.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is not the point I am making.

Mr. LAMB. I mention that to show that there will be no "slush fund" about this.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Well, it is.

Mr. LEVER. Is it true that the gentleman argues, as, for instance, in this first item for chemical investigation of soil types, soil composition, and so on, there can be paid any amount for expenses such as is carried in this item to which he makes objection?

In other words, what I mean to bring out is this, that in the items to which the gentleman refers—for the chemical investigation of soil types—the language of the law requires that this appropriation shall be used for this particular purpose. Now, then, on the other proposition the amount of $4,000, or whatever it is, must be used for administrative expenses, which can not be paid, under the very language used in the bill, from the items preceding that.

Mr. FITZGERALD. After they have paid the general administrative expenses of the Bureau of Soils connected with the specific investigations they are authorized to make there are no general administrative expenses. That will be very readily discovered.

Mr. LAMB. There are little items that will have to be paid with this amount of $4,000.

Mr. FITZGERALD. What are they?

Mr. LAMB. The gentleman from South Carolina mentioned them just now.

Mr. LEVER. Items of telephones, and lights, and many little things.

Mr. FITZGERALD. They may all be paid out of these other items.

Mr. LEVER. That may be, but the committee has no information upon that point and no testimony to that effect.

Mr. LAMB. The vouchers will show.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Of course the vouchers must show in order to be charged up against these appropriations; but this provision has already made available the appropriations for those services and for expenses.

Mr. LAMB. If the money is not used, it will be turned back into the Treasury.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is no excuse. On that theory you could appropriate a million dollars—on the theory that if they did not use any more than $4,000 the remainder would be turned back into the Treasury.

Mr. LEVER. This discussion all shows how poorly a lot of ordinary farmers like the chairman and myself are fitted to cope with the shrewd Irish wit of the gentleman from Brooklyn. [Laughter.]

Mr. FITZGERALD. I assumed that the gentleman in using this language had inadvertently continued this particular paragraph in the bill.

Mr. FOWLER. Not as much is appropriated this year as was appropriated last year for administrative expenses.

Mr. HAWLEY. May I say to the gentleman from New York that all these items for investigations are intended for purely scientific work?

Mr. FITZGERALD. What is purely scientific work? In such investigations there will be incurred traveling expenses and electric-light service and telegrams and other matters. All is not paid in salaries to these experts.

Mr. LAMB. Mr. Chairman, let me ask the gentleman what he would substitute for the term "general expenses"? What would the gentleman suggest?

Mr. FITZGERALD. My own opinion is that the gentleman should either strike it out or put in a provision to the effect that these other items should not be available for these services and charges.

Mr. LAMB. The gentleman does not make a point of order against it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, I can not make a point of order against it. I have moved to strike it out.

The CHAIRMAN. The pending amendment is the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD]. The question is on agreeing to that amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the chairman of the committee a question, and for that purpose I move to strike out the last word. Under the provisions of this act, how are these investigations conducted?

Mr. LAMB. I did not catch the gentleman's question.

Mr. CULLOP. I say, in the various investigations provided for here, how are they conducted? Are they conducted by men going out from the department here or through the several agricultural colleges of the different States?

Mr. LAMB. The soil surveys are made by soil parties, who go out into the various States and make these physical surveys.

Mr. CULLOP. Do they go out from the department here in Washington?

Mr. LAMB. Yes.

Mr. CULLOP. Then, Mr. Chairman, I wish to offer the following amendment as a new paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CULLOP].

The Clerk read as follows:

That under the several amounts appropriated for the various investigations named for the Bureau of Soils the same shall be conducted by the agricultural colleges of the several States, which work shall be performed in each State under the direction of the agricultural college of such State.

Mr. LAMB. I make the point of order against that.

Mr. CULLOP. I would like the gentleman to reserve it for a moment.

Mr. LAMB. Oh, there is no use in discussing a matter of that kind, my friend. [Laughter.]

Mr. CULLOP. I think there is, when you are expending the people's money in this way.

Mr. LAMB. I can not see it. The gentleman knows as well as anybody that his amendment is subject to a point of order. If the gentleman were in the chair and were called upon to rule on the question he would laugh. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. The point of order is sustained. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For investigations of insects affecting southern field crops, including the cotton boll weevil and other insects injurious to cotton, insects affecting tobacco, rice, and sugar cane, the Argentine ant, and life-history studies of ticks, $35,000.

Mr. WICKLIFFE. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. WICKLIFFE] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 56, line 19, strike out the words "thirty-five thousand dollars" and insert the words "forty-seven thousand one hundred and sixty dollars."

Mr. WICKLIFFE. Mr. Chairman, the object of this amendment is to make the appropriation the same as it was in the preceding bill and to carry the amount that the Department of Agriculture thought was necessary for this work. The decrease contained in the present measure below the amount of the former law amounts to $12,160, so that the adoption of this amendment means only the addition of that amount.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Louisiana yield to the gentleman from Oregon?

Mr. WICKLIFFE. Certainly.

Mr. HAWLEY. Was any part of this $12,160 reduction due to the transfer of money to the lump sum?

Mr. WICKLIFFE. No; it was reduced simply and solely in the interests of economy.

Now, Mr. Chairman, this money is actually needed in this work. The Bureau of Entomology is doing a great work in the elimination of the cotton-boll weevil. The main object I have in offering the amendment is on behalf of that work with reference to the boll weevil. Unless this amendment is adopted I am reliably informed that the work that is outlined for the coming year can not be carried on as intended.

Those who are interested in the matter of the elimination of the cotton-boll weevil should be greatly interested in this amendment, because the Bureau of Entomology studies the life history of the boll weevil, the scientific end of the subject, the habits of the insect, and so forth. It is true that the Bureau of Plant Industry carries the main appropriation with reference to this matter, to wit, the demonstration work in the field. But in order that the House may clearly understand the difference, I might state that the Bureau of Entomology, the appropriations for which we are now considering, studies the scientific end of the matter with relation to the insect, its life and habits and history, and so forth; also the parasites which may be of benefit in exterminating it; and that bureau carries on these experiments not only in Washington but also in the field, as it were, studying the weevil and its habits at close range.

It gives the benefit of that study to the Bureau of Plant Industry, and the Bureau of Plant Industry in turn demonstrates the practical side of the matter by giving it to the farmer in a practical way. Therefore, I submit that this is one of the most important appropriations, so far as the cotton section of our country is concerned, and I ask every Member of the House who is interested in the matter of cotton culture to give his favorable consideration to this item.

Mr. LAMB. Mr. Chairman, I simply want to say that the committee felt there ought to be a reduction along these lines of investigation in the experimental part of this boll-weevil business, because there must be some point where these investigations will end, and they thought that to cut this item $12.000 would not cripple the department in its warfare against the boll weevil and the ticks. I do not know how much goes to the boll weevil or how much to the ticks, but I will say that we had on our economy caps and were making reductions as far as we could, and we reduced this amount, thinking the investigation had proceeded to a point where we could retrench a little.

Mr. MANN. What kind of ticks do they study?

Mr. LAMB. They study the life history of the ticks.

Mr. MANN. Is this the cattle tick?

Mr. LAMB. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Can the gentleman tell us how much of this appropriation is devoted to that study?

Mr. LAMB. I am very happy to be able to give the gentleman detailed information as to the exact amounts which have been devoted to these various subjects:

Boll-weevil investigations	$23,000
Tick life history investigations and study of transmission of pellagra	7,167
Tobacco-insect investigations in Tennessee, Kentucky and Virginia	7,000
Sugar-cane insect investigations and the investigation of the Argentine ant	5,000
Cotton red spider in South Carolina	2,500
Rice-insect investigations in Louisiana and Texas	2,500
Total	47,167

Mr. MANN. Where does the tick come in?

Mr. FOWLER. That was the second item.

Mr. LAMB. I read that—

Tick life history investigations and study of transmission of pellagra, $7,167.

Mr. MANN. Does that refer to the tick that causes Texas fever in cattle?

Mr. LAMB. Yes.

Mr. MANN. The life history of that tick is as well known as the life history of anything that can be imagined, and the Bureau of Animal Industry is expending large sums of money in driving that tick out of existence, all over the South, by taking a locality where they dip the cattle for the tick, or use some other methods of getting rid of the tick, and quarantining, until they have gotten rid of the tick in large portions of the South. Do I understand that this bureau is now engaged in studying the life history of this tick?

Mr. LEVER. Yes.

Mr. LAMB. The other bureau to which the gentleman referred is engaged in the warfare against the tick by quarantining, and this is for the study of the life history of the tick.

Mr. MANN. They discovered enough about the life history of this tick long ago to find out how to get rid of it by the methods they use, and they have found out that the only way really to get rid of it is to end its existence.

Mr. LEVER. The gentleman and I are rather together on this proposition——

Mr. MANN. It is perfectly silly to go ahead with this study.

Mr. LEVER. Except that I think he is wrong in his premises, and I am right in mine.

Mr. MANN. I freely concede that the gentleman may be right, but what are the gentleman's premises?

Mr. LEVER. In the first place, the study of the life history of the tick is a rather important proposition, and we never can reach the end of the study of the life history of any proposition.

Mr. MANN. We can if we can reach an end of the thing itself. We are now engaged in trying to end the tick.

Mr. LEVER. Because as the tick changes his habitat necessarily his life history changes.

Mr. MANN. Oh, no.

Mr. LEVER. Not only that, but we are making strenuous efforts to find some new parasite which will eradicate this tick without the enormous expenditure of a couple of hundred thousand dollars a year by the department.

Mr. MANN. We might as well try to put out a fire in the regions below. The life of the tick ends when it comes north, and then its life history ceases. They have discovered enough about it to know that the only way to get rid of it is to quarantine a locality and kill off the ticks in that locality.

Mr. LEVER. That is the only remedy so far found.

Mr. MANN. We will be rid of the ticks before they learn any other way.

Mr. LEVER. Science never stops progressing, as the gentleman knows.

Mr. MANN. They have been studying this subject ever since I was a boy. There is nothing remarkable about the Texas fever. The ticks are as thick as the leaves on the trees, and their life history is perfectly well known, and they know that the only way to dispose of them is to put something on the cattle that have them, to kill the ticks, and then to prevent tick-infested cattle from coming in from some other place.

Mr. LEVER. It is admitted that this is the only remedy now known by which they can be put out of business.

Mr. MANN. They have been put out of business in a large share of the South, I am glad to say.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I do not intend to detain the committee more than a moment. I hope this amendment will be adopted. In my judgment, there is no appropriation in this bill which will do the farmers of the South more good than this one, taking into consideration the small amount allowed. I think I speak with some degree of accuracy, because I have personal knowledge of some of the benefits derived from this appropriation. For two or three years a portion of the appropriation has been used in what is known as the Clarksville and Hopkinsville tobacco district for the purpose of investigating injurious tobacco insects.

The two principal insects which injure tobacco are the flea beetle and the hornworm. In 1907 there was an unprecedented outbreak of the flea beetle in the Clarksville and Hopkinsville tobacco district, and it is estimated that the tobacco farmers in the Clarksville and Hopkinsville district suffered a loss of $2,000,000 in that year from the outbreak of the flea beetle. As a result of investigations that have been made in that district in the vicinity of the city of Clarksville for the last two or three years it is thought a new remedy has been found which will prevent any such outbreak in the future.

The particular work in that district has been with reference to the hornworm. This worm often becomes so numerous during the season that at times the farmers are unable to secure labor with which to "hand worm" their tobacco, and it has been necessary in the past to use Paris green. As you know, Paris green frequently burns the tobacco leaves, and the department has been making an investigation for the past three years for the purpose of discovering some other insecticide which would take the place of Paris green. It has discovered that a certain quality of arsenate of lead will serve the purpose and prove a very cheap and efficient remedy. They are now in a position where they must do some demonstration work, because the arsenate of lead requires some skill in administering it, and if this appropriation is cut off I understand that possibly they will not be able to do the necessary demonstration work in that particular district, and the results of these investigations which have been made for the last two or three years will be lost to the farmers, losing to the people thousands of dollars a year on account of the injury done by the hornworm.

I called upon the department for some information with reference to the work they have been doing in the tobacco district, and I have received this reply. It is so full and clear as to the work being done that I ask permission to insert it in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks permission to insert a letter in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The letter referred to is as follows:

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
BUREAU OF ENTOMOLOGY,
Washington, D. C., February 15, 1912.

Hon. J. W. BYRNS,
House of Representatives.

DEAR SIR: In accordance with directions from Dr. L. O. Howard, Chief of the Bureau of Entomology, I am writing you a statement in regard to the tobacco-insect work at Clarksville, Tenn., concerning which information was requested by you in your letter of the 13th instant.

The principal injurious tobacco insects in Tennessee and Kentucky are the tobacco flea beetle and the tobacco hornworms. As a result of the unprecedented outbreak of the flea beetle in the spring of 1907 the tobacco crop in these States was reduced very greatly, entailing an estimated loss of at least $2,000,000. As a result of the investigations carried on at Clarksville a very cheap and efficient remedy for these insects has been found which should prevent the recurrence of the damage inflicted in 1907.

The work at Clarksville has been principally confined to the most injurious of these insects, which are the tobacco horn worms. Until the present this work has largely been of an investigational nature. It has now, however, arrived at the stage for demonstrational work. Briefly the results obtained are as follows: It has been found that in stiff and clayey soils fall or winter plowing will almost exterminate the overwintering stage of the tobacco worm, which passes the winter in a cell a few inches below the surface of the ground. This has led to the recommendation in Circular No. 123 of this bureau to plow in the fall all land that was in tobacco during that year in preparation for the succeeding crop. Unfortunately, however, the tobacco worms feed upon certain wild plants, and many of them thus pass the winter in protected places, so that fall plowing at best can only be a partial remedy. The tobacco worms, therefore, must be fought largely in the tobacco field. Paris green has been and is largely used to combat these worms in the field. By reason of a certain percentage of free or water-soluble arsenic that is contained in all Paris greens very great damage is frequently done to tobacco by burning of the leaves. When worms become numerous tobacco growers are forced to use Paris green to combat them, because they can not secure the labor to "hand worm" the tobacco. Fearing, however, the damage which might result from burning of the tobacco, they delay the application of the Paris green until forced to apply it by the overwhelming numbers of the worms. When the Paris green is finally applied the worms have already done considerable damage to the tobacco. Last year the damage by tobacco worms in the vicinity of Clarksville varied from 3 or 4 per cent to 10 to 15 per cent. The average loss was not less than $12 per acre; a very conservative estimate would place the loss at $10 per acre. In the Clarksville and Hopkinsville districts alone the total loss was about $900,000. The energies of the investigations of these insects have been directed toward finding some insecticide that could be applied with safety to the tobacco. As a result of three years of investigation a grade of arsenate of lead has been found that will kill the tobacco worms without injuring the tobacco. Paris-green burns alone last year caused a loss in some fields of from $8 to $10 per acre. Two years' tests have demonstrated that arsenate of lead can be applied with impunity to the tobacco plant in any stage of growth. It requires some considerable care and skill to apply the arsenate of lead properly, and it is expected that these directions will be given in person to the growers in the nature of a demonstration as time permits.

I should add that the cost of keeping an acre of tobacco free of worms by the use of arsenate of lead should not exceed three or four dollars. By the present method of fighting tobacco worms the cost per acre in a year when the worms are very numerous is at least $10 per acre. Therefore by the use of arsenate of lead the saving would be $6 per acre. In the Clarksville and Hopkinsville districts alone this would amount to more than half a million dollars.

Practically all of the benefits to be derived by the tobacco growers as the result of the above investigations will be entirely lost if the work is discontinued at this stage. Large-scale, practical demonstrational work is now absolutely necessary in order to enable the growers to derive proper benefit from these investigations.

Very respectfully,
A. C. MORGAN,
Entomological Assistant.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. WICKLIFFE].

The question being taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For investigations of insects affecting truck crops, stored grains, and other stored products, $19,700.

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out "nineteen" in line 23, page 56, and to insert "twenty-four."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 56, line 23, by striking out the word "nineteen" and inserting the word "twenty-four."

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this amendment is to take care of a new and rapidly developing industry in northern Indiana. However, it was submitted to the committee too late for consideration before reporting the bill, through lack of knowledge both on the part of the community and the representatives thereof that the onion thrip was being scientifically fought by the Department of Agriculture in other localities without interested citizens bearing the expense of such experts as they have been doing in Indiana.

For some years the onion industry in northern Indiana has been growing by rapid strides. Five years ago there were about 300 acres in cultivation. Last year there was something like 6,000 acres in cultivation, and the crop produced was from four to seven hundred bushels per acre; but the onion thrips have come as a pest, and the people of the locality, for the last two years, have asked the Department of Agriculture to give assistance in checking the ravages. The department has each season sent a man, but the community has been asked to pay all of his expenses. Dr. Chittenden, of the bureau in charge of truck crop and stowed-product insects, says that field stations for fighting the onion thrip are being maintained at Brownsville, Tex.; Norfolk, Va.; Rocky Ford, Colo.; Sacramento, Cal.; Camden, Cal.; and Jessop, Md., six stations in all. I desire to submit that we are almost a thousand miles from any one of these investigation points, and of course the department can not afford to transfer its field men back and forth to us, and so we ask an increase in appropriation that we may have full benefit of regular service. The result of our lack of full service has been, it is estimated by persons who know, that our losses in northern Indiana last year on account of the ravages of this pest amounted to $100,000. As I said, this bill was made up before I knew all of these facts, and I am asking the committee that the previously fixed appropriation be increased $5,000, for the reason that the Agricultural Department says that this amount would make it possible to locate an entomologist in this northern Indiana field, and keep him there during the season.

Mr. Chairman, I want to say further in explanation that the onion, as such, and I are not on familiar terms, and it is quite probable we will continue to keep out of each other's immediate presence for all time; but I hope it may never be said of me that I am lacking in liberality to any legitimate industry or in gallantry to the fair sex, and therefore I am in favor of furnishing any reasonable possibility that the onion industry may be promoted, that our wives and daughters and sisters may indulge their appetities and tastes in onions, worlds without end. [Applause.] I hope the amendment will prevail.

Mr. LAMB. Mr. Chairman, we asked the chief of the bureau some questions in respect to this matter, and I will read from his testimony:

Dr. HOWARD. We have stations in many different parts of the country, Mr. Chairman, where expert men are studying the difference in the various insects according to climate, and all that sort of thing, and experimenting with new remedies on a large scale in the field. One of the most important bits of work they are doing is on the onion thrips.

They began that out at Laredo, where many Texas people have gone into onion growing, as Mr. BEALL knows, and where they have had considerable trouble with the thrips.

We found out from that that this appropriation was being devoted to this onion work.

Mr. FOWLER. And the committee increased it $500 over that of last year.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For investigations of the Mediterranean fly in the United States and its possessions, $35,000, which sum shall be immediately available.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on the paragraph. It was not estimated for.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment to this proposition suggested by the gentleman from New York [Mr. HARRISON], who is unavoidably absent to-day. I will move to amend in line 6, at the end of the line, by inserting:

Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be expended on the Atlantic seaboard.

The gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] is perhaps more familiar with the reasons for this proviso than I am.

Mr. MANN. But no amendment is in order as yet. A point of order was reserved on the paragraph.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to have the amendment pending for information.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is reserved on the paragraph.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I would like to know something about the excuse for this item.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I will give the information to the gentleman, if I can. The Mediterranean fly is now found in two or three of the islands of the Hawaiian Territory. It started, as I have been informed, originally on the island of Malta, in the Mediterranean Sea, and destroyed the fruit crops of that island. It was carried by vessels to the island of St. Helena, and has wiped out the fruit industry of that island. It was carried from there to Cape Colony, South Africa, and is doing an enormous havoc in the orchards there. It was carried thence to Australia, and has attacked the fruit crops there. It has done an enormous damage in that island. It was carried from there to New Zealand, and is devastating the fruit crops of New Zealand. It has been carried to Brazil, and is devastating the fruit crops of Brazil. It was also carried from Australia to the Hawaiian Territory. In the island of Oahu, the principal island of the Hawaiian group, this fly has attacked all of the citrus fruit, the peaches, and, by the way, it destroyed the entire peach crop of that island last year; the figs, the rose apples, the star apples, the mangoes, the white lemon guavas, the wild guavas, the alligator pears, the strawberry guavas, the papaya, the sapota, some South African fruit, and also string beans and peppers.

The female fly deposits the eggs under the skin of the fruit, and in a very short time the eggs develop into skippers, similar to the skippers in cheese, and the fruit, when opened, is found to be full of maggots. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD], having been in the island of Hawaii, is familiar with the large host crops of wild guavas. This fly has attacked those guavas, and it will take a large sum to eradicate the pest on that account. If it ever gets into the United States proper, it will destroy the fruit crops of the various States into which it gains an entrance. It has already destroyed the fruit crops of Hawaii. Hawaii can no longer ship her alligator pears, her papayas, her string beans, and her peppers to the mainland because of this fly. It has already caused a great loss to the people of Hawaii, although it has been present in the islands but a short time. The people themselves in the Territory raised by subscription nearly $9,000 to destroy this pest, which has just obtained a foothold there.

Its presence has been observed there only a little over a year and, unless prompt remedies be used to stamp it out, it will undoubtedly come to the mainland, and then it will cost millions of dollars to stamp it out instead of a few thousand. The State of California expends hundreds of thousands of dollars annually in keeping such pests out of that State. I understand the State of Oregon and the State of Washington expend large sums in keeping these pests out. This appropriation is for the purpose of wiping out this pest in the Territory of Hawaii. It will enable the department to send experts there to investigate the conditions under which the fly thrives, and possibly to Australia, from which the pest was brought to Hawaii.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The Chair will hear the gentleman from New York on the point of order.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I just wish to speak briefly. Something that the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] said has made a very deep impression upon me; that is, that if this fly ever goes into California it will take millions to eradicate it instead of a few thousand dollars. Judging from the experience of the United States with the flea that affects the rat that results in the bubonic plague I am inclined to think that he is correct. My attention was called to the language providing for this investigation, to be conducted in the Hawaiian Islands, or in the possessions of the United States. It made me think that perhaps it would be advisable to make some inquiries as to whether the Department of Agriculture was still issuing commissions for investigations of various kinds without any beneficial results whatever. I have here the form of a commission issued by the Department of Agriculture. It is as follows:

The United States of America, Department of Agriculture, to all who shall see these presents, greeting:

Be it known that Mr. Alonzo H. Stewart, Assistant Sergeant at Arms of the United States Senate, and a citizen of the United States of America, is hereby appointed honorary representative of the Department of Agriculture of the United States of America in the Territory of Hawaii, the Philippine Islands, and the Empires of Japan and China, for the purpose of investigating and studying agricultural conditions in those countries.

The bearer of this commission is therefore especially commended to all persons interested in agriculture in those countries and to all friends of the United States of America, and also to the representatives of the United States Government in those countries, whose good offices on his behalf are earnestly requested.

In witness whereof I have hereunto subscribed my name and caused the seal of the Department of Agriculture to be affixed.

Done at the city of Washington, District of Columbia, this 31st day of March, 1903, and of the independence of the United States of America the one hundred and twenty-seventh.

[SEAL.]

JAMES WILSON,
Secretary of Agriculture.

Then, under date of May 28, 1908, almost five years later, we find a report submitted from this minister plenipotentiary and envoy extraordinary of the Department of Agriculture in the Hawaiian and Philippine Islands and the Empires of China and Japan. He says:

SIR: In pursuance to the commission issued to me by you, dated March, 1903, I have the honor to report that I took a trip through Japan and the Philippine Islands, incidentally stopping in Hawaii and China. I left the United States on May 8, 1903, and returning I reached Washington December 7, 1903.

I wish now to read some extracts from this highly valuable report upon the conditions of agriculture in the Philippine Islands. It will illustrate the value of these special commissions, and the interesting and valuable material gathered for the benefit of our people should not be permitted to be embalmed forever in a Senate document without some reference, at least, in the House. I will take but a few moments, and I hope the gentleman from Virginia will be patient with me.

The next day—

Says this envoy or minister in his report—

I was entertained at the house of the presidente and participated in a breakfast to celebrate the birthday of his wife. No modern European house could show finer linen or table appointments of silver, glass, and china ware. The men were all dressed in European costume, the women wearing the native gala dresses. But I learned from the American school-teacher that may of these same people in their everyday life wore the native tow costume and dined in the native fashion without the use of knives or forks, eating their rice or fish from bowls with their fingers. Surely, if any people have two sides to their nature, these are they. But if they continue to associate with Europeans or those oriental nations whose domestic habits are refined, natural pride will stimulate modern usages, which will soon become a fixed habit. The force of example in daily life will do more for them than all the schools and colleges. In this deduction I have the concurrence of every well-educated native with whom I talked. It must not be forgotten that it is claimed there are no pure-blood Visayans among the progressive people of the island. It is claimed that to this is due the fact that the island of Negros is so far ahead of the other islands of this archipelago in agricultural development.

We left Silay about noon, traveling on a native steamboat which plies between that port and Iloilo. If ever anything tended to illustrate the happy-go-lucky characteristics of the race, this trip may be cited. As soon as the steamer was well away from the harbor a game of monte was started on deck in which all of the officers took a hand, the captain himself dealing. The quartermaster at the wheel now pulled up a big armchair, in which he seated himself and was soon nodding. I observed him take more than one cat nap of five minutes or more duration. The engineer left the engine room and was soon engaged in an animated conversation with some native women. It can be seen that the two Americans on board were not in a very easy frame of mind, particularly as a stiff wind was blowing and there were many dangerous passages to be traversed. The usual Filipino quarrel over the game of monte took place. One of the losers claimed that the deck was marked and grabbed the deck out of the captain's hand and threw it overboard. But for the presence of my friend and myself I think knives would have been drawn, as every Filipino carried one, though Americans and Europeans are prohibited from carrying arms of any kind. Upon our arrival at the outer harbor of Iloilo, where the doctor and pilot boarded us, our crew became quiet and a more model set of officers and men could not be found.

And further on——

Mr. MANN. Read some more of it. That is the most interesting thing I have heard you get off for a good while.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Still investigating agricultural conditions, and having passed from this particular place, we find this:

In the clubrooms at Silay I noticed a number of good paintings, the work of a native artist named Pedro Respow. This man showed marked ability. I tried to induce his friends to send to the St. Louis Exposition an allegorical work of his which deserves mention. It represented Columbia, whose falling robes were the Stars and Stripes. She was standing with one hand pointing to the rising sun while her other arm was around the waist of a timid Filipino woman dressed in native costume. At one side was another native woman also looking at the rising sun, while a little in advance of these a third Visayan woman had turned and with a look of encouragement on her face had beckoned her sisters to follow. The face of only this one woman was visible, as the rest were looking away. The proportionate size of American and Visayan was carefully followed, as were the conditions of the costumes. No better evidence of the feeling of these peaceful agricultural people of Negros toward our Government could be found than this simple painting in the clubroom of the native hacienderos of the island of Negros.

And so deep an impression did this visit to these clubrooms make upon the minister or envoy of the Department of Agriculture that he felt it necessary to set it forth at length in this most interesting, if worthless, report.

Mr. Chairman, there are many other passages, for instance, to illustrate, the peculiar conditions in agriculture that exist in the Philippine Islands which may be of special advantage to some of those engaged in agriculture in this country. For instance:

Two amusing incidents happened on the trip from Bago to where we camped for the night, which well illustrate a superstition on the one hand and their want of feeling on the other.

Going along the road we observed a native plowing with a native plow by the use of a carabao, and I stopped the team in order to take his picture. He did not observe me until I was within 20 feet of him, but when he did he gave one exclamation of terror and ran precipitously for the nearest cane field, giving no heed to the call of my driver, who tried to reassure him, evidently taking my camera for a new kind of machine gun. It turned out afterwards that in describing it to Señor Arineta my driver stated that he had gone to lay down through fear.

The other incident was in crossing the Bago River; our bullock lay down and refused to go upon the raft. After using every means to make him get up the native cooly built a fire on his back, which, of course, had the desired effect.

Assuredly this incident will be of special value to agriculturists in this country. Whenever they come to a small stream across which they will have difficulty in driving cattle, all that it will be necessary for them to remember is that by building a fire upon the backs of their cattle they will quickly obtain the desired results. [Laughter.]

Mr. Chairman, there are some passages in this book to which I should prefer to call the attention of the Members privately. I would not desire to give them too great publicity. It does seem to me that some of the criticisms that have been mildly indulged in against the Department of Agriculture are to some extent justified by the issuance of commissions such as this, and the sending of men who confess in their report embarrassment because of their unfamiliarity with the languages spoken in the country which they visit, and whose reports consist of material that would be more appropriate in a narrative of adventures than it is in a report supposedly of a scientific character. If we are to start again investigations outside of the United States, I deem it wise to call attention to the existence of this most useful report in the hope that in the expenditure of the money proposed there will not be a duplication of such incidents.

Mr. LAMB. I will respectfully say to the gentleman from New York that he is bringing this subject to the attention of the wrong committee. He ought to either take that into consideration in his own committee, which has such a right of way, or else turn it over to the committee investigating the expenditures in the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Let me say to the gentleman that he was not in charge of the bill or at the head of the Committee on Agriculture when this commission was issued.

Mr. MANN. There were no expenditures.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I wish it brought to the attention of the department. I may discuss it more fully later on.

Mr. MANN. I never heard of this before, but I am very glad the gentleman has called it to our attention, because I notice, with some surprise, that the committee listened a great deal more attentively when the gentleman was reading from the document than when he was talking in his own right, which indicates it was very interesting, because the gentleman himself is always interesting and entertaining. I know "Lon" Stewart; and I suppose the gentleman knows him well. He used to be Deputy Sergeant at Arms of the Senate and, without exception, was the brightest man connected with a legislative body as an employee or officer that I have ever seen. He is now over in New York practicing law.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I am not reflecting on the gentleman. I was just calling the attention of the committee to the fact that no matter how well qualified he might have been as an employee in a legislative body he had none of the qualifications that fitted him as a representative of the Department of Agriculture in such an investigation.

Mr. MANN. The commission that authorized him, under the circumstances, to see what was going on and study the work of agriculture over there was proper. I would be perfectly willing to issue a commission of that sort to the gentleman from New York, who has lived in the city of Brooklyn all of his life, and probably would not know a farm if he saw it, but I would trust his acumen and judgment to get valuable and accurate information, either in the Philippine Islands or the United States if he were traveling around. And often I have availed myself of the privilege to hear him discuss matters concerning which he was not informed in advance and which he had studied at the time and about which he knew something. Now, he has brought before the House this subject and is endeavoring to criticize it on the ground that the gentleman who wrote it knew nothing about agriculture. What does the gentleman from New York know about agriculture? How does he know that Mr. Stewart was not a thorough agriculturist?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I know the description of a quarrel over a game of monte. The gentleman may be familiar with that game. He seems to know everything.

Mr. MANN. I have seen some Brooklyn fellows that played.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The game of monte might be very detrimental to the rural communities of this country. The report contains no information of value of any kind whatever, and the mere printing of it was a waste of money.

Mr. MANN. I would say it was very important to know whether on board a vessel going from one island to another the men who were in charge of the vessel sat down and played monte, that the engineer in charge came up and talked with the women, and the man at the wheel went to sleep. I think it is very important to know the class of people there and how they manage their business in the interests of agriculture outside of Brooklyn. It would not be important within the city of Brooklyn or in the limits of Chicago.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I suppose that is about the best possible defense that could be made of such a commission or such a report. The gentleman on his own experimental farm may, perhaps, be able to apply the information he has received about this quarrel over a game of monte or the advantages of transporting to Chicago or St. Louis this allegorical picture that was dreamed over in the club rooms at Silay, but it would not be of any advantage to any practical agriculturist——

Mr. MANN. Like the gentleman from Brooklyn.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Like the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I suggest that the amendment which I proposed a moment ago be read for the information of the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER] has offered an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 57, line 6, after the word "available," insert the words "Provided, That no part of this sum shall be used on the Atlantic seaboard."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, if the amendment has been agreed upon I have nothing to say in reference to it, although it would seem odd that in order to prevent the introduction of the Mediterranean fly into the United States you would prevent the expenditure of any money on the Atlantic seaboard and propose to confine it only to the Pacific seaboard. In that connection I would like to ask the gentleman this question, referring to the language, "For investigations of the Mediterranean fly in the United States and its possessions:" Does the gentleman think that Hawaii is a possession of the United States? It is a Territory of the United States. I am not sure whether it is embraced within the term "United States," but I am very sure it is not embraced within the term "its possessions." It is not one of the insular possessions of the United States, like Porto Rico or the Philippine Islands. It is a Territory of the United States.

Mr. LEVER. It should be "Territory" or "possessions."

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, may we have the amendment read again?

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will again report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 57, line 6, after the word "available," insert the words "Provided, That no part of this sum shall be used on the Atlantic seaboard."

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, this comes from the committee, does it?

Mr. LEVER. It does.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Why would you prevent the expenditure on the Atlantic seaboard of an appropriation for the investigation of a pest that might infect the Atlantic seaboard?

Mr. LEVER. I would say to my friend from Pennsylvania that the California delegation and certain gentlemen on the Atlantic seaboard have conferred about this matter, and on account of the fact that there is no probability of infestation through the Atlantic seaboard and some danger that the quarantine features of this provision may be dangerous they have agreed to this proposition,

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. But where does the Mediterranean fly originate?

Mr. LEVER. The Mediterranean fly is located now most largely in the Hawaiian Islands.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. You see we have vessels coming into the Atlantic ports from the Pacific. I do not think an exception should be made against Atlantic ports.

Mr. MANN. Let us be on the square with the gentleman and tell him why it is. [Laughter.] The gentleman from New York [Mr. HARRISON] was afraid that this would make an undue restriction and impose an onerous burden on the importation of Sicilian lemons, and he objected to its application to the Atlantic seaboard for that reason. I understand there is no likelihood of the fly coming in in that way, but if they did examine vessels for the fly at Atlantic ports he would object to it and make a point of order.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I do not want to interfere with the Pacific coast getting the advantage of this investigation, but I do want to give notice that if any such pest should arise on the Atlantic seaboard we shall expect equal consideration.

Mr. LEVER. There is no question about that.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. These questions are constantly arising. There ought to be no discrimination in a matter of this kind, but I do not want to hold this matter up.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman allow an interruption right there?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield to the gentleman from California?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. From the examination had before the committee it is shown that this pest is in the Hawaiian Islands, and there has been some discovered on the Pacific coast. Now, it is not in the East, and for fear that the item might go out on a point of order, is it not better to let it go as it is and make sure that the work will be actualy done where the ravages of this pest occur? I am with the gentleman as against any discrimination.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I want the gentlemen on the Pacific coast to get anything they can that may prevent havoc such as the gentleman anticipates there, but it should be borne in mind that vessels are constantly coming from the Pacific coast to the Atlantic coast, and that a pest which may visit the Pacific coast could be transmitted to the Atlantic coast.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield to the gentleman from California?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. KAHN. The purpose of this investigation is to enable the Department of Agriculture to send its experts into Hawaii Territory, where the fly has made its appearance within the last two years, and where it has done great havoc. They propose to send an expert to Australia, as I understand, to try to find a natural enemy to this fly. It is not contemplated, so far as I have been able to find out, to spend any of this money on the Atlantic seaboard in connection with this investigation. There is no fly there.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman means on the Pacific coast?

Mr. KAHN. On the Pacific coast. The investigation is to be made only on the Pacific coast, because that is where the fly is. There is none on the Atlantic seaboard, as I understand it. The purpose is to spend all of the appropriation on the Pacific seaboard.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me for a moment?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I will be satisfied to do that if my time is extended. This raises an important question. I do not want to hold up the course of business here, but I would like to know if we shall be prejudiced in this matter. That is all.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I will say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that he need have no fear on that score. The eastern seaboard is in no danger. Vessels are constantly coming from Hawaii to the ports of the Pacific coast, and we have instances constantly where individuals have brought infected fruit to our ports, and our inspectors have kept vigilant watch and insisted on the destruction of the fruit when it has come in. Of course this proposal of amending the item so that the appropriation will not be used except on the Pacific coast comes not from the Pacific coast, but from a gentleman who represents a constituency on the Atlantic side. It comes only from the Atlantic seaboard.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Why not leave it out? It raises a pernicious question of discrimination.

Mr. KAHN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. HARRISON] insisted that if it remained in he would make a point of order against the entire item, and we felt fearful lest the pest would come to the Pacific coast, and therefore we favored the amendment.

Mr. BOWMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] yield to his colleague?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Who has the floor, Mr. Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] has the floor.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That is what I thought.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] may have five minutes additional. I understand the gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. LAMB. Mr. Chairman, I do not want to ask for a recess, and I will ask the gentleman to proceed.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I want to hasten the business before the committee. I understand the pressure that is upon the chairman of the committee [Mr. LAMB], and I want to aid him all I can. But I want to suggest this to the chairman of the committee: What would be said if we should offer an amendment providing for an appropriation to carry on an investigation of the bubonic plague and should say that none of that money should be expended on the Pacific seaboard, simply because there has been an invasion of bubonic plague at one port on the Atlantic coast? Does not the gentleman see the unfairness of that proposition?

Mr. LEVER. The gentleman does not seem to take account of the fact that the Mediterranean fly is threatening to come into the country, not from the Atlantic seaboard, but from the Pacific seaboard.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I take it that if a vessel sails from the Pacific coast and comes, either around the Horn or through the Panama Canal hereafter, it may bring this fly to the Atlantic coast, which is just as much a menace to us as it is to the Pacific coast.

Mr. LEVER. That would depend on the length of time it takes to make the trip.

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Chairman, although the Mediterranean fly, by its name, would seem to be infesting Italy, on the Mediterranean Sea, it is not doing so. The fly originated in the island of Malta, but instead of going to Italy, it has migrated to the islands of the Pacific, to South Africa, to Australia, and to Hawaii.

Now, the only danger of infection is from Australia or Hawaii. There is no danger of infection by importation from Italy, as I understand it. If there were any danger, I for one should be just as anxious that the money should be spent upon the Atlantic seaboard as upon the Pacific, wherever the fly might be found, but I see no danger of infection from that source at the present time.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. What is the amount of the appropriation?

Mr. HAYES. Thirty-five thousand dollars. If there is danger in the future, we can, of course, provide for it in the next bill.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. While I do not propose to offer any further objection to this amendment, it seems to me it is not good legislation. It is not fair to the country at large, and I want in a friendly way to give notice that if any such pestilence as this should make its appearance along the Atlantic seaboard we would come very promptly to the committee to call its attention to the fact that this discrimination had been made.

Mr. LAMB. If any such thing breaks out, you will get assistance.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. If Congress were in session and the present chairman were in control, we should, but if Congress were not in session, and this pestilence should break out in the interim, we would have trouble.

Mr. LAMB. I ask for a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAWLEY. I offer an amendment on page 57, line 5, after the word "its," to insert the words "Territories and," so that it will read "United States and its Territories and possessions."

The Chairman. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, line 5, page 57, by inserting, after the word "its," the words "Territories and."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to return to the paragraph included in lines 22, 23, and 24, on page 56.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent to return to the paragraph beginning with line 22, on page 56. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. MANN. I think it is time to stop.

Mr. BARNHART. It will take only a moment.

Mr. MANN. Is this all agreed on?

Mr. LAMB. Yes.

Mr. BARNHART. I move to amend line 23 by striking out the word "nineteen" and inserting the word "twenty-four," and striking out the word "seven" and inserting the word "five," making the amount $24,500.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, line 23, page 56, by striking out the word "nineteen" and inserting the word "twenty-four," and striking out the word "seven" and inserting in lieu thereof the word "five."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the subject of the Delaware River, and also upon the subject of the Chesapeake & Delaware Canal.

Mr. MANN. I hope the gentleman will make that request in the House.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Very well.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, on page 57, in line 5, an amendment was offered by the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. HAWLEY] which leaves two "ands," making it read "the United States and its Territories and possessions." I move to strike out the first word "and" after "States" and to insert a comma after "States."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 5, page 57, strike out the word "and" and insert after the word "States" a comma.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Total for Bureau of Entomology, $624,880.

Mr. LAMB. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. BORLAND, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 18960) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and had come to no resolution thereon.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted—

To Mr. CLARK of Florida, indefinitely, on account of important business.

To Mr. THAYER, for 10 days, on account of important business.

LEAVE TO EXTEND REMARKS.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the subject of the Delaware River, and also on the subject of the Chesapeake & Delaware Canal.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I do not desire to object. Has this anything to do with the controversy between the gentleman and——

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Nothing whatever.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the subject of the Delaware River, and also on the subject of the Chesapeake & Delaware Canal. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that my colleague Mr. RODENBERG have leave to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the subject of the Bureau of Chemistry and the Referee Board.

Mr. LEVER. I make the same request.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] asks unanimous consent that his colleague [Mr. RODENBERG] have unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the subject of the Bureau of Chemistry and the Referee Board, and the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER] makes the same request. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the subject of the Mediterranean fly.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the subject of the Mediterranean fly. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the subject of the Remsen Board.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the subject of the Remsen Board. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

SENATE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION AND BILL REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate concurrent resolution No. 19 and bill of the following title were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees, as indicated below:

Senate concurrent resolution 19.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That preliminary to such legislation by Congress as may be necessary to enable the Government of the United States to be properly represented on such occasion the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to confer with the Fiftieth Anniversary of the Battle of Gettysburg Commission of the State of Pennsylvania, and,

Mr. JONES. I desire to state that my colleague [Mr. POINDEXTER] is absent on account of the death of his mother. This notice will stand for the rest of the day.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Fifty-nine Senators have answered to their names, and a quorum of the Senate is present.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by D. K. Hempstead, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House insists upon its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 19238) to amend section 90 of the act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911; agrees to the conference asked for by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. CLAYTON, Mr. CARLIN, and Mr. STERLING managers at the conference on the part of the House.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bill and joint resolution, and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

S. 339. An act providing for the reappraisement and sale of certain lands in the town site of Port Angeles, Wash., and for other purposes; and

S. J. Res. 83. Joint resolution making appropriations to meet certain contingent expenses of the Senate.

REGULATION OF IMMIGRATION.

Mr. LODGE. I gave notice yesterday that on Wednesday I would call up the bill (S. 3175) to regulate the immigration of aliens to and the residence of aliens in the United States. I ask leave to change that notice to Monday next.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The change will be made as requested, without objection.

Mr. CRAWFORD presented a petition of sundry citizens of Pukwana, S. Dak., remonstrating against the extension of the parcel-post system beyond its present limitations, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

He also presented petitions of sundry citizens of Mitchell and Blunt, in the State of South Dakota, praying for the enactment of an interstate liquor law to prevent the nullification of State liquor laws by outside dealers, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented memorials of sundry citizens of Douglas and Mix Counties, in the State of South Dakota, remonstrating against the enactment of legislation compelling the observance of Sunday as a day of rest in post offices, which were referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

Mr. PENROSE presented petitions of the congregations of the Trinity Lutheran Church, the Diamond Methodist Episcopal Church, of St. Paul's Methodist Episcopal Church, and of the Salem Evangelical Church, all of Hazleton, in the State of Pennsylvania, praying for the enactment of an interstate liquor law to prevent the nullification of State liquor laws by outside dealers, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. GALLINGER presented a petition of Captain Fred. J. Miller Camp, No. 11, Department of New Hampshire, Spanish War Veterans, of Claremont, N. H., praying for the enactment of legislation to pension widow and minor children of any officer or enlisted man who served in the Spanish-American War or the Philippine insurrection, which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. WETMORE presented a petition of Sidney F. Hoar Camp, No. 4, Department of Rhode Island, Spanish War Veterans, of Providence, R. I., praying for the enactment of legislation providing for the retirement of petty officers and enlisted men in the United States Navy and Marine Corps, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of Kent County Chapter, Sons of the American Revolution, of Rhode Island, praying for the enactment of legislation to provide for the publication of certain Revolutionary records, which was referred to the Committee on Printing.

He also presented a petition of Sidney F. Hoar Camp, No. 4, Department of Rhode Island, Spanish War Veterans, of Providence, R. I., praying for the enactment of legislation to pension widow and minor children of any officer or enlisted man who served in the War with Spain or the Philippine insurrection, which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. LODGE presented petitions of the congregations of the Baptist Church and the Second Congregational Church, of Attleboro; of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Attleboro; and of Local Grange, Patrons of Husbandry, of Williamsburg, all in the State of Massachusetts, praying for the enactment of an interstate liquor law to prevent the nullification of State liquor laws by outside dealers, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. SHIVELY presented a petition of sundry citizens of Odon, Ind., praying for the establishment of a parcel-post system, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

He also presented a memorial of members of the Retail Merchants' Association, of Columbus, Ind., remonstrating against the extension of the parcel-post system beyond its present limitations, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

He also presented a memorial of members of the St. John's Sick Benefit Association, of Vincennes, Ind., remonstrating against the enactment of an interstate liquor law to prevent the nullification of State liquor laws by outside dealers, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a memorial of the Building Trades Council, of Marion County, Ind., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation to regulate the pay of the Organized Militia, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. FLETCHER presented a petition of sundry citizens of Wacissa, Cody, Jacksonville, and Barton, all in the State of Florida, praying for the establishment of a parcel-post system, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

He also presented a petition of the Retail Dealers' Association of Tampa, Fla., praying for the adoption of a 1-cent letter postage, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

He also presented a petition of General Joe Wheeler Camp, No. 2, Department of Florida, United Spanish War Veterans, of Tampa, Fla., praying for the enactment of legislation to pension the widow and minor children of any officer or enlisted man who served in the War with Spain or the Philippine insurrection, which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented a petition of sundry clerks employed in the Quartermaster's and Subsistence Departments of the Army, stationed at Boston, Mass., praying that the status of the clerks in the Quartermaster's and Subsistence Departments, under the proposed consolidation of the Quartermaster's, Subsistence, and Pay Departments be made the same as that of the Army Paymaster's clerks under the act of Congress approved March 3, 1911, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. CLAPP presented memorials of sundry citizens of Mora, Plainview, Dodge Center, Luverne, Jackson, Grand Rapids, Winona, Biwabik, Glencoe, Rollingstone, and Onamia, all in the State of Minnesota, remonstrating against the extension of the parcel-post system beyond its present limitations, which were referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

He also presented petitions of sundry citizens of Farris, Cass Lake, Puposky, Brainerd, Outing, and Buena Vista, all in the State of Minnesota, praying for the establishment of a parcel-post system, which were referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

Mr. REED presented petitions of sundry citizens of Senath, St. Louis, Bonne Terre, Louisiana, Independence, Columbia, Plattsburg, and Williamsville, all in the State of Missouri, praying for the enactment of an interstate liquor law to prevent the nullification of State liquor laws by outside dealers, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a petition of the congregations of the Methodist, United Brethren, and Presbyterian Churches, and of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, all of Raymore, in the State of Missouri, praying for the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution to prohibit the manufacture, sale, and importation of intoxicating liquors, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented memorials of sundry citizens of Fayette, Nixa, Joplin, Oak Grove, Braymer, Poplar Bluff, Brookfield, Kansas City, Wakanda, Hannibal, Armstrong, and Rondo, all in the State of Missouri, remonstrating against the extension of the parcel-post system beyond its present limitations, which were referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

Mr. DU PONT presented a petition of members of the Epworth League of the Mount Pleasant Methodist Episcopal Church, of Bellevue, Del., praying for the enactment of an interstate liquor law to prevent the nullification of State liquor laws by outside dealers, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. BRANDEGEE, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (S. 3925) providing for an increase of salary of the United States marshal for the district of Nevada, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 474) thereon.

Mr. PERKINS, from the Committee on Appropriations, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 20111) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 475) thereon.

Mr. BRYAN, from the Committee on Claims, to which were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment:

S. 4098. A bill for the relief of the estate of Fernando Valdez, deceased;

S. 4128. A bill for the relief of the estates of Frances M. Stuart and William H. Bush;

S. 4153. A bill for the relief of the estate of Alton R. Dalrymple;

S. 4186. A bill for the relief of the estates of Milton T. Carey and others;

S. 4208. A bill for the relief of the estates of Edward Christie and Louis Feldman;

S. 4213. A bill for the relief of the estate of Harriet B. Anderson and others;

S. 4254. A bill for the relief of the estate of William H. Abbott and others;

S. 4257. A bill for the relief of the estate of Charles C. Benton and others;

S. 4456. A bill for the relief of the estate of Silas F. Baker;

S. 4552. A bill for the relief of the estate of Benjamin B. Cox and others;

S. 4564. A bill for the relief of the estate of Maurice T. Smith and Ella P. Williams;

S. 4599. A bill for the relief of Frederick Beckstein and others; and

S. 4661. A bill for the relief of the estate of T. B. Cowan and others.

Mr. JONES, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (S. 5218) for the relief of Joshua F. Spurling, submitted an adverse report (No. 476) thereon, which was agreed to and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. BURTON, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, to which was referred the bill (S. 4930) to carry into effect the provisions of a convention for the unification of certain rules with respect to assistance and salvage at sea, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 477) thereon.

H. J. RANDOLPH HEMMING.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I ask leave to withdraw the report of the Committee on Claims upon the bill (S. 3288) for the relief of H. J. Randolph Hemming, which is on the calendar. I wish to state, so that the reason may appear in the RECORD, that the committee now finds that this claim is included in an arbitration agreement, and is in a schedule in that agreement which has been made between Great Britain and the United States. The claim is in process of adjustment in that way. So we desire to have the bill recommitted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the report of the committee will be withdrawn, and the bill will be recommitted as indicated.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS INTRODUCED.

By Mr. OWEN:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 85) relative to patents to allotted lands in the Seminole country, and for other purposes; and

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 86) relative to the delivery of patents to allotted lands within the limits of the Five Civilized Tribes, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

AMENDMENTS TO RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

Mr. FLETCHER submitted an amendment providing for the survey of the St. Johns River from the outlet of Lake Harney to Lake Washington, Fla., etc., intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor appropriation bill (H. R. 21477), which was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment providing for a channel from Pineland on Pine Island, Lee County, Fla., etc., intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor appropriation bill (H. R. 21477), which was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $100,000 for improving St. Lucie Inlet, Fla., etc., intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor appropriation bill (H. R. 21477), which was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed.

Mr. PERKINS submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $100,000 for the improvement of the Sacramento and Feather Rivers, Cal., etc., intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor appropriation bill (H. R. 21477), which was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed.

THE METAL SCHEDULE.

Mr. CUMMINS. I offer a Senate resolution for which I ask immediate consideration.

The resolution (S. Res. 247) was read as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be directed to report to the Senate as soon as possible the wholesale market price in England, Germany, France, and Belgium, during the last year, of the various items and commodities named in paragraphs 117 to 140, inclusive, 144, 146, 150, 151, 159 to 163, inclusive, 169, 171, 181, 182, 193, and 194 of Schedule C of the tariff act of 1909.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask the Senator from Iowa if that is to be by months or the average price?

Mr. CUMMINS. The Secretary of the Treasury, as I understand, has in his possession, or in one of his bureaus, the trade journals of all of these countries showing the market price of these various commodities. I have not attempted to specify as to just the time that he shall take for the report. I leave that to his own discretion.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have noticed that in consequence of the great strike that is now on in Great Britain and in France and in Germany, to some extent, the prices of those commodities have risen very greatly during the last two or three weeks.

Mr. CUMMINS. I had not, of course, intended to take into account those extraordinary fluctuations.

Mr. GALLINGER. I assume that we shall get only approximate information at best, but I think that is very valuable. I did not rise to object to the resolution at all.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to.

WATER RIGHTS IN HAWAII (S. DOC. NO. 403).

Mr. WARREN. I ask to have printed as a document certain papers which I send to the desk. They are from the War Department, respecting the source of the water supply for certain Army posts in the Hawaiian Islands.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The order will be entered, without objection.

PRINTING OF PARCEL-POST BILLS (S. DOC. NO. 430).

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. I ask unanimous consent to have printed together, as a Senate document, copies of all prints of bills now pending in both Houses for the establishment of a parcel post.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

SEMINOLE PATENTS (S. DOC. NO. 405).

Mr. OWEN. I present certain papers relating to patents to lands of the Seminole Indians. I move that the papers be printed as a public document and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

COTTON-MILL LIFE IN NORTH CAROLINA.

Mr. OVERMAN. I ask to have printed in the RECORD an extract from the Greensboro News of March 9 containing letters from some cotton-mill hands employed in the mills at Greensboro, N. C.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from North Carolina asks to have printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD a paper which he sends to the desk. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

COTTON-MILL LIFE.

The Daily News some days ago expressed itself in regard to the slanderous and false report sent out from Washington dealing with the condition of operatives in southern cotton-mill towns. Attention was directed particularly to the situation at our local mills because we are more familiar with them. We have received a letter signed by three young ladies employed in the Proximity mills, giving a short, concise story of that situation from the viewpoint of the operatives themselves. They ask that the facts be printed, but do not care to have their names published. They do not object to having their names given to anybody who may be interested or who may doubt their statements. We do not accept communications for publication without the name of the author being published with them, but we make an exception in this case and quote the letter here, on the ground that we indorse the communication, knowing the facts to be true; and, further, for the interests not only of the three young women themselves but for the whole community of good people employed in the mills of this community. The letter says:

"We have read the article which was published in the papers a few days ago on southern cotton-mill life, and hereby denounce the statements as false and wish to state them as they really are.

"We three have worked in the cotton mills for 8 or 10 years, and have worked for the Proximity Manufacturing Co. for about 5 years in the weaving room.

"We have nice, kind overseers and make good wages, averaging from $1.32 to $2.64 per day. We work only 10 hours each day up to Saturday, when we quit work at 11.40 o'clock. We are never made to work when we are unable. After our expenses, we are able to save from $15 to $20 per month.

"Mr. Cone, the owner of the Proximity mill, has provided for us two nice churches, a good school, and a hall, in which our fraternal orders may meet; also an assembly hall, in which we may give receptions or entertainments. He has employed for us teachers of sewing and cooking, so that the ladies of the village may become acquainted with the art of domestic science. We also have a nice library at the school, where we can get books to read through the summer. He has provided for us a large picnic ground, where the inhabitants of the three villages—Proximity, Revolution, and White Oak—assemble on the Fourth of July to celebrate and have a good time generally. Refreshments and good things to eat are served throughout that day, while the Textile Band furnishes enlivening music. Mr. Cone bears all these expenses, and we feel that he gives this to show his love for his employees.

In the spring he furnishes every home with flower and grass seeds, and then on the Fourth of July he awards prizes for the most beautiful yards and neatly kept premises. And then, on Christmas, he presents each family with a nice, fat turkey. What more could anyone want?

The article which was published in the papers on southern cotton mill life stated that our daily fare consisted of corn bread and sirup and that the mothers wear the discarded dresses of their daughters. We say this is absolutely false. There are perhaps some very few who live very poorly, but the majority are in very good circumstances. They have plenty to eat and nice clothes to wear.

And we wish to say in the end that we are improving every day. Electric lights are now being placed in the homes and on the streets. This is an example of a southern cotton mill. We hope none of them are as bad as they are reported by some people.

What matters! On that great day to come we will not be judged by what we eat and wear, but we will all be judged alike, rich or poor. We hope this will show the author of the article concerning southern cotton mills of his mistake.

Anyone wanting proof of these statements which we have made can get our names at the office of the Daily News, and we will stand good for any of them.

THREE PROXIMITY MILL GIRLS.

That is a straight, unvarnished statement of the truth by young women who are courageous enough to resent an injustice, though that injustice be committed by the sanction of governmental authority. The departmental agents who made the slanderous report complained of should be required to call names and state emphatically where they found the conditions reported. If the truth was known, they greatly exaggerated a few isolated cases or else the whole thing was a frame-up of a vivid imagination.

AMENDMENT OF PRINTING LAWS.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the printing bill now pending before the Senate is the product of the Printing Investigation Commission. This commission, under authority of Congress, has been at work for the last seven years investigating the public printing and binding and the distribution of Government publications. From time to time the commission has made reports to Congress as to the progress of its work, and several important laws relating to printing and binding now on the statute books are due to its recommendations.

When the commission was created by Congress it was specifically directed "if, in their judgment, the conditions as they find them warrant remedial legislation, to report a bill at the next session of Congress making such reductions in the cost of printing and such changes and reductions in the distribution of said publications as they may deem expedient, with a report giving their reasons therefor." (33 Stat. L., 1249, act of Mar. 3, 1905.)

The commission found this work to be of such magnitude and importance that Congress continued and broadened its authority so that the commission might have ample time to complete its work and make a full report thereof to Congress. The act of March 4, 1907 (34 Stat. L., 1394), provides that the Printing Investigation Commission, among other duties, "shall have power to inquire into the general subject of the public printing and binding for Congress and the various executive departments, bureaus, boards, and other offices of the Government and the distribution of public documents," and to report such remedial legislation as the commission may deem proper. It is evident, therefore, that the Printing Investigation Commission in submitting the present bill is complying with the direct mandate of Congress. Whether this work has been well and faithfully done is for Congress itself to determine.

NEED TO REVISE PRINTING LAWS.

There has been no general revision of the printing laws of the Government since the act of January 12, 1895, which is now 17 years old, and is so plastered with amendments that its own authors could not recognize it as the once proud product of their efforts to reform the public printing and binding. Even the act of 1895 was not a complete revision and codification of the then existing laws relating to the public printing. To-day there are still remaining on the statute books many printing provisions that date back to the fifties and sixties. A compilation of this entangling mass of printing laws fills 142 printed pages. In 1909 an effort was made to gather together in one volume all the laws, regulations, and decisions governing the public printing and binding, the operation of the Government Printing Office, and the distribution and sale of Government publications. When this work was printed it filled more than 1,000 pages of an ordinary sized document, and even then did not contain all the laws or decisions relating to that voluminous subject. The Comptroller of the Treasury has been prolific in his decisions involving the construction of the printing laws and these decisions fill several hundred typewritten pages. The Attorney General, also, has rendered many opinions in regard to the same subject. Some of these decisions and opinions have so changed the construction of these laws that it is very difficult to ascertain what is and what is not the law on certain phases of the printing problems of the Government. Congress, in creating the Printing Investigation Commission and charging it with the duty of reporting remedial legislation, was not alone in recognizing that the time had come for a general revision of the printing laws. Every commission, committee, or expert who has investigated the subject of the public printing and binding in recent years has recommended that a complete revision of the printing laws must be undertaken by Congress before the Government Printing Office can be put upon a modern business basis and the proper economies effected which will end many of the gross extravagances that are either possible under or are caused by the antiquated and obsolete laws governing the public printing and binding. Every department and branch of the Government has urged that this work be undertaken and carried to success.

A Committee on Department Methods, appointed by President Roosevelt, in its report to him on the public printing, under date of January 2, 1906, said:

That the cost of printing in the Government Printing Office can be reduced by better administration, by better discipline, by better methods of purchasing supplies, by increased use of labor-saving machinery, and by dispensing with unnecessary employees, was admitted by the Acting Public Printer, but for some of the shortcomings of the Printing Office the printing statutes are themselves largely responsible. In fact, the act of 1895, providing for the public printing and binding, is a defective statute in many respects, and a new law, covering the whole subject, should be enacted. Not only are unrelated subjects jumbled together in the existing act in the most obscure and confusing way, but it abounds in inconsistencies and verbal defects.

The men who signed this report and concurred in its view of the present printing laws were C. H. Keep, then Assistant Secretary of the Treasury; F. H. Hitchcock, the present Postmaster General; Lawrence O. Murray, the present Comptroller of the Currency; James Rudolph Garfield, former Secretary of the Interior; and Gifford Pinchot, former Chief Forester.

A similar statement was made by Mr. George French in his report on the Government Printing Office to the senior Senator from Oregon, Mr. BOURNE, then chairman of a subcommittee of the Senate Committee on Expenditures.

In this report Mr. French, who was recognized to be one of the leading printing experts in the country, said of the printing laws:

The laws that relate to the Government Printing Office should be codified and amended. They are very voluminous, and there are among them some that only tend to confusion and waste, at this time.

Concerning the same subject, the Printing Investigation Commission said, in a report (S. Rept. No. 1044, 60th Cong., 2d sess.), to Congress:

Section 5 of a joint resolution approved June 23, 1860, formed the legislative basis of the present printing law, and upon this the law, such as it is, was constructed. The last attempt at revision is known as the "general printing act," approved January 12, 1895. This did not assume to be a complete codification, and there were no specific repeals. The ten years of its operation were characterized by an increase in expenditures for the public printing and binding, as shown by a comparison of such expenditures for the fiscal year 1905 with those of 1895, of $3,577,048, or 102 per cent. This is due in part at least to the fact that the revision of the law left remaining many conflicting provisions, but more to the fact that the amendments to this revision, many scores in number, have tended to destroy any spirit of harmony or consistency which may have characterized the revision itself. * * *

As a further result, the law can not, as it stands, be intelligently codified without thorough revision, nor can it even be efficiently indexed. These somewhat caustic comments on the existing printing law have been voiced by trained and experienced men who have attempted both, and who have confirmed the view which the commission itself has long entertained.

Again in its report (S. Doc. No. 652, 61st Cong., 2d sess.) the Printing Commission said of the laxity of the present printing laws and its plan to recommend a complete revision:

The chief cause for the abuses which have grown up with regard to this matter is found in the laxity and incompleteness of the printing laws. The act approved January 12, 1895, providing for public printing and binding and the distribution of public documents, is the principal printing act now upon the statute books. There are numerous other provisions passed prior and since this general printing act, which affect public printing and binding. There are also a great many decisions of the Comptroller of the Treasury and the Attorney General construing various printing laws. The result is that, at the present time, the printing laws are defective in a great many ways and are not sufficiently clear to serve as an intelligent guide.

The Printing Investigation Commission has, therefore, made a special effort during the present session of Congress to investigate and examine the condition of Congress, the departments, independent offices of the Government, and the Government Printing Office with reference to public printing and binding and the distribution of public documents with a view of recommending a revision, consolidation, and codification of the printing laws.

HISTORY OF GOVERNMENT PRINTING.

To more fully understand the need for undertaking this work of revising the printing laws with great care and thoroughness, it may be well for me to give the Senate a brief review of the history of printing for the Government and the importance that Congress has always attached to that work. From the very foundation of the Government Congress has insisted on direct supervision over the public printing and binding. The Public Printer was for many years called the "Congressional Printer," and the Government Printing Office was established primarily for the work of Congress and only incidentally for that of the other branches of the Government. Congress has never relinquished its control over this work and I doubt if it ever will. It is absolutely essential that the Government Printing Office should be immediately responsive to the wishes and needs of Congress, or else that publicity which is vital to good government could not be insured the people of this country.

Even the Continental Congress had its printing problems and troubles. In 1777 that Congress adopted a resolution authorizing "the Committee of Intelligence to take the most expedient and effective measures for getting a printing press erected in Yorktown for the purpose of conveying to the public the intelligence that they may from time to time receive." This resolution providing for the first Government printing press was due to the fact that the frequent changes in the seat of government caused Congress to be without means of publishing its acts or printing its journals.

The First Congress under the Constitution required a special resolution to be passed by either House whenever it was desired to print a bill or other document. This was soon found impracticable, however, and the first Joint Printing Committee was appointed to investigate the subject and receive proposals for printing the acts and proceedings of Congress. The report of this committee, which was adopted by both Houses, provided that the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House should contract for the printing and binding for their respective Houses. Under this contract system the estimate for printing, including stationery, bookbinding, and other contingent and incidental expenses of the Senate for the first session of the First Congress, was $2,300, and for the House $3,657, a total of $5,957. The magnitude to which the public printing and binding has grown is shown by the fact that for the fiscal year 1911, which covers practically the third session of the Sixty-first Congress, the cost of printing and binding for Congress amounted to $2,036,416.79, of which $509,888.79 was for the Senate, $581,148.74 for the House, and $945,379.26 for Congress as a whole. A single Member of the Sixty-first Congress obtained more printing, by unanimous consent, than was done for the entire Congress during its first session in 1789. During the early Congresses the cost of the public printing did not increase very rapidly. In 1794 the cost was so small that it was put in the contingent expenses along with such items as firewood, and the cost in that year for both Houses of Congress and the departments amounted to only $17,461.67.

When the seat of government was removed to Washington in 1801 there was no printing office in the city of Washington of sufficient size to do the work required for Congress. John Randolph informed the House in regard to certain documents which had been ordered printed that "owing to the state of machinery in this place" (referring to the city of Washington), the printing could not be completed in less than 20 days, during which time the Committee on Ways and Means was at a standstill. During the administration of President Jefferson the "Message and Documents" when printed made an octavo volume of 100 pages, and 500 copies were ordered at a cost of $520.75. This was thought to be a gross extravagance by Mr. Bayard, of Delaware, who insisted that 150 copies were sufficient. The Message and Documents as now printed by Congress, even in abridged form, fills 2,000 printed pages, of which 12,000 copies are authorized, costing approximately $23,000.

Congress, in 1804, authorized the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House to advertise for proposals for printing, stationery, and fuel for the next Congress and to award the contract to the lowest bidder. This system for the public printing prevailed until 1819. The work was done by a force of not to exceed 40 persons and the wages paid to journeymen printers in that year were $10 a week during a session of Congress and $9 during the recess. No extra pay was allowed for overtime work. A special committee which had been appointed to inquire into the subject of the public printing made a report in 1819 that led to the passage of a joint resolution establishing a schedule of prices for the public printing and providing for the election by each House, by ballot, of a printer to execute the work of the House electing him. Under this arrangement the publishers of a Washington newspaper were elected printers for both Houses of Congress. The cost of the public printing advanced from $17,000 to $29,000 per session, and a subsequent inquiry developed the fact that the profits of these printers were about 55 per cent and that public officers had aided the printers in obtaining such profits by encouraging excessive and useless printing.

By 1828 the public printing had resulted in such extravagances owing to its use for political patronage that the House ordered an investigation of the entire subject. This investigation disclosed the fact that documents of unnecessary size and containing almost utterly useless matter were printed to swell the profits of the printer. The evidence showed that one-third of the appropriation made for the public printing at that time covered the entire expense of the printer and that two-thirds went to his personal profit.

Another investigation in 1840 showed that the estimated profit of the congressional printers employed during the seven preceding years had been $467,464.44, or an estimated annual profit of $66,780.40. These enormous profits were made possible by violating the law in reducing the size of pages and using larger type than specified and by adding useless title pages to documents and reports.

In 1842 the Senate Committee on Printing, with a desire to discontinue the use of the public printing as political patronage, recommended the establishment of a Government Printing Office. The committee, however, was unable to agree as to the proper method of putting such an office in operation.

In 1846 a joint resolution was passed by Congress establishing the contract system for the public printing, and it was thought at the time that this would solve all the problems that had perplexed Congress for many years in regard to the public printing and binding. The same year the Joint Committee on Printing was created to supervise the printing for the two Houses, and this committee has been continued in existence ever since.

The contract system of 1846 soon failed. The contracts for printing were entered into without care and exorbitant prices were generally charged. The contractors did not preserve the plates of any Government publications, and when additional copies were ordered it required that the entire matter be reset. Engravings for the Senate were afterwards used for the House and charged as original engravings, and excessive prices were paid for paper.

Several investigations followed, and in 1852 an act was passed providing for the appointment of a "Superintendent of Public Printing" who should supervise work done by printers elected by the Senate and House and be designated by the President. This resulted in politicians generally being elected printers for Congress. These printers made a practice of "farming out" the work, and the committee reported that the printers of the Senate and the House let out the work, which was intended they should do, at a profit to themselves of about $300,000 a year. It was testified that one printer contributed $100,000 for political purposes in four years, besides paying $200,000 to printers of the House and Senate whose contracts were sublet to him and $150,000 to political friends on insufficient securities. The committee which investigated these abuses reported to Congress in 1860 that the contract system of public printing was the worst that could have been adopted, that it invited profuse expenditures, and was corrupting in its tendencies. This committee found that a candidate for printer to the House made an offer to a caucus of Members of the House to give one-half the profits from printing for "the good of the cause," if he were elected. He was selected candidate for printer the same day, but was not elected.

As a consequence of the failure of the contract system the Government, in 1860, purchased a private printing plant for the sum of $135,000. The building in which this plant was located is still a part of the Government Printing Office, being located at the corner of H and North Capitol Streets. That was the beginning of the Government Printing Office. The original investment of $135,000 in this plant has grown to approximately $8,000,000. The Government Printing Office is now the finest of its kind in the world and an institution of which every American citizen should be proud. The cost of the public printing in 1860, when the Government Printing Office was established, was $866,868, while the expenditures for the public printing and binding for the fiscal year 1911 were nearly eight times that amount, or $6,581,565.08.

Congress in 1867 changed the title of the public printer from Superintendent of Public Printing to that of "Congressional Printer." This was his designation until 1874, when the present title of "Public Printer" was conferred upon that officer.

The establishment of a Government Printing Office did not end the abuses in public printing and binding. Since 1860 there have been nine investigations of the Government Printing Office authorized by Congress, four investigations conducted by direction of the President, and one by the audit system, which was itself the subject of an investigation that resulted in its being ousted from the Government Printing Office.

The first revision and codification of the printing laws was undertaken in the Revised Statutes of 1874, when printing laws dating as far back as 1813 were brought together under title 45, including sections 3756 to 3828 of the Revised Statutes.

ACT OF JANUARY 12, 1895.

Despite the numerous investigations that followed, no further revision of the printing laws was undertaken until 17 years later, when Congress passed the act of January 12, 1895. Now another period of 17 years has passed and Congress has before it a third proposed revision and codification of the printing laws.

The printing act of 1895 was the work of a special committee, consisting of Senator Hawley, of Connecticut, and Representative James D. Richardson, of Tennessee. This committee was authorized to undertake the work by a concurrent resolution of February 29, 1891. They filed a report on the proposed bill January 13, 1892. This first report, including the bill which was printed with it, consisted of only 35 pages. It was accompanied by 250 pages of testimony taken by the committee relative to the general subject of public printing and binding and 168 pages of an inquiry into departmental printing. The bill did not pass Congress that session and was reintroduced on July 24, 1894, by Senator Gorman, who was then chairman of the Senate Committee on Printing. This second bill was accompanied by a report of only 52 pages.

The act of 1895 seemed to operate satisfactorily for nearly 10 years, the longest period which Congress has permitted to pass without a printing investigation. However, during those 10 years in which Congress refrained from an investigation of the public printing and binding, the expenditures for the Government Printing Office more than doubled. In 1895, when the present printing law was enacted, the disbursements of the Public Printer amounted to $3,473,780.92. For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1904, just prior to the creation of the Printing Investigation Commission, the Public Printer expended $7,080,906.73, an increase of $3,607,125.81 for the 10-year period.

Let me state right here that the expenditures of the Government Printing Office began to decrease rapidly after the Printing Investigation Commission got to work in 1905, and for the fiscal year 1910 the expenditures for the public printing and binding were $988,468.32 less than for the year prior to the establishment of the commission. That decrease of nearly a million dollars a year was due to legislation recommended by this commission and to numerous economies which it effected in the public printing and binding. This saving in the Government printing was secured despite the fact that the volume of printing and binding increased during the same period, and it was accomplished without impairing the public service in the slightest degree. The bill now before the Senate will effect a further saving of at least $600,000 a year if it is enacted into law. This estimate does not take into consideration the saving that will be made by the use of power presses for the printing of bonds, notes, and checks at the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, as that provision has been stricken out of the present bill as reported back to the Senate. Perhaps I ought to state that the power-press provision which the Printing Committee has recommended for consideration in connection with the sundry civil appropriation bill will alone make a saving of $140,000 for the first year and effect an annual economy of $600,000 at the end of five years. Should Congress enact into law both the pending bill and the proposed amendment relating to the printing of bonds, notes, and checks, the total annual economy that could be effected as a result of the work of the Printing Investigation Commission would amount to more than $1,200,000 a year in five years' time.

EXPENDITURES FOR PRINTING.

Perhaps it would be well for me to give the Senate some idea as to the large expenditures of the Government Printing Office. In the 36 years since 1876 Congress has appropriated for the Government Printing Office and the public printing and binding a total of $147,183,815.82. This sum is almost equal to the amount that Congress now annually appropriates for pensions. It is $40,000,000 greater than the annual cost of the naval establishment of the Government and almost equal to the amount appropriated for the entire Treasury Department, including public buildings and works, for the fiscal year 1912. The expenditures of the Government Printing Office for the fiscal year 1911 were approximately two million greater than the appropriations for the State Department, and within $600,000 of all the salaries and expenses of Congress for that year.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. NELSON. May I ask the Senator a question in this connection?

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly.

Mr. NELSON. Do we pay a higher rate at the Government Printing Office than is paid throughout the country at the ordinary printing offices?

Mr. SMOOT. I have those figures, and I expect to present them to the Senate, as gathered from 15 of the large cities of the United States.

Mr. BRISTOW. I should like to ask the Senator if he shows in his address what credits the Government is entitled to for documents that are sold or money that is paid in for work done?

Mr. SMOOT. Do you mean for private work?

Mr. BRISTOW. Yes. I understand the Senator shows the total cost of the printing establishment. Then there are certain receipts. Are they shown in any tabulated form?

Mr. SMOOT. I will give those figures before I get through; but, as I remember, it amounts to about $175,000 per annum.

In the fiscal year 1895 the employees of the Government Printing Office were paid $2,553,315. In 1911 they were paid $3,498,112. The salaries paid in the office of the Public Printer in 1895 amounted to $14,980, and in 1911, $192,321. Paper for the Government Printing Office in 1895 cost $420,521, and for 1911 the paper necessary for the Government printing cost $1,342,853. Material and other supplies for the Government Printing Office in 1895 cost $367,028, and for 1911, $611,573. Lithographing and engraving for the Government Printing Office cost $115,180 in 1895, and $133,362 in 1911.

In addition to the six and one-half million dollars which are disbursed by the Government Printing Office, more than a million dollars a year is spent by other branches of the Government for printing and binding done outside of the Government Printing Office.

Concerning the magnitude of the work now done by the Government Printing Office, I quote the following from the statement which the Public Printer made in a recent hearing before the Senate committee on the pending bill:

> The Government has invested approximately eight millions of dollars in the building and plant known as the Government Printing Office. The establishment of this institution was necessary in order that the printing of Congress might be performed in an economical and satisfactory manner. In order that permanent employment might be provided for a force of mechanics sufficient to perform the congressional work during the sessions of Congress, the printing and binding of all the executive departments was diverted to the Government Printing Office. During the fiscal year ended June 30, 1911, there were produced in the Government Printing Office 50,044,772 copies of publications, almost 1,000,000 copies weekly. The number of blank books with patent backs manufactured was 10,121; blank books without patent backs, 1,105,930. The value of the blank books produced was $314,261.63.

WORK OF THE COMMISSION.

It is apparent, therefore, that the task confronting the Printing Investigation Commission when it was created in 1905 was not a small one, and I am sure that a careful study of the work done by the commission in the past seven years will convince anyone that it has rendered a splendid service to the Government. Up to date the commission has cost the Government less than $35,000 and has already effected a saving of several million dollars in the public printing and binding, without considering the economies proposed in the present bill. I do not believe there is another commission in the history of the Government that has accomplished so great economies for the people of this country at such a small expenditure of the public funds. The commission has had the hearty cooperation of nearly everyone in the Government service who is in position to assist in this work. The investigation has been a most thorough and painstaking one, and the bill now submitted to Congress is the result of exhaustive research and the most careful deliberation.

Since the commission began its work of investigating the public printing and binding more than 2,000 pages of hearings, reports, and other documents relating to its work have been printed. Many of these reports already have been submitted to Congress from time to time. The bill itself has been before Congress in practically its present form for more than a year, having been first introduced on February 3, 1911, as Senate bill No. 10646, Sixty-first Congress, third session.

These [exhibiting] are the books that contain the hearings since the organization of the commission.

For the information of the Senate I want to relate just how the Printing Investigation Commission undertook the preparation of this bill and the preliminary steps that led up to the proposed revision of the printing laws. The Printing Investigation Commission, after its creation in 1905, came to the conclusion that the revision of the printing laws was not the work of a day nor a year. There were, however, glaring defects in the printing laws causing gross extravagances. The commission, therefore, undertook to remedy some of the more flagrant abuses of the public printing and binding before it went into the subject of a general revision of the printing laws.

The commission first discovered that many of the extravagances in the public printing were due to the fact that all reports transmitted to Congress by the departments were charged to the congressional allotment. Under this system the departments placed no restraint whatever on the size of reports that were sent to Congress, and they were filled with thousands of pages of matter that were utterly useless, even to the department itself. On the recommendation of the commission, Congress passed a resolution providing that the cost of printing and binding documents and reports emanating from the departments should be charged to the department in which the document or report originated, and that Congress should be charged for only the number of copies it distributed. This at once had a very satisfactory effect in restricting the size and number of the departmental reports and documents. An other resolution adopted by Congress on recommendation of the commission was the one providing that congressional documents should be printed in two or more editions, instead of printing the entire number of copies authorized at one time. The commission, in its report to Congress, No. 1044, Sixtieth Congress, second session, stated that the edition plan of publishing congressional documents had reduced the printing in the first year following its operation by nearly 300,000,000 printed pages, and that it had effected an annual saving of approximately $400,000.

On March 1, 1907, Congress enacted a number of amendments to the printing laws of 1895 that effected a further saving. These amendments were deemed essential by the commission in advance of a general revision of the printing laws and related principally to the reprinting of Government publications.

Again at the second session of the Sixty-first Congress, a further extravagance in the public printing was abolished on recommendation of the Printing Investigation Commission in the discontinuance of the so-called Member's reserve publications. This effected an economy of more than a hundred thousand dollars a year and repealed a provision of law that had been a subject of gross abuse and wasteful extravagance for many years.

Thus having put an end to the most flagrant extravagances in the public printing and binding, the commission then began the preparation of its general revision of the printing laws. During the progress of this work numerous abuses were discovered and, as far as within its power, the commission undertook to end these abuses of its own accord. In this way it has saved many thousands of dollars for the Government, but some of these economies, I fear, are only temporary and, unless the proposed bill becomes a law, many of the old extravagances in the public printing and binding may be revived.

Before undertaking this revision, the Printing Investigation Commission conferred with practically every official in the Government service who had anything to do with printing and binding or the distribution of publications. The head of every department, independent office, and establishment of the Government was invited to suggest economies. Hundreds of letters and reports have been received from all branches of the Government service in regard to changes desired in the present printing laws or amendments which the commission itself had submitted for their consideration. More than 7,000 letters were sent to the libraries of the country alone in investigating the distribution of publications to them and the provisions of the bill relating to such distribution are based upon the reports received from several thousand of these libraries. If there is anyone in the Government service conversant with printing matters that the commission has not consulted regarding this bill, it is because he had hid himself away where the strong searchlight of the Printing Investigation Commission's inquiries could not reveal his whereabouts.

PRINTING REPORTS AND HEARINGS.

Let me enumerate in brief some of the hearings, reports, and other publications relating to the Government printing that the commission has made use of in the preparation of its bill. As I stated before, these publications consist of more than 2,000 printed pages, four-fifths of which were prepared by the commission itself:

1. Hearings and report of the Printing Investigation Commission issued in 1906. This publication consists of two volumes, making in all 1,184 printed pages. At that time about 40 witnesses were examined, principally in regard to printing and binding for Congress and the departments. In addition to the oral testimony submitted, every department was required to make extended replies to an exhaustive letter of inquiry sent out by the commission. All of this testimony has been very valuable to the commission in the preparation of the pending bill.

2. Report to the President by the Committee on Department Methods, relating to public printing, under date of January 2, 1906. This report recommends a number of provisions that have been incorporated into the bill, especially as it relates to centralizing the distribution of Government publications and the permitting of depository libraries to make selection of publications to be sent them.

3. Preliminary report of the Printing Investigation Commission, House Document No. 649, Fifty-ninth Congress, first session. This report consists of 92 printed pages. It points out defects in the present quota system of distributing publications to Members of Congress and shows in detail the cost of documents emanating from the executive departments.

4. Supplemental report of the Printing Investigation Commission, House Document No. 736, and Senate Report No. 6828, Fifty-ninth Congress, second session. This report relates to the reprinting of bills, laws, committee reports, and hearings, and to the numbering of congressional documents and reports.

5. Senate Report No. 1, Sixtieth Congress, first session, on the printing, binding, and distribution of public documents. This report proposes certain amendments relating to the numbering of congressional documents and reports.

6. Report of George C. Havenner, Chief Division of Printing, Department of Commerce and Labor, submitted to the President January 28, 1908, on the comparative cost for printing for the executive departments, which consists of 63 printed pages.

7. House Document No. 974, Sixtieth Congress, first session. "Report to the President, by William S. Rossiter, upon conditions prevailing in the Government Printing Office—Reply thereto by Charles A. Stillings, Public Printer." This report consists of 150 printed pages and contains a number of valuable suggestions that the Printing Investigation Commission has adopted in the proposed bill.

8. House Document No. 968, Sixtieth Congress, first session. Report by the Printing Investigation Commission upon its investigation of purchases and employment of cost-accounting services in the Government Printing Office. This report contains 19 printed pages.

9. Senate Report No. 932, 60th Congress, 2d session, containing recommendation of the Printing Investigation Commission relative to the publications of the Geological Survey, leaves of absence and holidays, limitations on the Public Printer's expenditures for machinery and salaries, and recommendations in regard to the inspector for the Joint Committee on Printing.

10. Senate Report No. 1044, 60th Congress, 2d session. This report consists of 31 printed pages and submits much information to Congress that has been utilized in the preparation of the pending bill. Accompanying this report is a draft of legislation recommended by the commission at that time, February 18, 1909, much of which has been incorporated in the bill now submitted to Congress.

11. Statement showing appropriations and expenditures for the public printing and binding and expenditures for printing and binding from appropriations other than those made specifically therefor. This statement consists of 70 printed pages and shows the expenditure of fully a million dollars a year for printing and binding for the Government done outside of the Government Printing Office, much of which Congress had little knowledge of until this report was prepared. On the basis of this report and other investigations made by the commission, the proposed bill provides that all printing and binding for the Government shall be done at the Government Printing Office, unless the appropriation shall, in specific terms, provide that the work is not to be done at the Government Printing Office. The commission feels certain that this centralization of the Government printing and the knowledge that Congress will then have of all this work will result in a great economy.

12. Memorandum relative to binding of publications for distribution to State and Territorial libraries and designated depositories, printed by the Printing Investigation Commission in 1908, which consists of 46 printed pages.

13. Hearings before the Appropriation Committees of the Senate and House relative to appropriations for the public printing and binding and the Government Printing Office. These hearings consist of 200 printed pages and have been especially serviceable to the Printing Investigation Commission. It would have been a useless expense and waste of time for the commission itself to have held hearings covering the same subjects. They relate particularly to the organization of the Government Printing Office and the compensation of its employees.

14. Hearings before the Printing Investigation Commission relative to branch printing offices, March 17, 1910, which consists of 45 printed pages. On these hearings the commission bases its recommendation in regard to legislation concerning the branch printing offices of the Government.

15. Hearings before the Printing Investigation Commission relative to valuation system for the distribution of publications to Senators and Representatives, May 7, 1910.

16. Senate Document No. 652, 61st Congress, 2d session, report of the Printing Investigation Commission preliminary to its preparation of the printing bill, which consists of 81 printed pages. This report discusses the following subjects in more or less detail and presents considerable statistical matter, upon which numerous proposed changes in the printing law are based: Laxity of the Printing Laws, the Congressional Reserve, Sale of Public Documents, Accumulation of Departmental Publications, Departmental Duplication of Library Lists, Distribution of Documents to Libraries, Congressional Record Indexing, Paper Stock at the Government Printing Office, Branch Printing Offices, Departmental Printing and Binding and Distribution of Documents, Engraving and Lithographing Plants of the Government, and Valuation Plan for Congressional Distribution of Documents.

17. Report by George French, expert on printing, made to the Senate Committee on Public Expenditures. This report consists of 42 typewritten pages, and is accompanied by charts and illustrations. It deals principally with the organization of the Government Printing Office.

18. Statement by Mr. John S. Leech, former Public Printer, and now Director of the Bureau of Printing for the Philippine Government at Manila. This statement deals with the organization, accounting, and scale of charges of the Government Printing Office.

19. Bulletin No. 102 of the New York State Library, entitled, United States Government Documents, by James Ingersol Wyer, jr., one of the foremost library experts in the country.

20. Hearing before the Senate Committee on Printing in regard to the manufacture of loose-leaf binders by the Public Printer in competition with the manufacturers of patented loose-leaf binding devices. This hearing was held on January 26, 1912, and fills 19 printed pages.

21. Hearing before the Senate Committee on Printing in regard to the compensation paid pressmen employed at the Government Printing Office. This hearing was held on February 2, 1912, and a statement on behalf of the pressmen was made by Mr. John F. Geckler, of Indianapolis, Ind., representing the International Printing Pressmen and Assistants' Union of North America.

22. Hearing before the Senate Committee on Printing in regard to the proposed use of power presses for the printing of bonds, notes, and checks at the Bureau of Engraving and Printing. This hearing occupied several days and fills nearly 200 printed pages, exclusive of the appendix. Every person whom the committee thought could give it information on the subject was invited to attend this hearing, including the Secretary of the Treasury, Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Andrews, the Director of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, Mr. Ralph, the president of the Plate Printers' Union, Mr. William Clark, accompanied by the executive committee of that organization and its attorney, Mr. Jackson H. Ralston, the president of the American Federation of Labor, Mr. Samuel Gompers, and several chiefs and foremen of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing. A dozen or more witnesses had been examined up to the time that Director Ralph and the representatives of the Plate Printers' Union entered into an agreement which was approved by the Senate Committee on Printing and recommended in its report to the Senate. In this connection I want to state that the Printing Investigation Commission, when it recommended the provision relating to the use of power presses for the printing of bonds, notes, and checks, had at hand and made a careful study of various reports on the same subject which have been submitted to Congress from time to time. Senate Report No. 2604, made to the Fiftieth Congress, contains even better information than can be had at this time relative to the use of hand-roller and power presses for the printing of Government currency. This report was made at a time when both hand-roller and power presses were in operation at the Bureau of Engraving and Printing. It consists of 435 printed pages and contains testimony given during the most exhaustive investigation by the Finance Committee of the Senate. That committee, which consisted of such distinguished Senators as Morrill, Sherman, Jones of Nevada, Allison, Aldrich, Hiscock, Voorhees, Beck, McPherson, Harris, and Vance, reported against a bill proposing that all Government securities, bonds, notes, and internal-revenue stamps should be printed only on hand-roller presses. For the information of the Senate it has been incorporated as an appendix to the hearing on the same subject, which the Senate Committee on Printing has just concluded.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. BROWN. That subject, which was covered in the original bill introduced by the Senator, as I understand it, is left out of the bill which the committee now reports.

Mr. SMOOT. That is true, Mr. President.

PREPARATION OF PRINTING BILL.

With practically all of this vast source of information at hand, the Printing Investigation Commission began in 1910 the preparation of a complete revision of the printing laws. In 1910 the commission held several hearings on the subject and invited recommendations from all branches of the Government service. On November 25 of that year the preliminary draft of the bill was submitted to the Public Printer, and in December the commission held numerous meetings at which every paragraph of the bill was discussed in detail. At these meetings the Public Printer and his attorney were present. They were invited to, and did, submit their views on the bill at great length. The commission at that time consisted of the following members in addition to myself: The senior Senator from Oregon, Mr. BOURNE; the senior Senator from Florida, Mr. FLETCHER; and Representatives COOPER of Pennsylvania, STURGISS, and FINLEY, of the House Committee on Printing.

After the bill was completed by the Printing Investigation Commission I introduced it in the Senate on February 3, 1911, as S. 10646. The bill was referred to the Senate Committee on Printing and reported back favorably on February 20, 1911. As the bill was in the nature of a report which Congress had directed the Printing Investigation Commission to make, it did not seem necessary for the Senate committee to make any further investigation of the subject than the commission itself had undertaken. The bill was put upon the Senate Calendar at that time, but no further consideration could be given to it, owing to the precedence of other business, which crowded the few remaining days of the Sixty-first Congress. The commission, however, continued its work of investigating the public printing and binding and perfected its proposed revision of the printing laws.

The bill was reintroduced by me again on June 1, 1911, as S. 2564, with such minor changes as further investigation showed were advisable. I had no thought that Congress would be able to consider the bill at the first session of the Sixty-second Congress, but the commission, which now consists of the following members, in addition to myself: The junior Senator from Vermont, Mr. PAGE; the senior Senator from Florida, Mr. FLETCHER; and Representatives FINLEY, BARNHART, and FOCHT, of the House Committee on Printing, desired its reintroduction so that the bill might continue before Congress and every publicity given to its provisions. This proved to be very helpful in that a number of valuable recommendations came from the departments relating to public printing and binding, which have been included in the bill as introduced this session of Congress, for a third time, on January 8, 1912, as Senate bill No. 4239.

The Senate Committee on Printing carefully reviewed the report on the bill as prepared by the Printing Investigation Commission, and then decided to adopt that report with only two or three minor changes and favorably recommend the passage of the bill with a few amendments, which I am sure are perfectly acceptable to the commission. The bill was reported to the Senate on January 16, 1912, but, owing to the desire of several Senators that further hearings be held in regard to certain sections of the bill, it was recommitted to the Committee on Printing on February 5, 1912. Since that date the committee has held hearings in regard to the use of hand-roller and power presses at the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, the compensation of pressmen in the Government Printing Office, and the manufacture of loose-leaf binders by the Public Printer. Neither the Senate Committee on Printing nor the Printing Investigation Commission has at any time denied the request of anyone for a hearing in regard to the provisions of this bill. It is believed now that every person who has signified a desire either directly or indirectly to appear before the committee has been heard. The committee has, therefore, reported the bill back to the Senate with such amendments as the recent hearings and additional suggestions from the various departments of the Government indicated were advisable to be recommended to the Senate.

In all, there have been 14 prints of the bill since it was first prepared by the commission nearly two years ago. Six of these prints have been submitted to Congress, and another print comparing the reported bill with the present law has been placed on the desk of every Member of the Senate. Accompanying the bill as reported to the Senate have been three reports discussing in detail every paragraph of the bill, the first report consisting of 48 pages; the second, 55 pages; and the third, 60 pages.

There has been much discussion in the public press of the Printing Investigation Commission's report and its proposed revision of the printing laws. I desire at this time to ask permission of the Senate to have included as part of my remarks several clippings from newspapers of the country showing some of the publicity that has been given to the work of the Printing Investigation Commission and the pending bill:

NEWSPAPER COMMENTS ON THE BILL.

[Washington Star, June 26, 1910.]

PRINT BILL PARING—WAYS TO ECONOMIZE DEVISED BY COMMISSION—OLD LAWS NEED REVISION—TOO LARGE EDITIONS AND DUPLICATION IN DISTRIBUTION—ABOLITION OF THE RESERVE—BRANCH OFFICES COULD BE DISCONTINUED—CONTRACT WORK COULD BE DONE BY GOVERNMENT.

Great economies in Uncle Sam's printing bill—some already accomplished and some still to be realized—are reported by the Printing Investigation Commission in a report submitted to Congress yesterday.

Reforms in the printing policy, the commission says, have already resulted in savings amounting to $110,000. A revision of the printing laws, which the committee will prepare this summer and recommend for adoption by Congress next winter, is expected to bring about a saving of several hundred thousand dollars.

It was ascertained by the commission that the chief cause of many abuses in public printing is the "laxity and incompleteness of the antiquated printing laws." Some efforts were made to correct the most glaring of the faults.

The commission reports, however, that a complete revision, consolidation, and codification of the printing laws is necessary to insure economy and modern business methods in printing, binding, and distributing public documents.

ABOLITION OF RESERVE.

The principal saving brought about by a recommendation of the commission this session was in abolishing the useless congressional reserve of documents for Senators, Members, and Delegates, which alone cost on an average $75,000 a year and generally had to be sold as waste paper by the Government Printing Office.

By the printing act of 1895 the Public Printer has had to retain in unbound form copies of all documents and reports of Congress subject to orders from the Vice President, Senators, Representatives, Delegates, the Secretary of the Senate, and the Clerk of the House, to be bound in any style they desired except full morocco. The fact is that except during a few years when orders for binding this reserve were solicited by the trade to increase work at the Government Printing Office, the great bulk of the reserve has reverted to the Superintendent of Documents, as Members of Congress have found it more convenient to take documents from either the Senate or House document rooms and have them bound instead of using their reserve.

TOO LARGE EDITIONS.

In studying the question whether the Government is now printing too large editions of its publications, the commission found that the departments and independent offices of the Government returned to the superintendent of documents in the five years, 1905–1909, inclusive, a total of 2,620,596 documents which they could not distribute, and in addition now have on hand vast accumulations of other publications that sooner or later will have to be sent to the superintendent of documents and thence to the waste-paper pile.

The Joint Committee on Printing was called upon this year to authorize the sale as waste paper of more than 900,000 useless or obsolete documents that had been unloaded on the superintendent of documents by other branches of the Government. As a result of this investigation several departments are planning to cut down the editions of their publications the coming year. This alone will effect a saving of many thousands of dollars a year.

DUPLICATION TO LIBRARIES.

Another cause of the excess in Government publications is in their duplicate distribution to libraries by the superintendent of documents, the departments, and by Members of Congress.

The commission has made a compilation of the reports of the superintendent of documents showing that in the last 15 years he has distributed a total of 7,906,892 Government publications to libraries throughout the country, of which 5,592,909 went to designated depository libraries, 1,636,091 to miscellaneous libraries, and 677,812 to geological-depository libraries. In the same 15 years the superintendent of documents has had returned from these libraries a total of 1,579,164 documents, or an average of more than 100,000 a year.

This return of documents discarded by the libraries is rapidly increasing, as the reports show that in the last three years the superintendent of documents has received 754,367 documents, on which the Government has had to pay double postage, in addition to the enormous expense of printing, and then dispose of them as waste paper.

CORRECTION OF WASTE.

To correct this vast excess in the supply of documents to depository libraries the commission first furnished each department with a copy of the mailing list of the superintendent of documents and suggested that all duplications be stricken from the departmental lists. This has resulted in the removing of the names of 2,166 libraries that had been receiving Government publications in duplication from the departments and the superintendent of documents.

The bureau of education furnishes an example of the extent of this duplication. On its mailing list were the names of 428 out of the 457 depository libraries that the superintendent of documents is required by law to supply with the annual reports of the commissioner of education. The prevention of this duplication alone in the future will save nearly $600 a year.

DEPARTMENTAL DISTRIBUTION.

An extended inquiry was made also into the subject of departmental printing and binding and the method of distributing public documents by the departments. The commission found that only two departments had continued to observe President Roosevelt's order for the centralization and standardization of departmental printing and binding as contemplated by the act of 1895.

The commission makes the following recommendations to Congress in this regard:

"1. The establishment by law of a division of printing and publications in the office of the Secretary or head of every executive department, wherein there shall be centralized the supervision of the department's printing and binding and distribution of publications.

"2. The establishment of a section of printing and publications in every independent office and establishment of the Government, wherein there shall be centralized the supervision of the printing and binding and distribution of publications of such independent offices and establishments.

"3. The enactment into law of a provision prohibiting printing and binding outside of the Government Printing Office by the Executive Office, Congress, the executive and judicial departments, independent offices and establishments of the Government, unless specifically provided for by law.

"4. The enactment of a provision of law providing that on or before December 1 of every year a committee, consisting of the chiefs of the printing divisions and sections of the executive departments and independent offices and establishments of the Government shall confer and recommend to the Public Printer a uniform stock of paper for similar classes of printing and binding work, and that the Public Printer shall take these recommendations into consideration in the preparation of a schedule of paper required for the following paper-contract year.

"5. The enactment into law of a provision prohibiting the Public Printer from using any paper for printing and binding except that purchased by him."

VALUATION PLAN PROPOSED.

Another feature of the commission's report is the statement that it is investigating a valuation plan for congressional distribution of documents. A recent report to the House of Representatives that more than 1,000,000 documents had accumulated in its folding room under the quota system, which Members had failed to distribute, gave emphasis to the fact that the present system of disposing of Government publications by allotting a certain number to each Senator and Member is extravagant and wasteful.

The valuation plan, as suggested by Representative Walter I. Smith, of Iowa, contemplates allowing each Member of Congress a certain annual credit at the Government Printing Office, which he may use to obtain such publications as are desired for his constituents. Thus a Member from an agricultural district could expend his entire credit for Agricultural Yearbooks, while under the present quota system he gets no more of these publications than does the New York City Member.

BRANCH PRINTING OFFICES.

An investigation was made of the branch printing offices maintained in several departments. Figures were obtained from the Public Printer and the departments concerned, showing that an annual saving of $38,348.24 was made by the abolishing of the printing offices in the Treasury, Interior, and Agricultural Departments last year, and that an estimate saving of $30,847.60 a year might be made by abolishing the printing offices in the State, War, and Navy Departments.

The commission also ascertained that the departments have nine separate engraving and lithographing plants in operation, not including the Bureau of Engraving and Printing of the Treasury Department. These nine plants were operated at a cost of $348,271.17 last fiscal year.

In addition to this the total awards to outside establishments for engraving and lithographing for the Government amounted to $317,664.92, making a total of $665,936.09 expended by the Government for engraving and lithographing last year, not including the work of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, which is confined to printing currency, bank notes, stamps, and the like.

The commission is now investigating the advisability of having more of the engraving and lithographing for the Government done in its own plants, some of which are equipped to perform additional work.

[Washington Herald, June 26, 1910.]

LAX LAWS CAUSE PRINTING ABUSES—PROBING BY CONGRESS HAS SAVED $100,000—COMMISSION SO REPORTS—METHODS IN GOVERNMENT PRINTING OFFICE INVESTIGATED—MORE THAN $75,000, WHICH HAS LEAKED OUT EVERY YEAR, STOPPED BY ABOLITION OF USELESS DOCUMENTS USED AS CAMPAIGN MATERIAL BY SENATORS AND REPRESENTATIVES—TONS OF BOOKS SOLD FOR WASTE.

In a report to Congress yesterday the Printing Investigation Commission declared the reason for abuses in public printing is lax and antiquated laws, but that $110,000 had been saved Uncle Sam through the congressional probing.

The commission, through Senator Smoot of Utah, chairman, reported that $38,?48.24 had been saved in one year by abolishing the printing offices in the Treasury, Interior, and Agricultural Departments.

It advised that the printing establishments in the State, War, and Navy Departments be done away with. The investigators asserted the Government would save $30,847.60 a year by it.

During this session the commission has confined itself to an investigation of methods in the Government Printing Office and its branches.

WOULD REVISE LAWS.

The commission recommended that the printing laws be revised and codified, that a law be adopted requiring all Government printing to be done by Government shops, and that the heads of the several printing divisions come to a better understanding with the Public Printer.

The principal saving brought about this session, according to the report, was in abolishing the useless printing of documents for Senators and Representatives often used as campaign material. More than $75,000 has been leaking out this way every year.

Another reform was doing away with the reserve of documents. By an antiquated law the Public Printer was forced to bind and keep every document, no matter how trivial, turned out in his plant. In 1907 nearly $125,000 was spent in useless binding. This year, under the reform ruling, less than $500 was spent.

SOLD AS WASTE PAPER.

The law made it mandatory that the reserve documents be printed in cloth, and, as a result, tons of beautifully bound books had to be sold as waste paper. More than 900,000 useless documents were sold this year.

The printing commission stated it is planning to recommend cutting down editions for the coming year. The commission discovered that the superintendent of documents has distributed 7,906,892 Government publications to libraries in 15 years, and that these books have been coming back, discarded by the libraries, at the rate of 100,000 annually.

The only way they could account for these figures was that thousands of duplicate volumes had been sent out.

Extended probing developed the fact that only two departments had carried out President Roosevelt's order for standardizing departmental printing and binding.

REMEDY FOR SYSTEM.

As a remedy for the present system of disposing of public documents by giving them to Members and Senators, which is branded as "extravagant and wasteful," the commission advised that each member of the House and Senate be given a limited credit at the Printing Office.

The comuission reported that the average printing for each Senator is $2,400 a year, and the average for Representatives $1,600 annually. The new plan, it asserts, will save hundreds of thousands a year.

The commission also discovered that the departments have nine separate engraving and lithographing plants in operation, not including the Bureau of Engraving and Printing of the Treasury Department.

COST OF OPERATION.

These plants were operated at a cost of $348,271.17 the last fiscal year. In addition, the total awards to outside establishments amounted to $317,664.92, making a total of $665,936.09 expended by the Government for engraving and lithographing last year.

The Bureau of Engraving and Printing is confined to printing currency, bank notes, stamps, and the like.

The commission is now investigating the advisability of having more of the engraving and lithographing for the Government done in its own plants, some of which are equipped to perform additional work.

The members of the commission are Senator SMOOT of Utah, Senator BOURNE of Oregon, Senator FLETCHER of Florida, Representative COOPER of Pennsylvania, Representative STURGIS of West Virginia, and Representative FINLEY of South Carolina.

WOULD REFORM G. P. O.—SMOOT BILL PROVIDES A SAVING OF $1,250,000 A YEAR—IS INTRODUCED IN SENATE—DISTRIBUTION OF PUBLICATIONS BY MEMBERS OF CONGRESS TO BE MADE ON VALUATION PLAN—COMMISSION REPORTS CERTAIN INCREASES IN SALARIES—GOVERNMENT DOCUMENTS MAY BE SOLD AT COST.

Economies in the public printing, which, it is estimated, will save the Government fully $1,250,000 a year, are proposed in the printing bill which was introduced in the Senate yesterday by Senator Smoot, on behalf of the Printing Investigation Commission, of which he is chairman. In addition to a complete revision of the present printing laws, some of which date back more than half a century, the bill proposes several important changes in the printing and distribution of Government publications.

The most conspicuous feature of the bill is the valuation plan for distribution of documents to Members of Congress. The bill allows each Senator a credit of $2,500 a year and each Representative, Delegate, and Resident Commissioner a credit of $1,800, with the superintendent of documents at the Government Printing Office. Only Government publications printed for distribution by Congress can be drawn on this credit, and the unused portion lapses on March 3 of each year, Members not being allowed to turn their document credit into money.

ABOLISHES QUOTA SYSTEM.

The proposed valuation plan would supersede the present quota system of distributing documents to Members of Congress through their respective folding rooms. In other words, the folding rooms of Congress would have to be abolished, and the distribution of Government publications for Members of Congress centralized under the superintendent of documents at the Government Printing Office.

Investigation by the commission developed the fact that there has been much extravagance at the Government Printing Office. Officials of the Government Printing Office, as provided in the commission's bill, and their salaries, are as follows: The Public Printer, $6,000 per annum, an increase of $500 per anum; deputy public printer, $4,500; chief clerk, $3,000; purchasing agent, $3,600; disbursing agent, $2,500; accountant, $2,500; superintendent of buildings, $3,000, an increase of $500 per anum; foreman of printing, $2,500; foreman of binding, $2,500; foreman of presswork, $2,500; and storekeeper, $2,500.

The bill also provides that a solicitor for the Government Printing Office shall be appointed by the President, in the Department of Justice, at a salary of $4,000 per annum. This solicitor will succeed the attorney of the Government Printing Office, whose salary is $3,000 per annum.

SPECIFIC APPROPRIATION REQUIRED.

The pay of about 60 job compositors and 100 pressmen is increased from 50 to 55 cents an hour. This increase amounts to about $20,000 per annum. No other increases of pay or additional positions for the Government Printing Office are carried in the bill. The Public Printer is prohibited from paying any salary in excess of $2,000 per annum, unless the same shall have been specifically appropriated for.

On recommendation of the Secretary of the Treasury a provision has been inserted in the bill authorizing the use of power presses instead of hand-roller presses for the printing of bonds, notes, and checks, in the Bureau of Engraving and Printing. This affects several hundred employees now at work on the hand-roller presses, but the Secretary is restricted from abolishing more than one-fifth of the hand-roller presses in any one year, which will make it possible for him to transfer all these employees to other work without discharging a single one of them.

The Treasury Department estimates that the saving that can be made by using power presses instead of hand-roller presses for printing Government bonds, checks, and currency will amount to nearly $750,000 a year.

SALE OF PUBLICATIONS.

Each newspaper correspondent in the press gallery of Congress is entitled to obtain one copy of any Government publication ordered printed by Congress upon filing a request for the same with the Superintendent of Documents within 10 days after it has been ordered printed, according to another provision of the bill.

The growing opinion that practically all Government publications eventually will be sold for cost instead of distributed free is recognized in the proposed bill by authorizing the Superintendent of Documents to sell copies of any Government publication.

[Washington Post, editorial, Feb. 5, 1911.]

ECONOMY IN PRINTING.

A practical plan of governmental economy is proposed in the new printing bill which has been reported to the Senate by Senator Smoot, chairman of the Printing Investigation Commission. It is practical because it provides for a reduction of the expenses of the Government to the extent of fully a million and a quarter dollars without the sacrifice of any efficiency. Frequently plans for economy in the public expenditures, which mean merely a reduction in the amount of money expended, are really a false economy because they entail a sacrifice of efficiency in service. This is not such a case. According to the statement of the Printing Investigation Commission, which for more than a year has been going into every phase of the work of the Government Printing Office and the publication of public documents, the plan proposed means nothing more than the saving of what is now wasted.

The commission is composed of men of ability, conservative and careful, who have thoroughly considered the question and whose opinions and conclusions are worthy of respect. In the bill they have reported they are only applying to the printing business of the Government the business methods that would be invoked in a private concern. President Taft has established a policy of economy in the conduct of his administration, and the proposition of the Printing Investigation Commission admirably fits into that policy.

The change in the method of allotting public documents to members of Congress will appeal to all who give the subject any thought. At present the city Representative has to his credit as many documents on agricultural subjects as the rural Member has, though he has no real use for them except to exchange them for other documents that he can use, if he finds opportunity to make the trade. Under the new plan each Senator and Member will have a credit of a stated sum each year at the Government Printing Office, and he may order such documents as he wants up to the limit of his credit. In this manner alone a big saving will be effected. The bill contains many provisions that will appeal to the judgment of conservative business men.

[Philadelphia Inquirer, February 4, 1911.]

SAVES $1,250,000 TO UNITED STATES PRINTING OFFICE—SENATOR SMOOT SUBMITS BILL WHICH WOULD RESULT IN BIG ANNUAL CURTAILMENT.

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 3.

Senator Smoot, of Utah, as chairman of the Printing Investigation Committee, to-day submitted to Congress a printing bill which, if enacted into law, would result in a saving of fully $1,250,000 annually to the Government Printing Office and in the method of distributing public documents.

The most conspicuous feature of the proposed bill is the valuation plan for distribution of documents to Members of Congress. The bill allows each Senator a credit of $2,500 a year and each Representative, Delegate, and Resident Commissioner a credit of $1,800 with the Superintendent of Documents at the Government Printing Office.

The commission has figures to show that the proposed valuation plan will save the Government nearly a quarter of a million dollars a year. The defect in the present quota system of distributing documents to Members was clearly shown in the recent removal of more than a million useless and obsolete publications that had accumulated in the House folding room owing to inability of Members to distribute these publications. Tons of costly books had to be sold as waste paper last year, causing a loss of thousands of dollars to the Government.

On recommendation of the Secretary of the Treasury a provision has been inserted in the bill authorizing the use of power presses instead of hand-roller presses for the printing of bonds, notes and checks in the Bureau of Engraving and Printing. This affects several hundred employees now at work on the hand-roller presses, but the Secretary is restricted from abolishing more than one-fifth of the hand-roller presses in any one year, which will make it possible for him to transfer all these employees to other work without discharging a single one of them. The Treasury Department estimates that the saving that can be made here will amount to nearly three-quarters of a million dollars a year.

G. P. O. REFORM URGED—$1,250,000 ANNUAL SAVING IS PLANNED BY COMMITTEE—INVESTIGATION REPORT FILED—BILL PROVIDING DRASTIC CHANGES IN LAWS GOVERNING PUBLIC PRINTING PRESENTED BY SENATOR SMOOT—WOULD SUBSTITUTE POWER FOR HAND PRESSES AND ABOLISH SENATE AND HOUSE FOLDING ROOMS.

The first and only comprehensive revision of the laws governing public printing ever made to Congress was submitted to the Senate yesterday, when Senator Smoot filed his report and the bill that will be pressed for enactment into law. This revision is the result of the work of the joint committee that has been engaged in investigating the affairs of the public printing office.

The report shows that an annual saving of $1,250,000 will be made. Under existing laws, many of which are obsolete, there have grown many extravagances. The most important provision in the measure perhaps is that authorizing and requiring the substitution of power for hand presses in the Bureau of Engraving and Printing. This will save $600,000 a year. Not more than one-fifth of the hand presses will be removed in any year, and the committee says that not a plate printer will be disturbed, as the increase in business will require the retention of the present force.

WOULD LIMIT DOCUMENTS.

The Senate and House folding rooms will be abolished, and all documents distributed from a central station under the control of the Superintendent of Documents. Instead of the present method of distributing documents to Members of Congress, they will be issued upon a valuation basis, the annual value of those issued to Representatives being $1,800 and Senators $2,500.

Another important feature is that which provides a fixed organization for the Government Printing Office, making it impossible for the caprice of any Public Printer to change the force at will or rearrange salaries and positions. Innumerable minor evils have been corrected and reforms inaugurated.

[Washington Times, January 17, 1912.]

REVISED PRINTING BILL SAVES OVER A MILLION.

Senator SMOOT has submitted to the Senate a favorable report from the Committee on Printing on his bill for the revision and codification of the printing laws.

The committee has made some changes, but not in the essential features. It is estimated that an annual saving of a million and a quarter dollars can be made under the proposed revision of the printing laws.

The feature of the bill which has attracted most notice is the one that provides for use of power presses instead of hand presses in the Bureau of Engraving and Printing. This will save $600,000 a year. Not over one-fifth of the hand presses will be removed in one year.

Many obsolete and extravagant features of the printing laws are wiped out. The Senate and House folding rooms will be abolished and documents distributed from a central station under the Superintendent of Documents, on a valuation basis. A fixed organization for the Printing Office is also provided.

The bill (S. 4239) consists of 115 pages, and its subject matter may be grouped into four general divisions:

1. Relating to the Joint Committee on Printing and its supervision over the public printing and binding.
2. Providing for the organization of the Government Printing Office.
3. Regulating printing and binding and distribution of publications for Congress.
4. Regulating printing and binding and distribution of publications for the departments, independent offices, and establishments of the Government.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly.

Mr. BROWN. Before the Senator proceeds to take up the bill section by section could he give the Senate any idea about how much of this bill is new legislation? It is entitled a revision bill. About what per cent of this large bill is new legislation on the subject?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I could not say just how much is new legislation, but I will say that a great part of the bill is present law. There are changes in the method of distribution of documents, the regulating of the printing of them, and the abolishment of the folding rooms of the Senate and the House. I suppose the greatest change from the present law would be the valuation system, which I shall discuss in detail as I proceed.

Mr. BROWN. Does not the bill go further and provide for numerous new officers and the abolishment of some that are now existing?

Mr. SMOOT. If the Senator will just wait a few minutes, I will tell the Senate of every new office that is created, the amount that is to be paid to each employee, and also what is proposed to be abolished and the amount that will be saved by so doing.

Mr. BROWN. I do not care to interrupt the Senator, but I wanted to get, if I could, an outline, general in its terms, showing whether or not the proposals contained in the bill entirely change the present printing system of the Government——

Mr. SMOOT. No, Mr. President.

Mr. BROWN (continuing). And create a new one.

Mr. SMOOT. No; it does not change the present system. I will say to the Senator that under the plan which has been adopted for the reorganization of the Government Printing Office in the proposed bill the Public Printer, if the bill becomes a law, will not have the power he has had in the past to change the working organization of the Government Printing Office. But that applies only to some half dozen men whose salary is more than $2,250 per year. It does not affect a person in the Printing Office whose salary is less than $2,250 per annum. It provides for the abolishment of the folding rooms of the Senate and House. If the bill passes, that work will be done hereafter in the document rooms.

Mr. BROWN. As a matter of fact the bill abolishes the Public Printer, does it not?

Mr. SMOOT. Oh, no, Mr. President.

Mr. BROWN. And substitutes the clerk of the Senator's committee for Public Printer?

Mr. SMOOT. No, Mr. President; there is no such thought, and no such provision.

The following is a brief outline of the more important sections of the bill:

OUTLINE OF PRINTING BILL (S. 4239).

Sections 1 to 5. Joint Committee on Printing; its organization and duties.

Sections 6 to 10. Purchases of paper and material for the Government Printing Office.

Sections 11 to 22. Organization of the Government Printing Office; its principal officers.

Sections 23 and 24. Boards of inspection and condemnation of the Government Printing Office.

Sections 26 to 29. Government Printing Office employees; salaries and wages; leave provisions.

Section 33. Branch printing offices.

Sections 34 to 43. Miscellaneous provisions relating to the Public Printer.
Sections 44 to 49. Printing ordered by Congress; Senate and House documents, bills, and reports.
Section 49. Printing clerks for Senate and House.
Section 51. Allotment and charges for printing for Congress and departments.
Section 53. Edition plan for printing documents, reports, bills, etc.
Section 55. Senate and House document rooms.
Sections 58 to 62. Superintendent of documents.
Section 63. Publications for newspaper correspondents.
Section 64 and 65. Depository libraries.
Section 68. Valuation plan for Congressional distribution.
Section 69. Printing and distribution of Revised Statutes.
Section 71. Miscellaneous publications authorized to be printed by law.
Section 72. Printing and distribution of Official Register.
Section 75. Printing and distribution of Supreme Court Reports and Federal Reporter.
Section 76. Restrictions on printing and binding.
Section 77. Requirement for all printing and binding to be done at the Government Printing Office.
Section 78. Printing for the departments.
Section 79. Annual reports of departments.
Section 80. Division of publications for each department.
Section 81. Method of estimating and charging for the public printing and binding.
Section 84. Contracts for envelopes to be awarded by Postmaster General.
Section 85. Repeal of all existing printing laws.

The commission has prepared a statement showing that the estimated economies to be effected by the bill will amount to approximately $600,000 a year. The figures in this estimate have been carefully compiled and based on definite information. There are a number of other important economies proposed in the bill, which it is impossible to estimate in dollars and cents, and the commission has therefore not undertaken to do so. The estimate of $600,000 a year saving that could be made if the pending bill were enacted into law relates entirely to the economy that would be effected in printing and binding alone. In addition to this amount, the Government would save thousands of dollars that it now has to expend in transporting through the mails millions of publications that are of no use to the persons to whom they are sent and serve only to fill the wastebaskets of the Nation. The investigation of the Printing Commission developed the fact that the depository libraries of the country alone are sending back to the superintendent of documents an average of 100,000 publications a year, for which the Government has to pay the cost of transportation from Washington to the library and again from the library back to Washington. Most of these publications have to eventually be disposed of as waste paper.

Another example of the needless expense to which the Government is put in transporting useless publications is the library edition of Patent Specifications, which consists of three big volumes a month—this is only one of them [exhibiting a volume]—weighing approximately 50 pounds to the set, or 85,000 pounds for the entire annual edition. This is the heaviest single publication that the Government now sends through the mails, and the pending bill proposes to discontinue its printing as a wasteful expenditure of public funds. It is impossible to estimate, even approximately, the saving that will result to the postal service in the discontinuance of such useless publications and the present wasteful methods in distributing Government documents. I believe I am justified, however, in stating that this saving to the Post Office Department alone will amount to several hundred thousand dollars a year.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. SMOOT. I do.

Mr. BRISTOW. Did I understand the Senator to say that three volumes the size of that one are printed per month?

Mr. SMOOT. Every month, and sent to certain libraries and courts of the country.

Mr. BRISTOW. How many of them are there?

Mr. SMOOT. There are 144 possible designations under the law. If the Senator will follow me closely, I will give him the returns of these libraries and courts, stating that they do not want this publication; that they are of no use; that it only encumbers their shelf space.

Mr. CUMMINS. May I ask the Senator from Utah what that immense volume contains?

Mr. SMOOT. It is the patent specifications. I will say to the Senator that an attorney who is interested in any patent case never thinks of referring to this publication. He gets the separate specification and the Patent Office Gazette that is issued weekly. This is a compilation of all the patent specifications, issued monthly, and sent to the libraries. It is only a duplication of information already issued and received by them.

Mr. BRISTOW. Do I understand the Senator to say that three volumes of that size are gotten out monthly, and that those three volumes are sent to the libraries, making 36 volumes of that size per annum.

Mr. SMOOT. Thirty-six volumes every year are sent to State libraries, United States district courts, and the departments, and scarcely one has any use for them.

I submit herewith a detailed statement of the estimated economies and the increases proposed in the bill:

STATEMENT OF ANNUAL ECONOMIES UNDER SENATE BILL NO. 4239, BASED ON ESTIMATES SUBMITTED TO THE PRINTING INVESTIGATION COMMISSION.

Section 2, paragraph 2.—Requiring clerks of the joint committee to edit and compile memorial volumes and other compilations, including Congressional Directory, directed to be made by joint committee	$2,500
Section 3, paragraph 3.—Vesting Joint Committee on Printing with the authority of the Printing Investigation Commission and giving it power to enforce economies in the public printing and binding	100,000
Section 5.—Eliminating third edition of Congressional Directory for every long session of Congress	10,000
Section 12, paragraph 1.—Abolishing position of superintendent of work	3,600
Consolidating of estimating and jacket-writing sections, at least	2,000
Section 15, paragraph 1.—Reducing salary of purchasing agent	600
Section 17, paragraph 2.—Consolidating work of computing and cost keeping under accountant, at least	2,000
Section 19, paragraph 2.—Abolishing position of assistant superintendent of work, at least	3,000
Section 54.—Restricting distribution of Journals of the Senate and House of Representatives	2,000
Section 64, paragraph 2.—Adopting selection plan for depository libraries	110,000
Section 65, paragraph 2.—Eliminating duplicate copies of numbered congressional documents and reports of small size for distribution to depository libraries	15,000
Section 68, paragraph 1.—Adopting congressional valuation plan	200,000
Section 68, paragraph 4. Discontinuing the Abridgment of Message and Documents	23,000

Everything that is in the Abridgment of Message and Documents has been printed time and again before ever this yearly edition is issued, and, in fact, it is often two years after the information is given before these volumes are printed.

Section 68. Discontinuing Annual Report of Commissioner of Patents with list of patents	$8,000
Section 71. Restricting distribution of Decisions of the Comptroller of the Treasury	8,712
Increasing subscription price of the Official Gazette	13,360
Discontinuing Official Gazette libraries	31,900
Discontinuing library edition of Patent Specifications and Drawings	65,000
Discontinuing geological depository libraries	10,000
Discontinuing "Commercial Relations"	9,500
Section 72. Reducing size and scope of the Official Register of the United States	12,500
(Estimated saving, $25,000 biennially.)
Total estimated saving	632,672

The following economies can not be estimated in dollars and cents, but the commission believes they will amount to several hundred thousand dollars a year:

Section 44, paragraph 1. Curtailing of present practice of wholesale printing ordered by the Senate and House of Representatives without reference to committees or reports thereon.
Section 45. Eliminating annual and serial departmental publications for distribution to document rooms of Congress.
Section 47, paragraph 4. Eliminating one print of bills and resolutions.
Section 66. Revising departmental mailing lists regularly.
Section 76, paragraph 5. Regulating congressional committee binding.
Section 79, paragraph 1. Eliminating duplication in annual reports of chiefs of divisions and bureaus and heads of departments.
Section 80, paragraph 1. Centralizing printing and binding and distribution of publications in departments.

INCREASES UNDER SENATE BILL NO. 4239.

Section 2, paragraph 1.—Clerk, Joint Committee on Printing	$3,000.00
Assistant clerk, Joint Committee on Printing	2,500.00
(These clerks would take the place of secretary and assistant secretary of the Printing Investigation Commission.)
Increase in salary of inspector	500.00

Congress has appropriated each year for the expenses of the Printing Investigation Commission, chief of which is the employment of a secretary and an assistant secretary. The proposed bill provides a clerk and assistant clerk for the Joint Committee on Printing, in order to carry on the work that has been done in the past by the Printing Investigation Commission. If this proposed bill becomes law there need be no appropriation in the future for the investigation commission.

Section 11, paragraph 2.—Increase in salary of Public Printer	$500.00
Section 13, paragraph 1.—Increase in salary of chief clerk	500.00
Section 18, paragraph 1.—Increase in salary of superintendent of buildings	500.00
Section 19, paragraph 1.—Increase in salary of foreman of printing	500.00
Section 20, paragraph 1.—Increase in salary of foreman of binding	250.00
Section 21, paragraph 1.—Increase in salary of foreman of presswork	250.00

Section 27.—Increase in compensation of 60 job compositors ($7,500) and 100 pressmen ($12,500)	$20,000.00
Section 46, paragraph 6.—Increase in number of publications for international exchange
Section 71.—Removal of limitation upon number of copies of monthly catalogue of Government publications for free distribution	337.50
Total annual increase	28,837.50
Total estimated saving	632,672.00
Less increases	28,837.50
Net annual saving	603,834.50

The Public Printer, in a paper which he read before the Club of the Printing House Craftsmen in New York, on February 16, 1911, said of the saving that can be effected by the pending bill:

> If this measure is enacted into law it will unquestionably reduce the expenditures for public printing and binding approximately a million dollars a year. It is not claimed that the cost of the job printing of the Government is excessive or unnecessary work executed. The saving to be effected is principally in the distribution of congressional and departmental reports and miscellaneous documents.

JOINT COMMITTEE OF PRINTING.

The Joint Committee on Printing, which is provided for in the first five sections of the bill, was created by a law of Congress approved August 3, 1846. The Joint Committee on Printing from that date to this has consisted of three Members of the Senate and three Members of the House, who constitute, in fact, a board of directors for the Government Printing Office. The Joint Committee on Printing, as created in 1846, directed the manner of procuring the printing for the two Houses of Congress and supervised the work of contracting printers.

The duties of the Joint Committee on Printing were further enlarged by the act of August 26, 1852, section 12, which reads as follows:

> And be it further enacted, That a committee, consisting of three members of the Senate and three members of the House of Representatives, shall be appointed by the President of the Senate and Speaker of the House, to be called the Joint Committee on the Public Printing, which committee shall have a right to decide between the Superintendent of the Public Printing and the Public Printer in any dispute which may arise as to the propriety of the decisions of the Superintendent making deductions on account of work which the superintendent may refuse to receive, or which, in his opinion, may not be done with proper dispatch, as required by law; and the said committee shall pass upon the accounts of the Superintendent of the Public Printing. Said committee shall have power to adopt such measures as may be deemed necessary to remedy any neglect or delay in the execution of the public printing, provided that no contract, agreement, or arrangement entered into by this committee shall take effect until the same shall have been approved by that House of Congress to which the printing belongs, and when the printing delayed relates to the business of both Houses, until both Houses shall have approved of such contract or arrangement. All motions to print extra copies of any bill, report, or other public document shall be referred to the members of the Committee on Printing from the House in which the same may be made.

The act of June 23, 1860, which established the Government Printing Office, authorized the Superintendent of Printing to contract for the erection or purchase of buildings, machinery, and material, and provided that such contract should be "subject to the approval of the Joint Committee on Printing of the two Houses of Congress."

By an act of July 27, 1866, Congress provided that the "Joint Committee on Public Printing" should "fix upon standards of paper for the different descriptions of public printing," obtain proposals therefor, and award the contracts. By the act of 1852 the Superintendent of Printing was required to open the annual paper proposals in the presence of the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House, but by the act of 1866 this has been a most important duty of the Joint Committee on Printing for nearly half a century. The cost of paper purchased under these awards of the Joint Committee on Printing amounts to approximately a million and a half dollars a year. As far as I know, the finger of scandal has never been pointed at the joint committee in its awards of paper contracts or its supervision over the Government Printing Office.

Commenting on the paper awards made by the Joint Committee on Printing last year, the correspondent of the Paper Mill and Wooden Pulp News, in its issue of January 28, 1911, said:

> Take it all in all, I am free to state that I am quite proud of Uncle Sam, for I think he acted toward these paper manufacturers like a little gentleman. He treated them all with the kindest consideration and gave none of them a chance to even think, let alone utter, the two words, "He's prejudiced."
> Now, it is the first time that I ever went to Washington to attend the opening of the bids, and it is the first time that I ever went there to hear the awards handed down, and I don't mind telling you that I am as proud as a peacock because I did go there and because I did sit there until the whole transaction was finished. Of course, I will admit I did see the finish of a few and the making of many, but it was no fault of Uncle Sam. It was simply a matter of price. The manufacturer was not taken into consideration. His bond was his recommendation, and Uncle Sam simply said in so many words to these manufacturers, but he did not say it loud enough for them to hear it, but he said, "So ye bid, so shall ye make; and if ye fail to make according to the specifications upon which ye bid, so shall ye be rejected and so shall ye settle." Can anything be fairer than that?
> It did not make a particle of difference to Uncle Sam who the manufacturer was or how long he had been making that particular grade of paper for the Government. Years did not cut any ice; experience was not taken into consideration, or a brand-new mill just starting up or making its debut on the strength of one of these awards. His first act was to find out if the new man's bond was all right. If he was satisfied upon that point, he was ready to consider his bid and give him his award if his price was one penny a ton lower than the old and experienced paper manufacturer.

I believe that is a typical expression of the opinion which the paper trade in general holds concerning the fairness and impartiality of the Joint Committee on Printing.

While discussing the Joint Committee on Printing's control over the purchases of paper for the Government Printing Office I want to briefly invite your attention to the fact that the Joint Committee on December 20, 1911, adopted new standards, stricter specifications, and more rigid rules for the inspection of Government paper. These standards were prepared by a committee of Government experts and have already attracted widespread attention and much favorable comment. The committee was moved to adopt more definite specifications for Government paper by its discovery last summer that certain paper contractors were attempting to overload or adulterate their paper with clay or mineral filler, which had a tendency to weaken the paper and lessen its durability. It is believed, under the new specifications, that the Government will be insured as high a grade of paper as it is possible to obtain. The awards made by the Joint Committee in January of this year show that a much higher grade paper will be obtained for the Government at a less cost than heretofore paid for paper of a lower standard. I understand that the General Supply Committee is preparing to adopt similar standards of paper for all the departments of the Government. I was highly gratified to read in the President's message of January 17, 1912, in connection with the work of his Economy and Efficiency Commission, the following recommendation in regard to standard specifications for Government material, which is exactly in line with what the Joint Committee on Printing has put in effect already:

> The importance of establishing and maintaining standard specifications is found not only in the possibility of very materially reducing the direct cost of Government trading, but also in insuring to the service materials, supplies, and equipment which are better adapted to its purposes. One of the results of indefiniteness of specifications is to impose contract conditions which make it extrahazardous for persons to enter into contractual relations. This not only deprives the Government of the advantage of broad competition, but causes it to pay an added margin in price to vendors who must carry the risk. The specifications which may have been worked out in one department usually differ from specifications for the same article to be used in another department. Much progress has been made toward improving this condition through the schedules of the General Supply Committee, but there are many classes of supplies not on these lists which may be standardized, and the articles which are there listed may be specified with exactness.

There are two important changes in the bill now before the Senate as it relates to the Joint Committee on Printing. One of these changes confers on the joint committee the authority now possessed by the Printing Investigation Commission. The fact that during the existence of the Printing Investigation Commission the expenditures for the Government Printing Office have been diminished fully a million dollars a year seems to me sufficient argument for a continuation of this supervision over the public printing and binding, especially when it is recalled that in the 10-year period from 1895 to 1905, during which Congress refrained from investigating the public printing, the expenditures therefor more than doubled. Another change which is necessary, if this additional authority is to be conferred on the joint committee, is that providing a permanent organization and clerical force for it. For several years past the secretary of the Printing Investigation Commission has acted as clerk of the Joint Committee on Printing without any additional compensation for this work. It is absolutely essential that, if the Joint Committee on Printing is to continue the work of the Printing Investigation Commission, it must be provided with the means to do that work.

I need to cite only an instance out of dozens of similar ones that have occurred to show the saving that can be accomplished by vesting this authority in the Joint Committee on Printing. Last July the Public Printer requested authority from the Joint Committee on Printing to reprint the annual report of the Bureau of Soils for 1907. The folding room of the House desired 1,225 copies of this report which the Public Printer estimated would cost $13,494. The clerk of the Joint Committee on Printing investigated this matter and found that the various distributing officers of the Government already had on hand more than 1,200 copies of this report, and he further ascertained that 240 of this number were included in a list of documents which the superintendent of documents had recommended to the Public Printer for condemnation. These copies were rescued from the waste-paper pile and the Government saved $13,494, or more than the entire appropriation for the expenses of the Printing Commission for the present fiscal year.

Under existing law, the jurisdiction of the Joint Committee on Printing is manifold and comprehensive, and this jurisdiction is continued by the pending bill.

The Joint Committee on Printing is already empowered by law to: (1) To remedy any neglect or delay in the execution of the public printing; (2) to reprint additional copies of Government publications within a cost of $200; (3) to establish standards of paper for the public printing; (4) to authorize advertisements for proposals for paper; (5) to establish the limit of time for which paper shall be supplied; (6) to open sealed proposals for paper and to award contracts therefor; (7) to adjudicate differences between contractors and the Public Printer; (8) to authorize purchases of paper in the open market; (9) to authorize purchases of material in the open market, within limitations; (10) to control the arrangement and style of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, and to provide for the publication of an index thereon; (11) to authorize contracts for lithographing, engraving, etc., and to contract therefor in the open market; (12) to appoint a member of the board of paper inspection and board of condemnation; (13) to authorize leases; (14) to compile, edit, and distribute the Congressional Directory; (15) to compile eulogies on deceased Senators and Members; (16) to establish regulations for the sale of duplicate stereotype and electrotype plates; (17) to regulate the preparation and publication of the Comprehensive Index of Public Documents, and the Consolidated Index of Congressional Documents; (18) to edit, compile, and index the Abridgment of the Annual Message and Documents; (19) to regulate the publications of the Patent Office as to methods; (20) to establish the style and form of printing of the annual reports of the executive offices of the Government; (21) to establish regulations for the printing of all public documents in editions.

The Government Printing Office stands in a different relation to Congress than any other department, bureau, or establishment of the Government. It is not under the control of any executive department. The Public Printer is responsible to the President only for his appointment, which must be confirmed by the Senate. The Government Printing Office is, and was, designed to be primarily under the control of Congress. It is therefore highly important that some committee of Congress should have full authority to supervise its operations. The Joint Committee on Printing has had more or less supervision over the public printing and binding for the past 65 years. Experience has demonstrated the fact that had the Joint Committee on Printing possessed the full authority of the Printing Investigation Commission much of the extravagances in the public printing and binding would never have occurred.

It is certain that Congress should either give the Joint Committee on Printing proper control over the Government Printing Office or else place that office under an executive department. From the fact that the Government Printing Office is essentially a congressional institution, created and maintained largely for the use of Congress, it is the firm belief of the Commission that this control should remain with Congress and be exercised by its Joint Committee on Printing, which is always subject to the direction of Congress.

In this connection, let me read from a report to President Roosevelt by William S. Rossiter, who made a special investigation of the Government Printing Office in 1908 under the direction of the President. Mr. Rossiter says:

> In view of the historic relation of Congress to the Government Printing Office, and especially because the movement of legislative business depends upon its satisfactory operation, it seems appropriate that the Joint Committee on Printing of Congress should occupy a closer relation to the Printing Office and should exercise a more direct control over the policies of the office. This important committee should be regarded by the Public Printer as his board of directors. He should consult them and secure their cooperation, approval, or disapproval of all important policies which he proposes to put in force or heavy expenditures which he desires to make. Such supervision ought to render impossible conditions which led to your action of February 5.

The action to which Mr. Rossiter refers here was the suspension of Public Printer Stillings following the exposé of the audit system, which extravagance cost the Government several hundred thousand dollars.

The extravagances of the audit system also demonstrated the necessity for the Joint Committee on Printing to supervise the expenditures of the Public Printer. Up to that time there was no limitation on the sums that the Public Printer might expend for machinery from the appropriations for the public printing and binding. In fact, Public Printers have expended for machinery and material more than $1,000,000 in one year without having to obtain the approval or advice of any other officer of the Government. I do not know of a single Cabinet officer who has been vested with such large discretionary power. Not even the President himself has had it, except in the emergency of war. In order to safeguard the interests of the Government in the purchases of machinery and equipment, the Joint Committee on Printing on May 25, 1908, adopted a resolution requiring the Public Printer to obtain the approval of the joint committee on all such purchases in excess of $1,000. This resolution of the committee was heartily approved by President Roosevelt, who sent the following letter to the Public Printer:

> THE WHITE HOUSE, WASHINGTON,
> Oyster Bay, N. Y., June 20, 1908.
> MY DEAR MR. LEECH: I call your attention to the inclosed letter from Congressman Landis, chairman of the House Committee on Printing, dated June 18, 1908, and to the resolution of the Joint Committee on Printing of May 25, 1908. This resolution has my entire approval. I am not willing to run the slightest risk of a repetition of the troubles that have occurred within the past few years, and I hereby direct that you govern yourself in accordance with the resolution of the Joint Committee on Printing of May 25, 1908, and comply with the requests it therein makes of the Public Printer.
> Sincerely, yours,
> (Signed) THEODORE ROOSEVELT.
> Hon. J. S. LEECH, Public Printer.

The pending bill proposes to enact into law this resolution which undoubtedly has saved the Government thousands of dollars in preventing extravagant purchases of machinery for the Government Printing Office. The bill further restricts these purchases by reducing the amount on which the Public Printer must have the approval of the joint committee from $1,000 to $500, in each instance.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. SMOOT. I do.

Mr. GALLINGER. I should like to ask the Senator from Utah to state who is responsible for these extravagant purchases of material in the Government Printing Office?

Mr. SMOOT. The resolution of May 25, 1908, provides that purchases exceeding $1,000 can not be made by the Public Printer without the sanction of the Joint Committee on Printing; but before that resolution was adopted by the Joint Committee on Printing the Public Printer had the authority to purchase machinery within the limits of the lump appropriation without asking anybody.

Mr. GALLINGER. And was the Public Printer responsible for purchasing machinery that was not needed in the Government Printing Office?

Mr. SMOOT. That has happened in the past.

Mr. GALLINGER. That was under a former Public Printer?

Mr. SMOOT. Oh, yes; it was under a former Public Printer. The statement does not apply to the present Public Printer. Since May 25, 1908, the resolution has been strictly complied with by the Public Printer.

Mr. GALLINGER. Under that former Public Printer, I will ask the Senator if the business of the Government Printing Office was so loosely and foolishly managed as not to have any system of audit, so that it could be known under whose responsibility those purchases were made or why they were made?

Mr. SMOOT. Up to that time that was the case, Mr. President.

Mr. GALLINGER. That was a very bad situation.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. BROWN. The extravagances which occurred under a former Public Printer, and for which he was responsible, might occur under the system the Senator proposes, except that somebody else and not the Public Printer would be responsible for the extravagances. So that in the final analysis, in order to have the office administered economically and honestly, you have to depend and rely on an administrative officer, or an executive officer if it is in an executive department, whether it be the Public Printer or, under the new plan, the Joint Committee on Printing, and we could have just as many indefensible extravagances under the committee system as we could under the Public Printer system if the joint committee was careless and extravagant. So, I can not see where it follows that the Senator is curing the evils of which he complains by substituting a committee for the Public Printer.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, we are substituting three representatives from the House and three representatives from the Senate in place of one man. The Public Printer may desire to establish in the Government Printing Office a new system of printing requiring a large purchase of new machinery. The proposed bill provides that before this can be done he must secure the written consent of the Joint Committee on Printing. The necessity of such a change will be passed upon not by the Public Printer alone, but by the Joint Committee on Printing.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, under the present law the Public Printer is an executive officer, and he is authorized and required to perform executive duties.

Mr. SMOOT. Under the law?

Mr. BROWN. Under the existing law.

Mr. SMOOT. Well, he will be under the proposed law.

Mr. BROWN. Yes; but he will not be permitted to perform his duties in certain instances until he gets the consent of this committee.

Mr. SMOOT. It is so to-day.

Mr. BROWN. In other words, you are proposing to have the legislative branch of the Government invade the executive branch. There is no occasion for dividing the responsibility for this work. It ought to be in one branch or the other, and it has always been in the executive branch, as I recollect. The success of the service that is rendered the public through this agency of the Government depends now and always will depend, whether it is under the direction of a committee or a Public Printer, on the efficiency and capacity of either the committee or the officer administering the law.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the Joint Committee on Printing is under the control of Congress. The committee does not interfere with any right or authority that belongs to the Public Printer. If he desires to expend the public money for the purchase of machinery or supplies costing in excess of $500 he is to apply to the Joint Committee on Printing for permission to do so.

Mr. BROWN. The joint committee gives him authority, but the joint committee does not come to Congress——

Mr. SMOOT. The joint committee is created by Congress; represents Congress——

Mr. BROWN. To find out whether their action meets the approval of Congress. The joint committee becomes the master and boss of the Public Printer, and Congress will know nothing more about what the action of the joint committee is under the bill of the Senator than it knows now what the action of the Public Printer is under existing law.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I have not heard the Public Printer complain of having to obtain the consent of the Joint Committee on Printing to purchase machinery where it costs in excess of $500. Requiring such consent is taking no authority from him, and if I were the Public Printer I would welcome the division of the responsibility.

I will say that the present Public Printer has never made application to the Joint Committee on Printing for the installation of improved machinery of any kind, where he has shown the necessity for it, that the application has not been granted.

Mr. BROWN. Well, Mr. President, I am not voicing any complaint by the Public Printer; I have no brief to speak for him, and do not know of any differences existing between him and the committee.

Mr. SMOOT. There are none.

Mr. BROWN. But this is not a question of passing a law to suit the Public Printer any more than it is a question of passing a law to suit the Joint Committee on Printing. I think that law ought to be passed which will best and most efficiently protect the public interests. What I am interested now in knowing from the Senator is, why does he expect to get a better service from a public standpoint, if we trust a joint committee to determine these matters, than we would if we should trust the Public Printer, provided the Public Printer is a competent and honest official?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, one might just as well say that the Public Printer should purchase all the paper, all the supplies, and everything that the Government Printing Office uses without any check on him whatever.

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly.

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President, it occurred to me to make a suggestion, which seems to me relevant in view of the dialogue between the Senator from Utah and the Senator from Nebraska. The office of the Public Printer is an anomaly in our system of administration. All the ordinary officers of about the same grade as the Public Printer, the heads of bureaus, are under the supervision of the head of an executive department, and above the heads of the executive departments stands the President, so that there is a double supervision over each one of the bureaus, such as the Census Bureau, the Pension Bureau, the Geological Survey, and so on. There is a double executive supervision. But the Government Printing Office is not in any executive department and has no supervision, and has never had any supervision except the supervision of Congress; and Congress, as I judge from the observations of the Senator from Utah, has not created a sufficient and adequate system of supervision. Now, either Congress ought to make its own supervision adequate, if it is going to perform that duty, and create for it adequate machinery and fix upon somebody the responsibility, or else it ought to put this bureau in an executive department. Whichever Congress chooses to do is all right; but the office is to-day a lost child and has been ever since I have known anything about the administration of the Government of the United States.

Mr. SMOOT. That, in substance, is what I have already said in my speech. I call the attention of the Senator to the fact that the Bureau of Engraving, its work being somewhat similar to that of the Government Printing Office, is under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield.

Mr. BROWN. The Senator from New York says the Public Printing Office is not in the executive branch of the Government.

Mr. ROOT. I beg the Senator's pardon. I said it is not in any executive department.

Mr. BROWN. That is to say, there is no member of the Cabinet who is in charge of the printing department.

Mr. ROOT. Neither any member of the Cabinet nor the President. Congress reserves to itself control of the Public Printer, because the performance of his duties is so intimately connected with the duties of Congress itself.

Mr. SMOOT. Congress always has done so.

Mr. ROOT. He is the printer, the person who prints the records of Congress and its bills and papers, its confidential papers, and Congress can not have anybody to do that work who is not under the full control of Congress; and it has always proceeded upon that theory.

Mr. BROWN. It is true Congress has reserved to itself supervisory power over the Public Printer. The Senator from Utah does not want to abolish his office; he leaves him in charge; but he makes the Public Printer not responsible to the will of Congress, but to a committee of Congress, that gives consent to do or not to do certain things, and then the committee makes no report to Congress. Therefore, the Senator from Utah does not satisfy the Senator from New York in putting this office in either the legislative or the executive branch of the Government. He leaves him where he is, performing executive duty, and makes him responsible to a certain fraction of the legislative branch of the Government, and with no duty on the part of the committee of Congress to make any report to Congress. I say the Senator ought to do one of two things—either make him an executive officer distinctly or make him a legislative officer distinctly.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator certainly has not read the bill, or he would not make that statement. The bill specifically states what authority the Public Printer is given. In the purchase of material at the Government Printing Office, where it exceeds $500, there must be secured the consent of the Joint Committee on Printing.

Mr. BROWN. That is it exactly. You do not get the consent of Congress. The committee, not Congress, is consulted.

Mr. SMOOT. The joint committee is a creature of Congress. It was created by Congress; and I do not see how the matter can be handled in any other way. The Public Printer can not ask every Member of the Senate and every Member of the House if a certain purchase shall be made. All the business of the Senate and the House is done through committees, and that is exactly what the proposed bill provides for.

Mr. BROWN. But those committees of Congress can not accomplish a thing on earth unless the action of the committee is ratified, but when the Printing Committee acts on the application of the Public Printer you permit that action to be final——

Mr. SMOOT. Would you rather have the action of the Public Printer final?

Mr. BROWN. I would rather have that than to have the action of a committee which makes no report at all.

Mr. SMOOT. There is a report made by the committee, subject to the action of Congress at all times.

Mr. BRISTOW. I understand from the remarks of the Senator from New York that the Executive head of the Government has no authority over the Public Printer. Did there not a few years ago quite a controversy grow up, and was not one Public Printer removed by the President, and was there not a controversy whether the Public Printing Office should be an open or a closed shop, and was not the action then taken the action of the Executive and not of the legislative branch of the Government?

Mr. ROOT. The Executive has no authority that I know of over the Public Printer except such power as results from the fact that he appoints the Public Printer, and the Public Printer is then under the direction of Congress. Of course the power of appointment does carry a certain power of coercion, by threat, implied or expressed, that there may be a change in the appointee——

Mr. BRISTOW. Is not that true of nearly every head of a bureau in the Government——

Mr. ROOT. No.

Mr. BRISTOW. That there is a certain degree of power invested in the appointing official? Take the case of fourth-class postmasters. The President has nothing to do with them. The Postmaster General can establish any policy he may please in regard to fourth-class postmasters, and while his command would not be authoritative, there would be the same power of coercion.

Mr. ROOT. The appointee is not bound to obey it.

Mr. BRISTOW. Or get out of his office.

Mr. ROOT. I beg the Senator's pardon. He is not bound, except as he may see fit to do so in deference to the wishes of the President. The law makes some one the authority which appoints these men, and suppose that man appoints them in defiance of the President? The President can remove him.

Mr. BRISTOW. Of course, there are certain duties imposed by law upon these officers, in respect to which they are responsible under the law. There is no doubt about that. But the great body of the duties are duties which are subject to the supervision of the President, while there is none of that with regard to the Public Printer's office. The President has no authority to give orders to the Public Printer on any subject.

Mr. SMOOT. None whatever.

Mr. ROOT. He is responsible to Congress alone.

PRINTING OFFICE ORGANIZATION.

Mr. SMOOT. The second important feature of the bill is the permanent organization that it provides for the Government Printing Office. The printing act of June 23, 1860, when the Government Printing Office was established, provided a definite organization for that office and fixed the compensation of the foreman of printing at $1,800 and the foreman of binding at $1,500 per annum, respectively. The printing act of August 26, 1852, had fixed the salary of the Superintendent of Printing at $2,500 per annum. When the Federal Statutes were revised in 1878 the organization of the Government Printing Office was even more definitely fixed by law. Title 45 of the Revised Statutes relating to the public printing, advertisement, and public documents, provides for a Congressional Printer at $4,500 per annum, which salary was fixed by the act of February 22, 1867, a foreman of printing and a foreman of binding, at $2,100 per annum, respectively, as fixed by the legislative appropriation act of May 8, 1872. The Revised Statutes of 1878 also provided that the Congressional Printer might employ four clerks at $1,800 per annum each and one clerk at $1,400 per annum, "to have charge of the accounts with the departments and public offices."

The printing act of January 12, 1895, also contains a definite organization for the Government Printing Office, with a Public Printer at $4,500 per annum, a chief clerk at $2,400 per annum, a foreman of printing and a foreman of binding at $2,100 per annum, respectively, a superintendent of documents at a salary to be fixed by the Public Printer, and the following clerical force:

Two clerks of class 4, at $1,800 each; 2 clerks of class 3, at $1,600 each; 1 clerk of class 2, at $1,400.

The act of 1895 also fixed the compensation of printers, pressmen, and bookbinders. In conformity to these precedents the proposed bill likewise provides a definite organization for the Government Printing Office, but it differs from the present law in that it attempts to prevent a Public Printer from circumventing the law and establishing an organization to meet his own whim or fancy. Before deciding upon the proper organization for the Government Printing Office the commission made a careful and extended study of the different organizations that various Public Printers have installed there. The commission also studied the organization of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, where in many respects similar conditions obtain as in the Government Printing Office. The commission also took into consideration the views of a number of experts who have studied the Government Printing Office organizations and accorded extended hearings on this subject to the present Public Printer.

Since 1905 there have been four Public Printers and two Acting Public Printers in charge of the Government Printing Office. Each one had his own views of the proper organization for that establishment, but each in turn seemed more inclined to create new positions rather than abolish useless ones established by his predecessor. As a result there are now a number of useless positions in the Government Printing Office which, I believe, the Public Printer would be glad to have abolished, but he seems to fear taking the initiative in this economy owing to the political influence which some of the persons holding these high-salaried positions have sought to exert in their behalf. The time has come, I believe, for Congress to simplify the organization of the Government Printing Office and to protect the Government from any further extravagances in that regard. Under the present law and method of making appropriations for the Government Printing Office the Public Printer has a fund of approximately $4,500,000 at his command annually, out of which he can pay unlimited salaries for such positions as he may choose to create at any time. There is not another officer in the Government who has the power to create and maintain such high positions as has the Public Printer.

As an example of extravagances to which a Public Printer may go in his organization of the printing office, let me exhibit this scheme of organization which Public Printer Stillings established in 1908. This Stillings organization was overwhelmed with high-sounding titles. The office of the Public Printer was designated as the "headquarters" of this army of officers with awe-inspiring names. The printing office was divided into so-called "grand divisions," each of which was under command of a "principal officer," so designated.

Let me enumerate for the enlightenment of the Senate the names of the "grand divisions" and the "principal officers" thereof:

1. Headquarters, office of the Public Printer.
2. Grand division of special administration, in charge of appointment and correspondence officer.
3. Grand division of statistics and accounts, in charge of statistician and accountant.
4. Grand division of purchase, in charge of chief inspector and purchasing agent.
5. Grand division of maintenance, in charge of Deputy Public Printer.
6. Grand division of public documents, in charge of superintendent of documents, and consisting of the three following divisions: Administrative, editorial, and bibliographical.
7. Grand division of manufacture, in charge of superintendent of manufactures.

Succeeding Public Printers have modified this organization somewhat, but have been unable to do little more than to cut out part of the high-sounding titles. I want to here call your attention to the organization as established by Public Printer Leech and that now in operation under the present Public Printer.

The expert who was brought here by the Senate Committee on Public Expenditures, after a study of the Government Printing Office, reported that the present organization could be much simplified. The commission made a careful study of the organization suggested by this expert, and agrees with him that the positions of superintendent of work, assistant superintendent of work, computer in charge, and separate sections for estimating and jacket writing are unnecessary places. A further study of the simple organization of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, where an equal number of persons are employed, confirms this opinion that the present organization of the printing office is top-heavy, and should be modified in the interests of economy and efficiency.

At present a printer employed at night in the linotype section of the Government Printing Office, for instance, is under the following superabundance of supervision:

1. Assistant foreman of section.
2. Foreman of section.
3. Assistant foreman of printing.
4. Foreman of printing.
5. Assistant superintendent of work.
6. Superintendent of work.
7. Deputy Public Printer.
8. Public Printer.

The experience of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing and of large private printing establishments, and even that of the Government Printing Office prior to the Stillings's régime, has demonstrated the fact that this organization can and should be much simplified for the best interests of the Government and the workmen employed in the Government Printing Office. There is nothing in the present law or appropriation acts to prevent the Public Printer from to-morrow establishing such a position, for instance, as "Grand exalted and most sublime commander in chief of loose-leaf binders" in the Government Printing Office and paying such an officer a salary equal to that of his own. In view of past experiences, there is no assurance either that some future Public Printer might not attempt to create some such a ridiculous situation, unless Congress places a check on him as is proposed in the pending bill.

While the bill increases the salaries of some officers, as I have enumerated before, the abolishing of useless positions more than compensates for the increases proposed. In every instance where an increase is provided for the commission felt that it was fully warranted and would materially aid the Government in securing competent men to fill these places.

I believe the bill is one of the fairest measures ever reported to Congress in behalf of the employees of the Government Printing Office. Of this fact I have been assured by scores of these employees. In this connection I want to read a resolution of thanks which I have received from Columbia Typographical Union No. 101, of Washington. This resolution, signed and sealed by the secretary of the typographical union, reads as follows:

COLUMBIA TYPOGRAPHICAL UNION, No. 101,
Washington, D. C., January 22, 1912.

DEAR MR. SMOOT: Columbia Typographical Union, No. 101, at its meeting yesterday, voted to extend its sincere thanks to the Senate Committee on Printing for its equitable action in providing 30 working days' leave of absence to employees of the Government Printing Office, thus placing them on a basis equal with employees of the Executive Departments, who are granted 30 days' leave of absence exclusive of Sundays and holidays.

Will you kindly acquaint the committee with the action of the union?

Very truly, yours, GEO. S. SEIBOLD, Secretary.

[SEAL.]

Hon. REED SMOOT,
Chairman Senate Committee on Printing.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The hour of 4 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 1) granting a service pension to certain defined veterans of the Civil War and the War with Mexico.

Mr. McCUMBER. I will ask the Senator from Utah if he desires to complete his argument to-day.

Mr. SMOOT. Several Senators have stated to me that they very much desire an executive session, and if there is no objection on the part of the Senate, I would like to have leave to finish my remarks at the close of the morning business to-morrow.

Mr. McCUMBER. I will state to the Senator that notice has been given that another bill will be called up to-morrow morning, and that some one else is to speak at that time.

Mr. SMOOT. Then, perhaps I can follow after that Senator gets through, if notice has already been given.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state that the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] changed the notice he had previously given, transferring it to Monday next.

Mr. SMOOT. Then there will be no reason why I should not continue at the close of the morning business to-morrow.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is no conflicting order, the Chair will state.

SERVICE PENSIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 1) granting a service pension to certain defined veterans of the Civil War and the War with Mexico.

Mr. McCUMBER. I ask that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

Mr. McCUMBER. As has been suggested by the Senator from Utah, an executive session is desired a little earlier this afternoon than usual, and I would like to state, so that Senators may have notice, that I will not call up the unfinished business this afternoon for any action upon it.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. GALLINGER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After three hours and five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

HOUR OF MEETING TO-MORROW.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I move that when the Senate adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 12 o'clock to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. Latta, executive clerk, announced that the President had approved and signed the following acts:

On March 11, 1912:

S. 2004. An act to amend section 1505 of the Revised Statutes of the United States providing for the suspension from promotion of officers of the Navy if not professionally qualified;

S. 4521. An act to authorize the change of the name of the steamer William A. Hawgood; and

S. 4728. An act to authorize the change of name of the steamer Salt Lake City.

PATROL SERVICE BY STATE OF TEXAS (S. DOC. NO. 404).

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith statements of the amount expended by the State of Texas for the increased force of rangers required for policing and patrolling the international boundary along the Rio Grande during the months of October, November, and December of the year 1911, and during the month of January of the year 1912, together with certain correspondence bearing thereon.

The correspondence explains my reason for transmitting the accounts to Congress. The additional patrol service by the State of Texas served to save to the United States the cost which a more extended patrol of the frontier by the Army would have entailed, and I recommend that an appropriation be made to meet the amount of the increased financial burden assumed by that State.

WM. H. TAFT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, March 12, 1912.

Mr. SMOOT. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 7 o'clock and 6 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, March 13, 1912, at 12 o'clock meridian.

POSTMASTER.

OKLAHOMA.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, March 12, 1912.

The House met at 12 o'clock m.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father in heaven, we bless Thee for the nobility of soul which Thou hast implanted down deep in the hearts of Thy children, which from time immemorial under Thy guidance has lifted men from darkness unto light, from animalism to spiritualism, from savagery to civilization, from slavery to liberty—civil, political, and religious. Grant that it may continue to assert itself until selfishness and self-seeking may give way to the broader views of fatherhood, brotherhood, illustrated in the life and character of the Jesus of Nazareth, "until we all come unto the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ"; that Thy kingdom may come and Thy will be done to the glory and honor of Thy holy name. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 4566. An act to provide for the purchase of ground and the erection of a weather bureau observatory building at Billings, Mont.

AGRICULTURE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. LAMB. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 18960, the Agriculture appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the Agriculture appropriation bill, with Mr. BORLAND in the chair.

The Clerk read as follows:

For investigating the food habits of North American birds and mammals in relation to agriculture, horticulture, and forestry, including experiments and demonstrations in destroying noxious animals, $39,000.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 59, line 17, by striking out all after the word "animals" and inserting the following words, namely:

"Rodents and ground squirrels infected with the bubonic plague, on the national forests, $43,000, of which sum $4,000 shall be used for the destruction of ground squirrels on the national forests in California."

Mr. LAMB. Mr. Chairman, on that I reserve the point of order.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I have had this matter of squirrels and rodents infected with the bubonic plague under investigation with the various departments since last June, both the Department of Agriculture and the Department of Public Health and Marine-Hospital Service. At that time there was no money available in the Department of Agriculture, but there was some money available under the Public Health and Marine-Hospital Service, and by an agreement it was arranged that the Marine-Hospital Service should furnish the necessary material for the Forest Service to distribute poisons to the Forest Service to exterminate these squirrels. Last summer there were two or three boys infected with bubonic plague. They had reached into the squirrel holes and were infected because of coming in contact with them and the flees getting on their hands and biting them. I desire now to read to the committee a statement of Dr. Blue, of the United States Public Health and Marine-Hospital Service, in regard to this service. It is found in the report of the California State Agricultural Society for the year 1910, and is as follows:

SQUIRREL ERADICATION.

(By Surg. Rupert Blue, United States Public Health and Marine-Hospital Service.)

The extermination of squirrels has become one of the serious problems of this State. The interest in the subject, prior to 1907, was almost wholly an economic and financial one. Since that date evidence has been collected which proves that this animal is responsible for the transmission of plague and the chief cause of its continuance in this country. As a result, the sanitarian has become interested in the natural history of the ground squirrel, and has joined hands with the economic interests in the war of extermination.

A statement of the annual losses due to these animals should not be necessary. The fruit growers are perhaps better informed on this subject than the general public, so I will mention only a few facts in this connection. In a recent paper Dr. Merriam, of the Biological Survey, stated that they inflict injury on all classes of crops, and rank among the most destructive of our native rodents. The amount of the annual loss to agriculture was given as $10,000,000. This we can readily believe in view of their wide distribution and great numbers on the Pacific coast.

REMEDIAL MEASURES.

The necessity for cooperation and organization in the work of squirrel destruction is fully appreciated. Without the assistance of the farmer, orchardist, and landowner generally, success will be impossible. With a view of securing the personal cooperation of property owners, a State-wide campaign of publicity and education has been inaugurated by the State health authorities. It is pointed out, in the literature issued, that the project should be taken up for the purpose of protecting the lives of the citizens and also to save the crops from destruction. The viewpoints of both the sanitarian and the agriculturist are thus considered.

A plan of campaign has been proposed which places the legal responsibility upon the shoulders of the county boards of supervisors. As they are the source of authority, all official work should be done with their consent and cooperation. It is the purpose of the health authorities, both Federal and State, to enforce the State law of March 13, 1909, called an "Act for the extermination of rodents." It is believed, however, that the landowner will willingly take up the work, in view of the benefits to be gained by destroying the pests.

I will now call the attention of the committee to the act referred to. It is found on page 311 of the Statutes of California for the year 1909. It is as follows:

CHAPTER 204.

An act declaring property infested with certain rodents to be a public nuisance; requiring owners, occupants, and persons having possession of or dominion over such property to endeavor to exterminate and destroy such rodents; providing for the inspection of property by boards of health and health officers; authorizing boards of supervisors and other governing bodies to purchase materials and employ inspectors to prosecute such work of extermination; authorizing State and local health authorities to prosecute such work in certain cases; providing for the payment of the expense thereof; making the amount of such expense a lien on the property; providing for the collection of such amount by foreclosure of such lien; and declaring any violation of the provisions thereof to be a misdemeanor.

Approved March 13, 1909.

The people of the State of California, represented in senate and assembly, do enact as follows:

SECTION 1. It shall be and is hereby declared to be the duty of every person, firm, copartnership, company, and corporation owning, leasing, occupying, possessing, or having charge of or dominion over any land, place, building, structure, wharf, pier, dock, vessel, or water craft which is infested with rats, mice, gophers, or ground squirrels, or as soon as the presence of the same shall come to his, their, or its knowledge, at once to proceed and to continue in good faith to endeavor to exterminate and destroy such rodents, by poisoning, trapping, and other appropriate means.

SEC. 2. The State board of health and inspectors appointed by such board and local health officers and inspectors appointed for the purpose, as hereinafter provided, shall have authority and shall be permitted to enter into and upon any and all lands, places, buildings, structures, wharves, piers, docks, vessels, and water craft for the purpose of ascertaining whether the same are infested with such rodents and whether the requirements of this act as to the extermination and destruction thereof are being complied with: Provided, however, That no building occupied as a dwelling, hotel, or rooming house shall be entered for such purpose except between the hours of 9 o'clock in the forenoon and 5 o'clock in the afternoon of any day.

SEC. 3. The board of supervisors of each county and the city council or other governing body of each city and county, city and town, whenever it may by resolution determine that it is necessary for the preservation of the public health or to prevent the spread of contagious or infectious disease, communicable to mankind, or when such board shall so determine that it is necessary to prevent great and irreparable damage to crops or other property, may appropriate moneys for the purchase of and may purchase poison, traps, and other materials for the purpose of exterminating and destroying such rodents in such county, city and county, city or town, and may employ and pay inspectors, who shall have authority to and shall prosecute such work of extermination and destruction, under the direction of such board, or of the local health officer, or board of health, on both private and public property, in such county, city and county, city or town.

SEC. 4. Whenever any person, firm, copartnership, company, or corporation owning, leasing, occupying, possessing, or having charge of or dominion over any land, place, building, structure, wharf, pier, dock, vessel, or water craft which is infested with such rodents shall fail, neglect, or refuse to proceed and to continue to endeavor to exterminate and destroy such rodents, as herein required, it shall be the duty of the State board of health, its inspectors, and the local board of health and health officer at once to cause such nuisance to be abated by exterminating and destroying such rodents. The expense thereof shall be a charge against the county, city and county, city or town wherein the work is done, and the board of supervisors or other governing body shall allow and pay the same. Thereupon the clerk of such board shall file in the office of the county recorder a notice of such payment, claiming a lien on such property for the amount of such payment. Any and all sums so paid by such county, city and county, city or town shall be a lien on the property on which said nuisance shall have been abated and may be recovered in an action against such property, which action to foreclose such lien shall be brought within 90 days after such payment, and be prosecuted by the district, city, or town attorney in the name of such county, city and county, city or town and for its benefit. When the property is sold, enough of the proceeds shall be paid into the treasury of such county, city and county, city or town to satisfy such lien and the costs, and the overplus, if any there be, shall be paid to the owner of the property, if known, and if not known shall be paid into court for use of such owner when ascertained. When it appears from the complaint in such action that the property on which such lien is to be foreclosed is likely to be removed from the jurisdiction of the court, the court may appoint a receiver to take possession of the property and hold the same while the action may be pending or until the defendant shall execute and file a bond, with sufficient sureties, conditioned for the payment of any judgment that may be recovered against him in the action and all costs.

SEC. 5. Any violation of the provisions of this act shall be deemed a misdemeanor and shall be punishable as such.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I will ask the gentleman what the State of California is doing in respect to this?

Mr. RAKER. The State of California is expending hundreds of thousands of dollars on this matter, and they ask the cooperation of the United States Government. Right alongside of the places where the State of California is expending money for the extermination of these pests, there are the national forests, which are a perfect hotbed and hive for these rodents and squirrels. I desire now to read the following letter from Secretary Wilson of the Department of Agriculture, of date December 27, 1911:

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, December 27, 1911.

Hon. JOHN E. RAKER,
House of Representatives.

DEAR SIR: Your letter of December 23 inclosing resolutions by the board of supervisors of San Benito County, Cal., in relation to the extermination of ground squirrels on public lands in that county, has been received.

In reply I would say that I am much interested in the work of exterminating ground squirrels in California. I regret to state, however, that the Biological Survey of this department, in charge of such work, at present has no money available for the purpose. The survey has succeeded in effecting methods of destroying noxious rodents, which are now in general use within the United States. The experience gained on the ground would enable the survey assistants to organize and conduct an effective campaign against the pests.

Should Congress, therefore, see fit to make an appropriation to carry on this undertaking, we shall be glad to prosecute it vigorously, especially in areas adjacent to cultivated lands.

Respectfully,

JAMES WILSON, Secretary.

Upon the same subject I have a letter of date March 5, 1912, which is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, March 5, 1912.

Hon. JOHN E. RAKER,
House of Representatives.

DEAR SIR: I have your letter of March 4, with regard to the appropriation for exterminating rodents in national forests.

This has been an unfortunate business all along the line. There was, I understand, plenty of money appropriated for the Marine-Hospital Service at the time the bubonic plague manifested itself among the squirrels of California. It has now extended very widely. I do not suppose Congress would put money in the hands of this department with which to exterminate the squirrels, but I estimated for a sufficient amount to enable us to clear the rodents out of a national forest where they had become numerous. I am surprised that this plague has been allowed to spread over so large a part of California. I would be pleased to see enough money appropriated to clean out the forests as far as the bubonic-plague squirrel is concerned. You will have to be the judge as to whether it is wise to publish these things that I am saying.

Very truly, yours,

JAMES WILSON, Secretary.

Mr. LAMB. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman from California will permit an interruption at this point, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose, and the Speaker having resumed the Chair, Mr. BORLAND, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 18960, the Agriculture appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

THE SMELTER TRUST.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, I present the following privileged resolution, together with the report, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 419.

Resolved, That the Attorney General be, and he is hereby, directed, if not incompatible with the public service, to inform the House whether the Department of Justice has in its possession any information touching the existence of a Smelter Trust in the United States, including the American Smelting & Refining Co.; whether complaint of the existence of a Smelter Trust, or touching the operations of the American Smelting & Refining Co. as the same might be affected by the Sherman antitrust law, has reached the Department of Justice; whether any steps have been taken or are in contemplation to investigate the existence of or prosecute any Smelting Trust; together with copies of any information touching the existence and operations, if any, of such trust.

[House Report No. 409, Sixty-second Congress, second session.]

Mr. CLAYTON, from the Committee on the Judiciary, submitted the following report to accompany House resolution 419:

The Committee on the Judiciary having had under consideration House resolution 419 report the same back with a substitute, as follows, and recommend the adoption of the substitute and that the resolution as so amended do pass:

SUBSTITUTE.

Resolved, That the Attorney General be, and he is hereby, directed, if not incompatible with the public interest, to inform the House of Representatives:

(1) Whether the Department of Justice has in its possession any information touching the existence of a Smelter Trust in the United States, in violation of the act approved July 2, 1890, entitled "An act to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies," and acts amendatory thereof;

(2) Whether the Department of Justice has in its possession any information tending to establish that the American Smelting & Refining Co. constitutes in itself a trust or a part of any trust, in violation of the said act and acts amendatory thereof;

(3) Whether complaint of the existence of a Smelter Trust or complaint touching the operation of the American Smelting & Refining Co. as the same might be affected by said acts, has reached the Department of Justice; and

(4) Whether any steps have been taken to investigate the existence of or to dissolve or prosecute any Smelter Trust.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, just one word. The resolution as introduced is inartificial in form. I need not go further in making comment upon that than to say that in line 3 of the resolution it refers to this body as "The House." That may be the ordinary parlance used in speaking of the House of Representatives, but the legal and parliamentary way of describing this body is as "the House of Representatives." The committee in executive session undertook to amend the resolution so as to preserve substantially all that the author intended and to accomplish all that he desires to accomplish. Mr. Speaker, the committee instructed me to redraft the resolution and to offer it in the shape of a substitute. This has been done and this substitute meets the intention of the author of the original resolution. I move the adoption of the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the substitute in the nature of an amendment.

The question was taken, and the substitute was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on agreeing to the resolution as amended by the substitute.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

LESLIE J. LYONS.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following privileged resolution, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution:

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 439.

Resolved, That the Attorney General of the United States be, and he is hereby, directed, if not incompatible with public interest, to transmit forthwith to the House of Representatives a copy of the charges filed against Leslie J. Lyons, United States district attorney of the western district of Missouri, together with the report of Arthur T. Bagley, special agent detailed by the Department of Justice to investigate said charges, and a statement of the action of the Department of Justice, if any, upon said charges and report.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will also read the report (H. Rept. 410).

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on the Judiciary having had under consideration House resolution 439 report the same back with the recommendation that it do pass.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

LAWS RELATING TO THE JUDICIARY.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill H. R. 19238, an act to amend section 90 of the act entitled "An act to codify, revise and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911, with Senate amendments thereto, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House agree to the request of the Senate for a conference.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER appointed the following conferees on the part of the House: Mr. CLAYTON, Mr. CARLIN, and Mr. STERLING.

AGRICULTURE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. LAMB. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 18960, the Agriculture appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the Agriculture appropriation bill, with Mr. BORLAND in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. When the committee rose the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] had preferred a request to be allowed to continue for five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, in addition to what I said, I desire to read a letter and a statement from Surg. Gen. Blue, as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, March 6, 1912.

Hon. JOHN E. RAKER,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. RAKER: In accordance with your request of yesterday I transmit herewith a memorandum regarding plague and plague-suppressive measures in rural California.

Respectfully,

RUPERT BLUE,
Surgeon General.

MEMORANDUM FOR HON. JOHN E. RAKER, REGARDING PLAGUE AND PLAGUE-SUPPRESSIVE MEASURES IN RURAL CALIFORNIA.

Plague was first discovered among ground squirrels in California in August, 1908, the first infection being found in Contra Costa County.

Since that time infected squirrels have been found in Alameda, Contra Costa, San Joaquin, Santa Clara, Merced, Stanislaus, San Benito, Santa Cruz, Monterey, Fresno, San Luis Obispo, and Los Angeles Counties.

Since July 1, 1911, no infected squirrels have been found in the following counties: Los Angeles, San Benito, San Luis Obispo, Santa Clara, Santa Cruz, and Stanislaus. On account of the thorough investigations made in Los Angeles and San Luis Obispo Counties the belief is entertained that the infection has been eradicated from these counties.

Further investigations will be needed, however, before the same belief can be had regarding the other counties mentioned.

The work in the rural district as at present carried on is as follows: Squirrel-free areas are maintained around the cities bordering upon San Francisco Bay to prevent reinfection and a similar area is being established in San Joaquin and Stanislaus Counties to prevent the spread of infection to the eastward. Other employees are engaged in the destruction of squirrels in known infected areas, and still others are engaged in the eradication of squirrels in conjunction with county supervisors and other local authorities.

For purposes of determining to what extent infection has spread, hunters are employed, who shoot squirrels and forward them to the laboratory in San Francisco for examination. For eradication, poisons, such as carbon disulphide and strychnine, are used.

Since August, 1908, approximately 500,000 squirrels have been collected; of this number 570 were found infected with plague.

Not even an approximate estimate can be made of the number of squirrels destroyed by poison and other means, but the total will amount to very many times the number collected.

Large areas have been so completely freed from squirrels that a few men suffice to prevent reinfestation.

Since the advent of the rainy season and on account of the low state of the epidemic fund the rural field force has been reduced from 117 to 67 men and the total expenditures for all purposes in the State from about $20,000 per month to $14,000 per month. According to last advices, the expenditures on the part of the State and counties amounted to about $14,000 per month. This does not include expenditures being made by farmers, ranchers, and other private individuals, the amount of which can not be estimated.

As you are aware, some work is being done in forest reserves and national parks by the Departments of the Interior and Agriculture for the extermination of ground squirrels, but as they do not have as yet specific appropriations for this purpose it is not very extensive.

Now, he made that statement on the ground that there was an appropriation in the bill, but it was not allowed. I also want to call your attention to the letter of H. W. Henshaw, Chief of the Biological Survey, as follows:

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
BUREAU OF BIOLOGICAL SURVEY,
Washington, D. C., March 4, 1912.

Hon. JOHN E. RAKER,
House of Representatives.

DEAR SIR: In reply to your letter of March 4, just received, I beg to say that in the estimate for appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for 1913 the item for investigating the food habits of North American birds and animals in relation to agriculture, etc., carried an appropriation of $43,000, of which sum $3,000 shall be used for the destruction of ground squirrels in the national forests in California. The bill as reported to the House reduces this estimate to $39,000 and omits the clause relating to ground squirrels. If the item could be restored as set forth on page 61 of the Book of Estimates, it would enable us to make a beginning on the work of ground-squirrel destruction in California.

I should add, however, that not less than $100,000 will be necessary to secure any effective results in exterminating the squirrels over any considerable area of the national domain, and to exterminate the squirrels within the entire area covered by the national forests would require a much larger sum.

The necessity of initiating this work within the national forests arises from the fact that the task of exterminating ground squirrels now being vigorously pushed by the State can not be made permanently effective unless similar work is done within the national forests; since the latter will continue indefinitely to act as nurseries from which the adjoining State and private lands will be repopulated. The extermination of these plague-carrying rodents is of supreme importance, not only to the State of California, but to the people of the United States as a whole, since other species of ground squirrels more or less similar to the California species inhabit the States to the eastward beyond the Mississippi River. Hence the disease is likely to be transmitted at any time to these and so become endemic over a large part of the United States.

Respectfully,

H. W. HENSHAW,
Chief Biological Survey.

Also, I want to call your attention to a letter of January 4, 1912, from the Chief Forester, Mr. Graves, as follows:

DISTRICT 5—COOPERATION, PLAGUE PREVENTION.

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE, FOREST SERVICE,
Washington, January 4, 1912.

Hon. JOHN E. RAKER,
House of Representatives.

DEAR MR. RAKER: Your letter of December 29, is received.

In accordance with the request contained in your letter, I shall endeavor to outline all information in the possession of this office with reference to the extermination of ground squirrels, supposed carriers of the bubonic-plague flea, within the national forests in the State of California.

On March 20, 1911, the Secretary of Agriculture, in replying to a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury under date of March 16, 1911, asking for the assistance of forest officers in the extermination of plague-infected rodents upon the Monterey National Forest, within the State of California, assured him that every effort would be made by the Forest Service to secure the extermination of the rodents within the national forest mentioned. On March 22 the district forester at San Francisco, Cal., was instructed to cooperate with the State authorities and with the Public Health and Marine-Hospital Service in the extermination of ground squirrels and other rodents which might be infected with bubonic plague.

On March 28 the district forester at San Francisco addressed a letter to the supervisor of the Monterey National Forest, instructing him to cooperate with Surg. Rupert Blue, who was in charge of the plague-suppression measures in California, and advising the supervisor that if it was impossible for his regular force of rangers to give Dr. Blue the assistance he required additional guards should be employed, it being understood, however, that if extensive operations, such as poisoning, were found necessary the work would be under the general instructions of the Biological Survey. On April 5 the acting district forester advised the Forester that Dr. Blue had suggested the detail of a member of the Biological Survey to take charge of squirrel poisoning within the Monterey Forest. The supervisor was also authorized to employ two additional men to cooperate in the work of squirrel eradication, giving all their time to it. The men were employed and worked under Dr. Blue's instructions in collecting specimens of ground squirrels from various parts of the Monterey National Forest. In this connection it is interesting to note that none of the specimens collected within the forest was found to show any evidence of bubonic-plague infection.

At the beginning of the current fiscal year the question arose of making necessary provision for the continued employment of men engaged in this work, and on July 22 the legal aspects of the question were referred to the Solicitor of the Department of Agriculture for his consideration and opinion. On July 27 an opinion was rendered by the Solicitor as follows:

"I have had under consideration your letter of the 22d instant, asking to be advised whether there are any legal objections to the Forest Service engaging in the examination of the bubonic-infested mammals on the Monterey National Forest, in California, in cooperation with the board of health of that State. It appears that the Secretary of the Treasury is now cooperating with the State board of health and Marine-Hospital Service, and he has requested that this department render all necessary service in the extermination of the above-stated mammals within the national forests.

"The act of May 23, 1908 (35 Stats., 251), provides that officials of the Forest Service designated by the Secretary of Agriculture shall in all ways that are practicable, and with respect to national forests, aid the other Federal bureaus and departments, on request from them, in the performance of the duties imposed upon them by law. I am of the opinion that you may direct the forest officers to give such assistance to the Public Health and Marine-Hospital Service as will be practicable in the extermination of infested mammals, when such service can be rendered without interference with the regular duties of these officers. But I am further of the opinion that the Forest Service can not undertake, as an independent service, the extermination of these mammals, for the reason that Congress has not provided any appropriation to pay for such work.

"I have examined the act of the California Legislature of March 13, 1909, which requires every person owning or possessing or controlling any land which is infested with rats, mice, gophers, or ground squirrels to exterminate such rodents by poisoning, trapping, or other appropriate means. The papers before me contain several suggestions that it might possibly be obligatory upon the department to undertake the destruction of these mammals on the national forests.

"The California act provides for enforcing its provisions and in effect creates a lien upon the land for expenses incurred by the State in the extermination of the above-named mammals. In my opinion there is no authority in the State to undertake the enforcement of this law on the national forests to any greater extent, at least, than efforts at the expense of the State to destroy the mammals on the national forests. I think it is probable that the State officials should at all proper times have access to the national forests for the purpose of exterminating these mammals, and, as I have stated above, I am of the opinion that it would be proper for the forest officers to render such incidental assistance in the extermination of the pests as would be compatible with the duties for which they are employed."

In view of the Solicitor's opinion, it was decided that the Forest Service would not make any expenditures for the specific purpose of squirrel eradication but would confine its efforts to cooperation with the State authorities and the Public Health and Marine-Hospital Service, such cooperation to consist of the distribution of poisoned grain and other materials, which would be furnished by the Public Health and Marine-Hospital Service, and which could be distributed by the local forest officers in connection with their other duties and without entailing any additional expense to be met from the Forest Service appropriation.

To sum up, the attention of the Department of Agriculture was directed to the ground-squirrel question on March 16, 1911, and between that date and July 1, 1911, the Forest Service confined its plague-prevention work to the Monterey National Forest, where the regular force was supplemented by two special men, and all worked in cooperation with the Public Health and Marine-Hospital Service, under the direction of Dr. Rupert Blue. From July 1 to December 31, 1911, the Forest Service, in accordance with the terms of the solicitor's opinion, cooperated to the extent of distributing poisoned grain, etc., where such work could be done without interference with the regular duties of the forest officers and without undue expenditure of Forest Service funds. In the latter half of the calendar year, however, the work was greatly broadened in its scope and poisoned grain was distributed upon several national forests. This was the situation up to January 1, 1912.

The suppression of bubonic plague through the destruction of ground squirrels and other rodents is without doubt one of the most important sanitary problems which confronts the Government at the present time, and one which should therefore receive special attention. I believe that the work of squirrel extermination within the national forests, the national parks, and upon the unreserved public lands should be under the direction of one bureau, which should have means of carrying on the work on a scale sufficiently large to secure results comparable to those being secured by the owners of private land within the State. It follows that the Forest Service should not be charged with all or any part of the work of squirrel extermination, except to such extent as the local forest officers may be able to cooperate with the representatives of the bureau charged with the general direction of the work. In my opinion this bureau should be either the Biological Survey of the Department of Agriculture or the Public Health and Marine-Hospital Service of the Treasury Department.

Very sincerely, yours,

H. S. GRAVES,
Forester.

Also, I wish to insert herewith a resolution from the board of supervisors of the county of Tulare, State of California. This is the same that has been received from other counties:

RESOLUTION BY BOARD OF SUPERVISORS OF THE COUNTY OF TULARE, CAL.

In the matter of the extermination of ground squirrels and other rodents in Tulare County, Cal.

Whereas the county of Tulare is now engaged in conducting a campaign for the extermination of ground squirrels and other rodents within its borders and is expending a large sum of money from the county funds in such campaign; and

Whereas all owners and holders of private property throughout said county are being notified and required under the law to proceed at once to exterminate squirrels and other rodents upon their property and are now engaged actively in the work of such extermination; and

Whereas there are within the borders of said county very considerable areas of land, title to which is vested in the United States of America, the same consisting of unappropriated and unoccupied portions of the public domain under the jurisdiction of the Departments of the Interior and Agriculture; and

Whereas unless the ground squirrels and other rodents upon all lands so owned and controlled by the United States are exterminated at the same time as those upon private lands throughout the county, the said lands under the ownership and control of the United States will afford a focus for the reinfestation of neighboring private lands with the said animals, thus nullifying the effects of this county and of its citizens to exterminate these pests: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the board of supervisors of said county of Tulare earnestly request the Departments of the Interior and Agriculture of the United States Government that they proceed as expeditiously as possible to cooperate on the part of the Federal Government with this county and its citizens in this campaign by exterminating the ground squirrels and other rodents upon all lands in this county owned and controlled by the United States; and be it further

Resolved, That our Representatives in Congress from California be urged to bring the matter of squirrel eradication on Government lands to the attention of Congress, and in order that the Departments of the Interior and Agriculture may prosecute this important and valuable work in an effective manner, request that the necessary appropriation be made for the eradication of ground squirrels and other rodents on all public lands in this county under the jurisdiction of the above departments; and be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be forwarded to the Departments of the Interior and Agriculture herein designated and to the Members of the Senate and House of Representatives from California.

Passed at a regular meeting of the board of supervisors of said county of Tulare, held at Visalia, Cal., on the 10th day of August, 1911.

Ayes 5, noes 0.

T. B. TWADDLE,
Chairman of the Board of Supervisors.

Attest:
AVON M. COBURN,
Clerk of said Board.

I hope the committee will adopt the amendment.

Mr. LAMB. Mr. Chairman, if this matter is as important as these papers which have been read would indicate, it is a great pity that my colleague could not have appeared before the committee and stated his case.

Now, let me say to the committee that this appropriation has been increased from $35,000 to $39,000—an increase of $4,000. This amount will be used for the destruction of noxious rodents in the national forests in connection with reforestation, for the destruction of ground squirrels and prairie dogs in the public forests, and for demonstrating methods for poisoning these animals on infested contiguous areas, and investigating repressive measures in connection with damage by the crawfish to cotton and corn crops in the Southern States. Eight thousand dollars was estimated for this purpose, but the committee reduced it to $4,000.

Now, your committee had this whole matter in mind, and we asked Mr. Zappone to give us an account of this money—how it was used. He said:

Mr. ZAPPONE. In detail the $8,000 is as follows: $2,000 for the destruction of noxious rodents in the national forest in connection with reforestation; $3,000 for the suppression of ground squirrels; $2,000 for destroying the prairie dogs in national forests and other public lands, and for demonstrating methods for poisoning these animals on badly infested contiguous areas; and $1,000 for investigating repressive measures in connection with damage by the crawfish to cotton and corn crops in the Southern States. These are the only changes in the general expense fund, with the exception of a transfer of $900 to the statutory roll. The actual increase in the fund is $13,500, as stated above.

I said to my friend this morning, in talking about it, that I regretted he had not come before the committee and made a statement. Of course I was compelled to make a point of order on it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, this question does not belong to the Forest Service at all. The campaign was started in 1907 by the Public Health and Marine-Hospital Service in the city of San Francisco in order to eliminate the bubonic plague.

Mr. LAMB. This is not the Forest Service that we are considering; it is the biological service.

Mr. FITZGERALD. And since that time the Federal Government has spent $1,000,000 on this work under the control of the Public Health and Marine-Hospital Service. They have an organization now in the State of California that costs about $23,000 a month. Twelve counties of that State have in them squirrels which are infected with a flea which is supposed to communicate the bubonic plague. There is no indication and no evidence that these squirrels are found infected in any national forest outside of the State of California.

The matter was very thoroughly looked into and investigated, and the Legislature of California last year passed a bill appropriating a considerable sum of money to enable the State to cooperate with the Federal Government in this work. For some reason or other the bill was vetoed by the governor of California.

There are two distinct and conflicting theories about the value of these investigations. The Public Health and Marine-Hospital Service believes it is of great importance that these squirrels should be exterminated, while a great many other persons believe that it is useless to attempt it. It has cost a million dollars to exterminate 10,000 squirrels affected by this flea.

But whatever the importance of the work, it should be under the control of one service of the Government and not distributed among a number of the different services of the Government. This work has all been paid for out of an emergency fund put at the disposal of the Public Health and Marine-Hospital Service. Since 1897 it has expended in various works $3,350,000. It is the service to which the Government naturally looks to prevent and control and eliminate epidemics of every character. It is the service which alone should have control of the attempt to exterminate the flea or the squirrel from which the bubonic plague comes. This is no place in which to start another service along the same lines. The Public Health and Marine-Hospital Service has this work so organized that by cooperation with local authorities and individuals and localities the best results are to be attained. And if it were desirable or necessary the cooperation should be with the Department of Agriculture, we could very readily submit the request in the proper manner, so that the work should be investigated. But if this work were initiated in this department and continued in the Public Health and Marine-Hospital Service and turned over to the Department of the Interior, we would shortly have several bureaus or services engaged in the same work, without any cooperation, and accomplishing much less, with a greater expenditure, than could be accomplished if it were concentrated under the one head. It seems to me it is wholly out of place for an agricultural bill to appropriate money for the purpose of investigation of epidemics and their cause.

Mr. LAMB. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a ruling.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia makes a point of order against the amendment on the grounds, the Chair takes it, that it is new legislation. The Chair is of the opinion that the first part of the amendment that extends the language "noxious animals" to include rodents and ground squirrels infected with bubonic plague is in order and germane at that point. The only portion of the amendment that the Chair has any doubt about is the limitation in the last part on the sum of $4,000 to be used for the destruction of rodents and ground squirrels in the national forests in California.

There has been some question made as to the power of the House, by amendment on an appropriation bill, to limit what is called the general discretion of the Secretary of Agriculture in expending these sums. The Chair is not unaware that there have been precedents in which dicta of various kinds have been expressed to the effect that the discretion of an executive officer could not be limited by these amendments. In the opinion of the Chair, however, that is not, as has been ruled before, a matter of parliamentary law for the Chair to decide. The question of how far the executive officer shall expend appropriations provided for him ought to be primarily in the control of this body, and the Chair is still of the opinion, expressed in former rulings, that if, in the opinion of the House, an investigation of certain scientific matters in a particular locality or respecting a particular class of animals or plants is sufficiently different in kind to warrant a separate appropriation, the House has the right to say so. Therefore, the point of order to the entire amendment is overruled.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I think the Chair overlooks the distinction between the power of the House to do a thing and the right of this committee to legislate upon an appropriation bill, which are very distinct. There is no question but that the House has the right to limit the discretion of the Secretary. The rule of the House prohibits legislation upon an appropriation bill, and any provision purporting to limit the discretion which the head of a department has is legislation and changes the law, and under the rules of the House, adopted by the House itself, is not in order on an appropriation bill. But that does not affect the powers of the House. It affects the ability of the Committee of the Whole House to incorporate into an appropriation bill that which the rule prohibits, because it is legislation. There is a long line of decisions which unquestionably sustain this contention. Not long since, when the fortifications bill was before the House, the question was considered as to whether it was in order to limit the expenditure of a certain sum for the acquisition of land at Cape Henry as a part of the coast defenses of the country. The question was whether such a limitation was in order, and inasmuch as the proposed amendment limited the power of the department to spend the money for the acquisition of sites, it was held under the rule, to which attention was called, that it was not in order. The same rule applies to this bill. This amendment would be legislation upon an appropriation bill, and to that objection is made, but not on the ground of any contention that the House itself has not the power in the manner provided by the rules to legislate.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has considered all that, the Chair will say to the gentleman from New York, and the logical result of that line of reasoning would be that we would simply make an appropriation of $14,000,000 for the Department of Agriculture, and stop right there.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The Chair is mistaken. The rulings are very distinct. The limitations which can be placed in an appropriation bill are not limits upon the discretion of the executive officer, but they are limitations which are well defined and understood, under the rules, upon appropriations. If the ruling of the Chair were to be followed, there is nothing under the sun in the way of legislation which is not in order upon this appropriation bill. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is overruled. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER].

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. RAKER. A division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 7, noes 48.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For biological investigations, including the relations, habits, geographic distribution, and migrations of animals and plants, and the preparation of maps of the life and crop zones, $10,000.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend line 21 by striking out the word "ten" and inserting the word "twenty."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT].

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, line 21, by striking out the word "ten" and inserting the word "twenty."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT].

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, the $10,000 contained in this paragraph is a cut from the last appropriation bill of $10,000, the last appropriation having carried $20,000 for the purpose specified in the paragraph. I believe that the committee has made this cut under a misapprehension, and I hope the chairman of the committee will accept my amendment.

I will say that the present salary list under this paragraph is now $14,500, or $4,500 more than is proposed in the bill itself. The work that has been done under this paragraph is of great public importance. The maps of life and crop zones are of great benefit to the different States, and the department is being constantly called upon for assistance in that respect.

We also have pending before Congress now a number of bills looking toward the Federal regulation and supervision and care and protection of migratory birds, and the data that is secured under this paragraph is of the greatest importance in the consideration of that question. Believing that the committee acted under a misapprehension, thinking that it was a cut of $10,000 of the whole appropriation for the Biological Survey, I hope the chairman of the committee will accept the amendment.

Mr. LAMB. Mr. Chairman, this work is being done at the Smithsonian Institution, consisting principally of these maps, and we thought that the appropriation could be cut 50 per cent in the interest of economy without any injury to the service. We thought that $10,000 was enough for this work. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. CULLOP). The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Salaries, Division of Accounts and Disbursements: One chief of division and disbursing clerk, who shall be administrative officer of the fiscal affairs of the department, $4,000; 1 assistant chief of division, $2,750; 1 chief of office of accounts and fiscal agent, $2,500; 7 district fiscal agents, at $2,000 each; 1 supervising auditor, $2,250; 1 auditor, $2,000; 1 cashier and chief clerk, $2,000; 1 deputy disbursing clerk, $2,000; 1 accountant and bookkeeper, $2,000; 3 clerks, class 4; 11 clerks, class 3; 18 clerks, class 2; 9 clerks, class 1; 4 clerks, at $1,000 each; 6 clerks, at $900 each; 1 custodian of records and files, $1,400; 1 messenger, $720; 1 messenger or messenger boy, $600; in all, $104,620.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order on page 60, line 11, "$4,000," and in lines 11 and 12, "$2,750," and in lines 23 and 24, "$1,400." It is an increase, Mr. Chairman, of the salaries provided for by law.

Mr. LAMB. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman reserve his point of order, so that I may make a statement?

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order because I do not intend that there shall be an increase of salaries for the chiefs so long as the provisions of this bill carry only $240 a year for such labor as charwomen. I make the point of order.

Mr. LAMB. The point of order is conceded.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained. The Clerk will read.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment——

Mr. LAMB. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to lines 11 and 12, "$3,000," which amount I ask to be changed to "$2,750." First, I move to insert, in line 11, instead of "$4,000," "$3,750."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. LAMB].

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 11 strike out the words "four thousand" and insert the words "three thousand seven hundred and fifty."

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I wish to inquire of the gentleman from Virginia if he will state why the committee recommended $4,000 for this official?

Mr. LAMB. I was going to do that, and ask the gentleman to reserve his point of order in case he had in mind to make one.

Mr. FITZGERALD. There is an amendment pending now, upon which debate is in order.

Mr. LAMB. I will say this, Mr. Chairman, that the entire accounting and disbursing work of the Department of Agriculture is centralized in the Division of Accounts and Disbursements under this official. The work of the division has increased about 300 per cent in the last year. The Agricultural Department is believed to be the only department where the disbursing and accounting work is centralized in one division. In the Department of Justice they a have a disbursing clerk at $2,500 and a Chief of Division of Accounts at $2,500. In the Department of the Interior they have a disbursing clerk at $2,250, who receives $1,000 additional as disbursing clerk for employees in the Capitol, making his salary $3,250.

In addition there is a financial clerk at $2,250 in the Indian Office, a financial clerk at $2,250 in the Patent Office, and a disbuprsing clerk in the Geological Survey at $2,500, all these officers being under the Interior Department.

This man is a most capable, worthy, and indefatigable employee, who renders invaluable service.

Mr. FITZGERALD. There was no estimate for an increase of his compensation.

Mr. LAMB. No; but it was the universal sentiment in the committee on both sides, in view of the services that this man had been rendering, that this recognition should be given him.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Let me call the attention of the gentleman from Virginia to this fact, which perhaps has not been called to his attention before:

As a result of the investigations of the so-called Dockery Commission, made in 1894, a system of accounting was instituted in the Government service. That was one of the most exhaustive investigations ever made, one of the most comprehensive, and as a result of it there was provided a system of accounting and auditing which, if followed, is of immense service to the Government. It contemplated the existence of disbursing offices and that an administrative audit should be made of accounts, not by the disbursing officers, but by the head of the bureau or service which has control over the expenditures of funds. If the so-called administrative audit is made by the man who pays the money, if the voucher upon which it is paid is made in his office, one of the safeguards of the entire system is broken down.

Mr. LAMB. The Treasury Department goes through all that.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I will say a word about the Treasury Department in a moment. Nearly every disbursing officer in the Government wishes also to act as an auditing officer, and he should not.

The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. LAMB] calls attention to the Treasury Department. The disbursing clerk of the Treasury Department in January, 1911, disbursed $1,316,464.22. He issued 10,834 checks and paid 9,471 vouchers. The appropriations out of which these disbursements were made numbered 83.

In 1912 in the month of January he disbursed $2,042,050.54. He issued 11,996 checks and paid 10,581 vouchers. The number of appropriations to which they were chargeable was 449. He made 113 collections of miscellaneous receipts, amounting to $6,808. Now, if the disbursing officers in these departments were confined, as they should be, to the mere work of disbursing money, and the administrative audit were made, as it should be, by the officer under whom the disbursement takes place, there would be a very great difference in the work.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Virginia has expired.

Mr. LAMB. Has my friend from New York finished what he wishes to say?

Mr. FITZGERALD. No. I ask that the time of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. LAMB] be extended five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. LAMB] be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LAMB. I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD].

Mr. FITZGERALD. The disbursing office in the Department of Agriculture costs $114,620, and there are 69 employees. The amount that is disbursed is $21,391,976.

The Auditor for the State and a number of other departments makes the final audit of all the disbursements for the Departments of Agriculture, State, Justice, Commerce and Labor, Congress, Government Printing Office, and other minor branches of the public service, amounting for the last fiscal year to more than $102,000,000; there are employed in the office at this time 82 persons, with salaries amounting to $118,510, and the estimates for next year call for only 80 persons, with total salaries reduced to $116,950.

The salary of the disbursing officer in the Treasury Departmen is $3,000. The total salaries in his office are $15,390. The number of persons employed is 9, and his total disbursements are $17,600,000.

In the Department of Justice the salary of the disbursing officer is $2,750, the total salaries of his office are $15,570, the number of persons employed is 10, and the total disbursements are $5,000,000.

In the Department of Commerce and Labor the salary of the disbursing officer is $3,000. The total salaries of the persons employed in his office are $35,260, the number of persons employed is 25, and the total disbursements, including the Census Office and Lighthouse Service, $14,120,540.

This office in the Department of Agriculture should be a disbursing office. The administrative audit should not be made in the office in which the vouchers, prepared when the administrative audit is made, are presented for payment. It is a great misfortune that this office has so developed and encroached upon service that does not legitimately belong in a disbursing office.

Mr. LAMB. Why has not the gentleman suggested these changes before? Why does he wait to come here when this appropriation is made? He should have suggested that a better system could be devised.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Let me suggest to the gentleman from Virginia that I first examined this bill after it was reported. It was impossible for me to do it earlier, and I am putting into the RECORD these facts where they will be of value, and where they can be used in the future for the purpose of remedying a situation which should be corrected.

Mr. LAMB. It can not be corrected until another year.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I am saying that it can be corrected in the future.

Mr. LAMB. Inasmuch as I admitted the point of order——

Mr. FITZGERALD. I simply wish to place these facts in the RECORD.

Mr. LAMB. I did not finish my remarks, because I was going to admit the point of order. This man disburses $22,000,000 or $23,000,000.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The Auditor for the State and Other Departments audits $102,000,000.

Mr. LAMB. The disbursing clerk of the Isthmian Canal Commission gets $5,000.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The compensation of everybody in the Isthmian Canal Commission is upon a higher plane than in any other department of the Government service.

Mr. LAMB. This man is exceedingly efficient. He is compelled to give a large bond, and has recently added to his other duties the disbursement of the appropriation for the purchase of land for the protection of the watersheds of navigable streams, the Appalachian project, and the appropriation for that amounts to $2,000,000 per annum.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is merely drawing checks to pay for land purchased.

Mr. LAMB. In addition to the above duties this official is the administrative officer of the fiscal affairs of the department. He assists and works on the estimates for the appropriations for Congress and makes the annual fiscal report required to Congress. He handles all other fiscal matters pertaining to that department. Last year the committee allowed this increase that we allowed this year, but it went out on a point of order, as this one is going out on a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. LAMB].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LAMB. In lines 11 and 12, I move to insert "$2,500."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 60, lines 11 and 12, after the word "division," in line 11, insert the words "two thousand five hundred dollars."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LAMB. In lines 23 and 24 I move to insert "$1,200."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 60, lines 23 and 24, after the word "files," in line 23, insert the words "one thousand two hundred dollars."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, for the purpose of making an inquiry. I notice in the current law, under this paragraph where there are several fiscal agents, it authorizes their detail in or out of the city of Washington in the Forest Service. That is omitted in this bill. In the opinion of the committee, is that not required? Can they still be detailed in the Forest Service outside of the city of Washington?

Mr. LAMB. That is the construction that we put upon it. That is what we suppose.

Mr. MANN. For instance, on page 60, line 14, there are seven district fiscal agents, at $2,000 each. Under the law as it now reads there is provision for their detail to the Forest Service, in or out of the city of Washington. Without such provision, is it the opinion of the committee that they can still be so detailed?

Mr. LAMB. I think they can be detailed anywhere.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

General expenses, Division of Accounts and Disbursements: For the temporary employment of assistants and labor in the city of Washington and elsewhere, official traveling expenses, office fixtures, furniture, supplies, adding machines, telegraph and telephone service, freight and express charges, and all other expenses, $10,000: Provided, That hereafter employees of the Division of Accounts and Disbursements may be detailed by the Secretary of Agriculture for accounting and disbursing work in any of the bureaus and offices of the department for duty in or out of the city of Washington, and employees of the bureaus and offices of the department may also be detailed to the Division of Accounts and Disbursements for duty in or out of the city of Washington, traveling expenses of employees so detailed to be paid from the appropriation of the bureau or office in connection with which such travel is performed.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, on that paragraph I reserve the point of order. This is a new item.

Mr. LAMB. Mr. Chairman, this apparently involves an increase of $10,000, but in reality it is merely a transfer of this amount from the contingent fund department, which has been reduced accordingly. Heretofore all supplies, office fixtures, typewriters, adding machines, and miscellaneous materials for the use of this division have been purchased from the contingent fund. This practice originated a number of years ago when the division was very small, but it is now believed to be in the interest of good administration to have a special appropriation for that purpose. A provision similar to that enacted last year in regard to the detail of library clerks in the department has also been added to the detail of clerks to and from the division for accounting and disbursing work. As all fiscal reports and financial statements desired by Congress are prepared in this division, it is absolutely necessary that such temporary details be made from time to time, and such details can not be made unless specific authority is given by Congress. It will also permit the elimination of the general language in the statutory roll of the division relative to details to the Forest Service, and will enable the division to assist other bureaus and officers as well as the Forest Service when necessary for accounting and disbursing work. In auditing and paying the accounts of the departments, the Division of Accounts and Disbursements must necessarily cooperate with and do work for all its bureaus and officers, and this change is in the interest of good administration.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, this is a reversal of what Congress has for years been attempting to do, and that is to consolidate the contingent funds of the various bureaus of the different departments of the Government. It was disclosed some years ago that in the Navy Department, with various bureaus having separate contingent funds, the head of one bureau in one room purchased a globe of the world, costing $300. They needed one temporarily in the room next to him, and because these expenditures were made by these bureaus out of separate funds it was not known that such a globe was in the department, and they purchased another one, when the one in this other room would have done very well for those needing it in the adjacent room. Here is a Division of Accounts, and the disbursing officer is asking that he may have a contingent fund of $10,000. The entire expense of his division is $114,000. This Department of Agriculture, with this $10,000 and the $96,000 additional given farther on, has a larger contingent fund than any other department of the Government, with the exception of the Interior Department. That department, with its great ramifications and many services of every character, has a contingent fund that does not exceed $122,000. If this new fund be started, instead of tending toward economy and efficiency, it will tend very largely to looseness in administration and expenditure. This chief of division should have purchased for him whatever is required that properly would be chargeable to the contingent fund out of the contingent fund of the Department of Agriculture, and it would be a good thing if every bureau chief, or every chief of a division, were required to have the purchases made out of one central fund, so that some one in the department would know just what was being expended. This new language is intended and will result in accentuating the conditions to which I have called attention. This disbursing office should be conducted as a disbursing office, and it should in the end make administrative audit of every account which is to be paid. Otherwise there will be the anomaly in the Department of Agriculture, which does not exist in any other place in the Government, of the man who is to pay the voucher preparing the voucher to be paid in his own office, and, as a matter of fact, it should be prepared by the man responsible for the conduct of the service for which the appropriation is made available, paid by the accounting or disbursing officer when presented, providing the appropriation is not exhausted and it is shown that it is available for the purpose for which made. I know of an instance in which the head of a bureau required a meat chopper, which would have cost 85 cents, for the purpose of grinding rubber into a pulp for the purpose of certain investigations, and he made a requisition, prepared the voucher, and sent it to the disbursing officer of his department in order to have it paid. This disbursing officer, assuming that he had an obligation to make audit of these matters before he honored their requisition, sent an inspector to investigate and ascertain the need of this meat chopper by this bureau, when it was not at all within the scope of the functions of a disbursing office.

Mr. Chairman, I shall insist upon the point of order. It is legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York make the point of order to the entire paragraph?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained, and the Clerk will read.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I ask permission to have the total changed to correspond.

The CHAIRMAN. There is a general order to that effect.

The Clerk read as follows:

Total for Division of Accounts and Disbursements, $114,620.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to make an exhibit and represent the United States at the seventh annual session of the International Dry Farming Congress to be held at Lethbridge, Alberta, Canada, October 12–26, 1912, $10,000.

Mr. LAMB. Mr. Chairman, on that I make the point of order.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman reserve his point of order?

Mr. LAMB. Certainly.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I offer this amendment because I believe that our Government and our people owe it not only to the good cause to be served, but to our neighbors, the Canadians, to have an exhibit and to have the Government represented at the dry farming congress to be held next fall at Lethbridge. The six sessions of the dry farming congress heretofore have all been held within continental United States. The work of the congress is a most useful and important one. It teaches and encourages scientific agriculture. The name is something of a misnomer, but it is used because it has been found possible, in the first instance, to most interest those who are meeting the semiarid conditions on the western plains and who call themselves dry famers, but the scientific methods of deep plowing, thorough cultivation, and moisture and fertility conservation are methods that would prove of very great value if used elsewhere in agriculture. These methods are peculiarly adapted to the restoration of worn-out soils. They will be of especial benefit in the restoration of the abandoned farms of the East. They will be found highly useful in bringing to a condition of fertility the worn-out soils of many parts of the country. So, while the work was inaugurated in the West to meet a condition found in the semiarid West, it is of a character which will be and has already been of very great value to American farmers in all parts of the country. At all of the sessions of the Congress heretofore held the Dominion of Canada has been represented by officials and by exhibits. The last session was held at Colorado Springs last fall. The Canadian Government made one of the finest exhibits made there. Several high officials of the Canadian Government, interested in agricultural development, were present at the meeting. This appropriation simply proposes that we shall return the compliment that the Canadians have paid us by their presence at our meetings and in the exhibits they have made at former congresses. It will also show our continued interest in this far-reaching and highly important work. I hope that the committee will accept the amendment.

Mr. LAMB. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a ruling on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

DIVISION OF PUBLICATIONS.

Salaries, Division of Publications: One editor, who shall be chief of division, $3,250; 1 editor, who shall be assistant chief of division, $2,250; 1 chief clerk, $2,000; 2 assistant editors, at $2,000 each; 1 assistant editor, $1,800; 4 assistant editors, at $1,600 each; 1 assistant editor, $1,400; 1 assistant editor in charge of indexing, $2,000; 1 indexer, $1,400; 1 assistant in charge of illustrations, $2,000; 1 draftsman or photographer, $1,500; 2 draftsmen or photographers, at $1,400 each; 6 draftsmen or photographers, at $1,200 each; 1 assistant photographer, $900; 1 assistant in charge of document section, $2,000; 1 assistant in document section, $1,600; 1 foreman, miscellaneous distribution, $1,500; 1 assistant foreman, miscellaneous distribution, $1,100; 1 foreman, Farmers' Bulletin distribution, $1,200; 1 forewoman, $1,400; 1 forewoman, $1,200; 1 clerk, class 2; 6 clerks, class 1; 14 clerks, at $1,000 each; 37 clerks, at $900 each; 25 clerks, at $840 each; 10 skilled laborers, at $840 each; 13 skilled laborers, at $780 each; 27 skilled laborers, at $720 each; 1 chief folder, $1,000; 5 folders, at $900 each; 2 skilled laborers, at $1,000 each; 2 messengers, at $840 each; 4 messengers, at $720 each; 3 messengers, at $600 each; 2 messengers or messenger boys, at $480 each; 2 messengers or messenger boys, at $420 each; 2 messengers or messenger boys, at $360 each; 2 laborers, at $660 each; one laborer, $600; 4 charwomen, at $480 each; 3 charwomen, at $240 each; in all, $184,720.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 62, line 25, strike out the word "ten" and insert in lieu thereof the word "twenty."

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, in offering this amendment I am in hopes that the chairman of the committee and the committee itself will acquiesce in it. I understand and am reliably informed that in the Bureau of Distribution of Farmers' Bulletins there are now so many bulletins that are going out to the farmers of the country and the people generally that it is impossible for that department to get them out quickly and efficiently. In other words, I am informed that when you send your request it sometimes takes a week or more before the farmers and the people who desire the bulletins get them. There is no good reason why that condition should exist. We should not, in order to save the paltry sum of $8,400, which this amendment carries, defeat it and permit this inexcusable condition to continue to the detriment of efficiency in this particular service; but on the contrary, this amendment should be adopted, thereby contributing to the people who desire these bulletins throughout the United States prompt and efficient service.

I believe in economy, but never at the expense of efficiency in any of the various bureaus of this great Agricultural Department, a department that, with the exception of the Post Office Department, benefits more people materially and distributes greater good to all the people than any other department of the Federal Government.

I take it that when we send out our lists of bulletins to the people in our districts and they write back what bulletins they desire they have a right to get them promptly. I take it that there is no member of this committee who will controvert that proposition. I understand that an addition of 10 skilled laborers will make an efficient service there.

Mr. Chairman, as it stands we are up against this proposition: In my district—and I suppose other Members do the same thing; in fact, I know they do—I send every voter a list that this bureau gets out of the bulletins that are published by the department and request that they indicate those bulletins which they desire. The requests come in and we send them to the department. That is a procedure which has grown popular, you will understand, and is bound to grow more popular. When the farmer or the man who requests the bulletins does not get them as quickly as he should—and every man is entitled from the public service a quick and prompt response—they write to their Congressman and want to know the reasons why they have not received the bulletins they requested. This causes, necessarily, the Congressman to write this particular correspondent; it causes him, in addition to that, to write to the department in order to ascertain whether the bulletins have been sent out or what is the reason for the delay. Necessarily, it causes the employees in that particular bureau or department to make an investigation of that particular matter and report on it, and that causes the department to use a stenographer or clerk to answer the correspondence of the Congressman. Consequently, I think it takes up as much time and causes as much expense in the department in answering the correspondence of the Congressman in making legitimate excuses in the premises as it would to put on these extra employees. I trust the chairman of the committee will accede to this amendment.

Mr. LEVER. Let me ask the gentleman if he has any report from the chief of the division as to the necessity for these clerks?

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. I will say to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER] that this matter came up by reason of several correspondents in my district wanting to know why they had not received the bulletins which they had requested. I called up the bureau, and I was informed that they did not have sufficient laborers there to do the work, and that they were in need of more of them. And I told them to furnish me the facts and I would offer this amendment. Here is a letter that I received from the editor and chief of the bureau in response to that request, that I will read to the committee:

MARCH 1, 1912.

Hon. B. P. HARRISON,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. HARRISON: In compliance with your request, I take pleasure in inclosing herewith a brief statement showing the necessity for additional skilled laborers to enable this division to promptly fill congressional orders for the mailing of farmers' bulletins. The use of the lists of these bulletins by Senators, Representatives, and Delegates, which just recently became very popular, and justly so, has resulted in an enormous increase of work for which the division was unprepared and which was not anticipated when the estimates were made or even when the bill was reported by the committee. Only about 40 employees are at present available for this work, and it is absolutely necessary that additional assistants be procured in order to avoid delay in the filling of congressional orders. As this method of distribution is likely to continue, some permanent provision should be made for increasing the force.

* * * * * * *

JOS. A. ARNOLD, Editor and Chief.

[The time of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] having expired, by unanimous consent he was granted two minutes additional.]

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. But, Mr. Chairman, I want to say that the committee in charge of this bill is not responsible for this condition at all, because this is a condition that arose after the committee had its hearings on this bill.

And I might advance, in this connection, Mr. Chairman, as a further argument in behalf of this additional help, that we must take into consideration the fact that there is to be an increase of 30 or more in the membership of this House on the 4th of March next, and you will have to provide for the increase, because evidently the more Congressmen there are the more bulletins will be sent out.

Mr. HAUGEN. Is it not a fact that many of these employees are working an hour overtime every day?

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. I think that is true, but I have no direct information on that point.

Mr. HAUGEN. I will ask the gentleman if he does not think that five additional will be sufficient? Have you investigated as to that?

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. I have investigated, and the editor and chief, Mr. Arnold, informs me that 10 will be necessary.

Mr. FITZGERALD. How many publications are handled in the Division of Publications?

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. There were handled last year 27,000,000 copies of these bulletins.

Mr. FITZGERALD. And how many employees have they?

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. They have 40 employees now performing that particular function.

Mr. FITZGERALD. They add 50 laborers in this bill.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. No, sir; it does not add 50 at all. These 40 include clerks and stenographers and different employees for indexing and gathering them, and all that. These 10 that I provide for by my amendment will only collect the bulletins, put them together, and other men in that department will send them out.

Mr. FITZGERALD. There are 50 new places, are there not?

Mr. CANDLER. No, sir.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Is there not a considerable increase in this bill in the Division of Publications?

Mr. LAMB. No, sir. Those are not estimated for. They ought to have known the condition at that time.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not think that 40 people can be greatly overworked at that rate.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. They handled 27,000,000 bulletins last year.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That would make 2,000 bulletins for each working day of the year—if each one did an equal amount of work.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. I will say to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] that I do not think that is exactly a fair statement, because all the employees in this department do not handle these bulletins. There are many clerks and stenographers there that are performing different functions than those performed by these laborers.

Mr. FITZGERALD. There are more than 40 employees in the Division of Publications, because there are 50 laborers mentioned right here in these five lines. And it seems to me from the figures given that they have a force sufficient, and that there will not be a very great burden on these employees.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] yield for a question?

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. Yes, sir.

Mr. MANN. Has the gentleman figured out whether there is an increase or decrease of the number of employees that can be utilized for this purpose in this bill from the existing law?

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. I would say to the gentleman that in this bill, line 24, page 62, there are carried 25 clerks at $840 each. The last bill carried in that item 35 clerks.

Mr. MANN. In the item just before that in this bill there were 27 clerks, while in the last bill there were only 11. This was an increase in salary of a number——

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. In line 2, page 63, in this bill, the item carries 27 skilled laborers, and the last bill carried 50.

Mr. MANN. Yes; but that is the distinction. The last bill included skilled laborers and clerks under one item, and this bill changes it and makes in that place 20 skilled laborers, and transfers clerks who receive $720 each to the item of "27 clerks at $900 each." What I want to know is whether the gentleman has computed whether the total number of employees which can be utilized for this purpose was a decrease or increase from the existing law?

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. I would say to the gentleman, in figuring up this matter I find that there is an increased appropriation over the last appropriation bill of $25,400, and a decrease from the last appropriation bill in these particular items of $27,640, showing practically $2,000 of saving in this bill over the last bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] has expired.

Mr. LAMB. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have three minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LAMB. I wish to say that those to which the gentleman refers are promotions.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman realizes that where the bill covered before 50 skilled laborers that those clerks are used in the distribution of farmers' bulletins, the same as the skilled laborers are, and that the committee has segregated those two branches of the service and put them under the head of "clerks" in one place and "skilled laborers" in the other. Is there any increase or decrease in this bill of skilled laborers? It looks to me like an increase.

Mr. LAMB. Mr. Chairman, these changes were made by the committee in pursuance of their policy to increase the salaries of all low-grade positions. In addition, with the above arrangement of salaries, the titles of all employees on the roll designated as "clerks" or "skilled laborers," have been changed to either "clerks" or "skilled laborers" in order to more nearly make their titles agree to the duties performed. Under the arrangement no clerk will be paid a salary less than $840, the lower salaries being paid to laborers, and so forth.

It is very likely that if this statement, now made by the gentleman here to-day, had been made before the committee, notwithstanding we had the "economy cap" on all the time, we would have given five or six clerks more for this work. The strongest argument made by the gentleman is that this House is to be increased in its Members—some 34?

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. Yes.

Mr. LAMB. And of course that will entail considerable extra work in this Division of Publications, which has the hardest work and the fewest people and lowest-paid people at this time.

Mr. CANDLER. This situation is in the nature of an emergency, because it did not exist to the extent that it exists now at the time when the committee considered this proposition. There is not an addition of a single, solitary man, so far as numbers are concerned, in this bill over what there were in the previous bill. There is some promotion in reference to some of the employees, which, of course, involves some increases of salary, but the condition that exists at this time with reference to this matter, as is clearly shown in the remarks and statement of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], who recently addressed the House, makes it necessary, in order to secure prompt service, that these skilled laborers as a matter of necessity should go in the bill. I have no doubt they would have gone into the bill if the need for them had been known when the bill was prepared, and I hope the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] if I understood him aright to say that the average number of bulletins sent out is 2,000 each day by the 40 clerks? Did the gentleman mean to convey the idea that each clerk sends out 2,000 a day?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Two thousand a day was the statement made.

Mr. HAUGEN. By each clerk? In that case it would be 80,000 altogether in a day.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I understood the statement made to me was 2,000 a day.

Mr. HAUGEN. By each of the 40 clerks?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. HAUGEN. My computation is 2,000 bulletins for each clerk. That seems to be a considerable number.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Not for bulletins.

Mr. HAUGEN. An average of 2,000 bulletins a day for each clerk is a considerable number.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not consider that would be many in my office. If the employees in my office could not send out 2,000 a day, I would have somebody else do the work.

Mr. LEVER. I myself used to address these seed blanks and document slips; I used to be a clerk to a Member; and if I could send out 2,000 of them a day, without folding or pasting, I considered that a pretty good average day's work.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, we have labor-saving machinery and devices and different matters now that gentlemen do not think about and perhaps have not had called to their attention. There are machines that fold, close, and address documents and prepare them for mailing. That would apply to a large part of these bulletins.

Mr. MANN. There are no machines that paste the labels on these envelopes, so far as I know; are there?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I understand there are.

Mr. MANN. Are there any machines that paste the labels on the envelopes?

Mr. FITZGERALD. There are machines that print the labels on the envelopes, and paste the labels, if necessary.

Mr. MANN. Has the Government provided such machinery?

Mr. LEVER. Not yet.

Mr. MANN. I never saw such a machine. I would like to see one myself.

Mr. LAMB. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a vote.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. RAINEY). The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON].

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I move an amendment, to strike out the word "five," in line 4 of page 63, and insert the word "four," and to strike out the word "two," in line 5, and insert the word "three."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD].

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 63, line 4, strike out the word "five" and insert in lieu thereof the word "four," and on page 63, line 5, strike out the word "two" and insert in lieu thereof the word "three."

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, the Chief of the Publications Division calls attention in the hearings to the need of an increase in the salaries of the employees of this class. One of the persons now on the roll as a folder delivers the blank franks to the Members of the House and takes them when addressed from the Members' offices to the Division of Publications. That is part of his work. A very little of his time is given as a folder. He is doing the same kind of work and work of the same character that the other skilled laborers do who are mentioned in line 6. He is a man of a very large family, and it seems to me that, inasmuch as he is doing the work that the other skilled laborers are doing, he ought to have the same salary. The amendment simply makes a change of $100.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. BORLAND). The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD].

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message, in writing, from the President of the United States was communicated to the House of Representatives by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries, who also informed the House of Representatives that the President had approved and signed bills of the following titles:

On March 4, 1912:

H. R. 18794. An act to authorize the Secretary of the Interior, the Secretary of the Treasury, and the Attorney General to deliver to the governor of the State of New Mexico, for the use of the State, certain furniture and furnishings, law books, and typewriters.

On March 11, 1912:

H. R. 13570. An act to amend an act entitled "An act granting to certain employees of the United States the right to receive from it compensation for injuries sustained in the course of their employment," approved May 30, 1908.

AGRICULTURE APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Contingent expenses, Department of Agriculture: For stationery, blank books, twine, paper, gum, dry goods, soap, brushes, brooms, mats, oils, paints, glass, lumber, hardware, ice, fuel, water and gas pipes, heating apparatus, furniture, carpets, and matting; for lights, freight, express charges, advertising, telegraphing, telephoning, postage, washing towels, and necessary repairs and improvements to buildings, grounds, and heating apparatus; for the purchase, subsistence, and care of horses and the purchase and repair of harness and vehicles, for official purposes only; for the payment of duties on imported articles, and the Department of Agriculture's proportionate share of the expense of the dispatch agent in New York; for official traveling expenses; and for other miscellaneous supplies and expenses not otherwise provided for, and necessary for the practical and efficient work of the department, $96,066: Provided, That hereafter the Secretary of Agriculture may purchase stationery, supplies, furniture, and miscellaneous materials from this appropriation and transfer the same at actual cost to the various bureaus, divisions, and offices of the Department of Agriculture in the city of Washington, reimbursement therefor to be made to this appropriation by said bureaus, divisions, and offices from their lump-fund appropriations by transfer settlements through the Treasury Department: Provided further, That the Secretary of Agriculture may hereafter exchange typewriters and computing, addressing, and duplicating machines purchased from any lump-fund appropriation of the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the language on page 67, line 22, beginning with the word "provided" and down to and including the word "department," in line 5 of page 68.

Mr. LAMB. Mr. Chairman, I concede the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I will say to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. LAMB] that the reason I insist on the point of order is this: A similar request was made by two departments of the Government at the last session of Congress, and the Comptroller of the Treasury looked into the matter very carefully and said it would absolutely destroy the efficiency of the audit of these appropriations. I read that opinion very carefully at the time, and in view of that statement of the comptroller and his familiarity with the accounting system, we deemed it wise not to have that provision incorporated in any of these bills.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. LAMB. Mr. Chairman, I move, on page 67, line 21, to strike out the word "ninety-six" and insert the words "one hundred and six."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. LAMB].

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 21, page 67, strike out the word "ninety-six" and insert the words "one hundred and six."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

In all, $95,329.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, for the purpose of asking a question.

Mr. FOWLER. I reserve a point of order against that paragraph, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. LAMB. It is not subject to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois will state his point of order.

Mr. FOWLER. I reserve the point of order against the language on page 68, after "rent in the District of Columbia;" all the remainder of that page.

Mr. LEVER. I make the point of order, Mr. Chairman, that that point of order comes too late. Each one of these items is a separate paragraph, and the point of order of the gentleman made as to those above is entirely too late.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, it is not a paragraph, because of the fact that each one of them depends upon the other. The punctuation is not such as to show that they are distinct paragraphs.

Mr. LEVER. As to that point, Mr. Chairman, I would say that the same punctuation to which the gentleman refers runs through the entire bill. Evidently the Chair can not hold otherwise than that each of these items is a separate item and paragraph in itself.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that is the ruling.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER] permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. LEVER. Yes.

Mr. FOWLER. I do not understand the ruling of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that the ruling has been that each one of these items constitutes a separate paragraph. The gentleman must make his point of order against the one which has just been read by the Clerk, otherwise it would not apply.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the gentleman from South Carolina if it is not the law that——

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order on the last paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to know why the chairman of the committee segregated these items, and what was the object of this segregation?

Mr. LAMB. It was for convenience in putting these rents on different pages and accounting for these rents for each bureau separately.

Mr. FOWLER. Does the gentleman think that a distinct appropriation for each one of the bureaus is more satisfactory than to have a lump sum covering them all?

Mr. LAMB. That is the reason we did it.

Mr. FOWLER. And that it will prevent extravagance and uncertainty about the means of carrying on each bureau of the department? If that is the object of this segregation I withdraw my point of order.

Mr. HAWLEY. The House has frequently demanded this information.

Mr. HAY. I reserve the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the gentleman's point of order?

Mr. HAY. The point of order is that under the law of March, 1877, the appropriation must specifically state what buildings are to be paid for out of the appropriation.

Mr. LEVER. I make the point that the gentleman's point of order comes too late, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Oh, no. The gentleman made it as soon as he could after the other point was withdrawn.

Mr. HAY. I am not making a point of order; I am simply reserving it. I want to call attention to the fact that that is the law, and that in all these appropriation bills it should be specifically stated what building is leased and how much is paid for each building.

Mr. LAMB. I know the gentleman understands something of the situation. He does not mean, does he, that the law requires that each one of these particular buildings used for all these different departments shall be described in the bill?

Mr. HAY. Undoubtedly, as they were described in the Army bill.

Mr. LAMB. There is no telling how many houses they do rent for all these departments. I undertook to go through all of them once. Many of them were built for private houses. There may be a hundred of them.

Mr. HAY. It took two pages of the Army bill to describe the buildings rented under the War Department for the use of the Army.

Mr. LAMB. Has that been going on all the time?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I understand that the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. LAMB] for the first time in this bill has segregated the rent items in the District of Columbia.

Mr. LAMB. Yes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. And provided for them specifically?

Mr. LAMB. Yes. We thought it was in the interest of economy to do that.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think the gentleman has done wisely, and he has so framed the other provisions of this bill as to make it impossible to expend any larger appropriations for rent in the District of Columbia.

Mr. LAMB. That was the idea.

Mr. FITZGERALD. There is one paragraph here that I desire to inquire about, if the gentleman will permit me. On page 69, in lines 4 and 5, there is provision just read:

For additional rent, in cases of emergency, for any bureau, division, or office of the department, $10,000.

Mr. LAMB. Yes. We discussed that.

Mr. FITZGERALD. There is nothing in contemplation at the present time for that. Why should the Department of Agriculture have a fund available in case it desires to increase its space during the year any more than any other department of the Government?

Mr. LAMB. It was to provide for emergencies.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The department is spending, in the city of Washington, for rent $85,329.

Mr. LAMB. Yes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. And that is for accommodations in addition to the building that was authorized within seven or eight years, which cost $1,500,000. It seems to me that if, in addition to the building recently constructed, this department has $85,000 for rent in the District of Columbia we can well withhold from it an appropriation of $10,000 to be used in case somebody determines that it would be desirable to increase the available space.

Mr. HAY. I call the attention of the gentleman to the law, which is the act of March 3, 1877.

And hereafter no contract shall be made for the rent of any building or part of any building to be used for the purposes of the Government in the District of Columbia until an appropriation therefor shall have been made in terms by Congress, and that this clause be regarded as notice to all contractors and lessors of any such building or part of such building.

Mr. LAMB. We did not have that law before us.

Mr. HAY. I withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is withdrawn.

Mr. MADDEN. It is only two or three years since we completed two great buildings for the Department of Agriculture, at a cost of several million dollars. I think it was well understood at the time these buildings were under way that they would supply all the space needed by the Agricultural Department and that no further necessity would exist for the payment of rent for any outside buildings. I would like to ask the chairman of this committee whether he has investigated the necessity for the use of buildings outside of those that were specially constructed for the Agricultural Department and whether his committee does not believe that those buildings are adequate to all the needs of the service?

Mr. LAMB. Does the gentleman think 12,000 people can work in those buildings?

Mr. MADDEN. The buildings which are supposed to be rented are not owned by the Government. The buildings which are owned by the Government were constructed at a cost of several million dollars, with the purpose of furnishing all the space that might be needed for the proper conduct of the service. Now, I notice that the committee come in here with a recommendation for the expenditure of $85,000 per annum for rent over and above the space which should be adequate in these new buildings, and I want to know from the chairman of the committee whether he can give the Committee of the Whole any information to show any justification for the recommendation of the Committee on Agriculture, and whether the committee understands that the new buildings erected are inadequate, and whether all this outside space is needed for the proper conduct of the business of the department?

Mr. LAMB. We have not been around to inspect every one of these houses that they rent, although we have seen many of them. We must take their statement, which is to the effect that they must have this space in which to do their work. We are bound to trust them and must assume that they know what they are doing. If you go down now into some of these outside buildings that they rent, you will find a very crowded condition and more people working than you would like to have working with you in a room.

Mr. MADDEN. Did the committee make any sort of an investigation to ascertain the adequacy of the buildings which are owned by the Government in the District of Columbia for use by the Agriculture Department?

Mr. LAMB. We have been to them, just as the gentleman has.

Mr. MADDEN. I have not been through them at all. I am asking the gentleman in charge of the bill for information.

Mr. LAMB. I spent a month in going through them. I went through all the public buildings and all the small buildings and saw the clerks and the apparatus with which they do their experimental work. Some of the buildings are not only very crowded, but in great danger of fire.

Mr. MADDEN. It is the judgment of the gentleman from Virginia, then, that the recommendation made by the committee of this expenditure of $85,000 per annum for rent is a reasonably justified recommendation?

Mr. LAMB. It is.

Mr. HAUGEN. I should like to say to the gentleman from Illinois that the question of public buildings does not come under the jurisdiction of the Committee on Agriculture. The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds has jurisdiction over that matter. I think the gentleman is also aware of the fact that the building of which he is now speaking has not been completed, and that only the two wings have been completed.

Mr. MADDEN. The buildings that are up are completed.

Mr. HAUGEN. Part of the buildings are up.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The law provided that a building should be constructed and completed within the authorization, and it is a notorious fact that the then President of the United States arranged to have the building constructed in the manner in which it is, and that he sent his representative before a committee of the House to contend that the law had been complied with by building two wings, leaving a space between them, with the intention of filling it in at some other time, despite the intent of Congress.

Mr. AUSTIN. What President of the United States did that?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I have no doubt that if he should ever again become President of the United States he would conduct himself in the same lawless manner.

Mr. HAUGEN. As stated to the gentleman from New York, the building is complete as far as it has gone. The two wings are completed, but the building is not completed as contemplated by some, as stated by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD]. I suppose at some later date the space referred to will probably be filled in.

Anyone who has investigated this matter, I think, will agree with me that all of the employees of the department—and that applies to every other department of this Government—should be housed under one roof.

Mr. BUTLER. Does the gentleman recall when the appropriation for this building was made?

Mr. HAUGEN. I do.

Mr. BUTLER. Will not the gentleman agree with me that that is not the building that Congress contemplated should be erected—a building of two wings?

Mr. HAUGEN. I do not know what Congress contemplated. I know the building was constructed according to plans and specifications.

Mr. BUTLER. But there are two buildings.

Mr. HAUGEN. It was built according to my understanding. I do not know what the gentleman's understanding was.

Mr. BUTLER. Did the gentleman understand at the time that the appropriation was made—I recall it quite distinctly—that they were to put up two wings and leave out the center part of the building?

Mr. HAUGEN. My recollection is that Congress made a certain appropriation. I am not sure about the amount. I think the first appropriation was about a million and a half dollars for a building, and a building was erected and went as far as the money would permit.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The law provided that the building should be completed for that sum.

Mr. HAUGEN. It is complete in itself. It may not be according to plans and specifications such as the gentleman might have had in mind.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It was in accordance with the plans and specifications, but it was not in accordance with the law.

Mr. BUTLER. The gentleman would not say that the building is complete.

Mr. HAUGEN. It is complete as far as it goes. We have two buildings instead of one.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Iowa yield?

Mr. HAUGEN. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. Did the appropriation and authorization for that building come from the Committee on Agriculture in the first instance?

Mr. HAUGEN. It came through the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds; that is my recollection.

Mr. MANN. My recollection is that it came from the Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. BUTLER. They procured it, I think.

Mr. HAUGEN. It was authorized, I believe, by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and properly so. The Committee on Agriculture has no jurisdiction over the construction of buildings.

Mr. MANN. It might be properly so, if that is the case. The question is whether that is the case.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think that is the case. My recollection is not very clear, but it is that that building was authorized by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman may be correct. I have an impression in my mind that it came from the Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. HAUGEN. And inasmuch as this committee had no jurisdiction over the buildings, over the building of a public building, I rose more for the purpose of calling to the attention of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds the need of a new building to meet the needs of that department, in order that the employees of that department may be housed under one roof, and that we may do away with some of this duplication of work, with a great number of messengers and libraries and various other expenses that might be saved. I rose more for that purpose than any other.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out lines 4 and 5, page 69.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is advised that we have passed those lines.

Mr. LAMB. Why would the gentleman do that?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is advised that the reading is now on lines 6 and 7.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not understand that there is any objection.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, I object to returning to that.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I wish the gentleman would listen to what I desire to say.

Mr. HAWLEY. I will reserve the objection.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is the appropriation of money to be used as an emergency rent fund. No other department of the Government has any such fund. We are spending nearly $600,000 for rent in the city of Washington. We ought not to encourage by appropriations of this kind the renting of space unless it is absolutely necessary.

Mr. LAMB. If it had not been necessary we would not have done it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is not necessary.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from New York will remember that, for the first time, there is carried a specific appropriation for rent in the District of Columbia; that heretofore the item covering rent in the District of Columbia has been included in lump-sum appropriations, so that the exact amount for rent was not fixed by the appropriation act. I think the committee has done wisely in segregating the rent items from the ordinary lump-sum appropriation items, and providing specifically for rent, but in order to do that the committee has provided an emergency fund, very properly, it seems to me.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Illinois surely does not think that is necessary. In the first place, in making these specific appropriations, $4,680 more is appropriated for the next fiscal year than is being paid for rent during the present fiscal year.

Mr. LAMB. Because rent has gone up like everything else.

Mr. FITZGERALD. They are making provision for additional appropriation, and then in addition they desire to have $10,000, so that if somebody determines he wishes more room than has been authorized by Congress he would have an appropriation equivalent to about 12 per cent of the entire appropriation for rent with which to get additional room. In addition to that, they are using buildings which cost, exclusive of the site, $1,500,000. It seems to me that if this department is given $85,000 for rent, $4,680 more than they are using this year, in addition to the buildings they are occupying, that is all that Congress should reasonably be asked to appropriate.

This department is expending about 12 per cent of the entire expenditures for rent in the District of Columbia. I think it is about time we should attempt to stop the expenditure of nearly $600,000 a year for rent in the District. It seems a very good thing to own property here and rent it to the Government.

Mr. LAMB. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me it will appeal to every man's common sense that in a department as large as this you must, when they are renting as many houses as they do rent, have an emergency fund to meet any unforeseen contingencies which might arise, such, for instance, as the burning up of some of these houses, and many other contingencies that will appear to thoughtful men.

Mr. FITZGERALD. But if the houses burn, they would have the money available for the rent of those houses with which to rent others, because the obligation to pay would cease as soon as the house was sufficiently destroyed so as to become uninhabitable.

Mr. LAMB. One can very well imagine any number of emergencies that might arise where you rent as many houses as these people do and furnish room for 12,000 people to work in. It is a big job. An emergency fund of $10,000 is a small emergency fund in view of the fact that they have to rent so many houses, and if it is not expended it will be turned back into the Treasury.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is no excuse for making appropriations.

Mr. BEALL of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. BEALL of Texas. I would like to have the benefit of the gentleman's experience in matters of this kind heretofore. Has he ever known of an instance where this sort of an appropriation was made when it was not used during the year?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I could not say that, because there has never been such an appropriation made for any department of the Government to my knowledge, and I am somewhat familiar with appropriations for rents. I have gone through some of the rented buildings in the District of Columbia. I have been through storage warehouses, so-called fireproof buildings, claimed to be necessary for the Government service, where useless and obsolete public documents were thrown carelessly on the ground, occupying space for which the Government is paying excessive prices. I think if we give to the Department of Agriculture $4,680 more for rent for the next year than it is expending this year, we are doing all that it can reasonably require. If we were to grant the requests of all of the departments for rents we would add $60,000 or $70,000 additional to the almost $600,000 now being expended.

Mr. BUTLER. Is the gentleman able to recall at this time the amount that we pay in the District of Columbia at the present time for rent?

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is between $560,000 and $600,000 a year.

Mr. BEALL of Texas. Does not the gentleman think this is just an invitation to them to expend $4,680 more than is necessary?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think it is unnecessary, and I think it is bad legislation.

Mr. MANN. Is it the intention of the gentleman's committee this year in reporting the sundry civil bill to segregate the items of rent in the District of Columbia from the lump-sum appropriation carried in the bill as ordinarily provided——

Mr. FITZGERALD. My recollection is——

Mr. MANN (continuing). So that we can ascertain what the rental really is?

Mr. FITZGERALD. So far as I know, we named the rent. The gentleman can find out the rent for any public building by taking the statement in the Book of Estimates, where it is all set forth in detail.

Mr. MANN. But that is another proposition. The gentleman's bill, unless he changes it, will carry an item under the Geological Survey, a portion of which is to be expended for rent. There will be no information to the House as to the amount expended for rent and no limitation on the amount which may be expended.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think the gentleman is mistaken. My recollection of the bill is that it provides specifically for rent for the various bureaus, and, without having looked at the sundry civil bill, my recollection is freshened somewhat by the fact that for several months some of the departments have been pressing me to recommend legislation which would enable them to obtain additional quarters and to obtain additional property for rent. I examined into one of the proposals, and I found out that, although on several occasions the Government has been able to make arrangements by which rental has been fixed at 5 per cent of the cost of the property, these propositions would involve an expenditure running up to between 10 and 11 per cent net return to the owners.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield on that? Is it not a fact that in the last Congress we inserted an item in one of the appropriation bills requiring the department to estimate separately for rent in the District of Columbia, and that that was the only time they have ever been estimated for separately?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not recall. We may have done so?

Mr. HAY. It is the law anyway—the law of March 3, 1877.

Mr. MANN. It has never been done.

Mr. HAY. It may not have been executed.

Mr. MANN. I do not think it is the law.

Mr. HAY. I just read it a minute ago.

Mr. MANN. I am not going to dispute what the gentleman said, of course. I do not think it was ever done except in the case that I speak of. They have been required to carry, and I think the gentleman's bill carried, items separately for rent for the first time.

Mr. HAY. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Because they had been estimated for separately for the first time.

Mr. HAY. Under the act of March 3, 1877.

Mr. MANN. Under an act of the last Congress.

Mr. HAY. Under the act of March 3, 1877.

Mr. LAMB. We segregated these amounts for the first time, and we thought it would be in the interests of this department and in the interests of good government to have this provision in the bill. It was thoroughly gone over with Mr. Zappone. I talked with him myself, and he thought it was right. We must trust these people sometimes.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, what is pending?

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] is pending.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I can do this in a different way if the objection is made at this time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] proposes an amendment to lines 4 and 5.

Mr. HAWLEY. That can not be reached except after a return to that paragraph, and I object to the return.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] asks unanimous consent to return to the paragraph to offer an amendment.

Mr. HAWLEY. I object.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 67, line 7, by adding after the word "dollars" the following:

"Provided, That no appropriation herein shall be expended for rent for any building not now occupied by the Department of Agriculture."

Mr. LAMB. We should not do that. These people have to have some leeway. It would throw them out of doors some time if you did that.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, this part of the bill was read hastily, so that the paragraph which I wished to strike out was passed before an opportunity was given to strike it out. If members of the committee do not wish the committee to fairly pass on that question I have to resort to another method of accomplishing the same purpose.

Here is this department, which occupies a building costing $1,500,000; in addition, specific appropriations are made for rent of buildings for them amounting to $85,329. This is $4,680 more than is expended in this fiscal year for rent. In view of these facts, it seems to me there is no excuse to give the department an emergency appropriation of $10,000 for additional rent in the District of Columbia.

Mr. RUBEY. Will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York yield to the gentleman from Missouri?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I yield.

Mr. RUBEY. In case your amendment is adopted and one of the buildings should burn down, what would the Agriculture Department do for another building?

Mr. FITZGERALD. That may be adjusted in a different way. I wish to get an expression of the opinion of the House as to the propriety of giving this emergency fund. I could do it in this way, and any change necessary to take care of a situation like that can easily be made.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, I wish to be heard in opposition to the amendment when the gentleman has completed his statement.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is all I wish to say. I think if this department is given an emergency fund for rent they will spend it, and we will soon be spending close to $700,000 for rented buildings in the District of Columbia instead of $600,000.

Mr. HAWLEY. The committee for the first time have segregated items of rent for bureaus and offices in the Department of Agriculture, so that the House might know what amount was being paid for rent in each of these bureaus and offices. The appropriation proposed was made on information furnished us. In the administration of this department its work increases rapidly from year to year, and no one can now say whether the amounts appropriated for each of these several offices and bureaus are adequate to provide reasonable accommodations for them during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913. In addition to that, there is a new building being constructed near the location of the present buildings of the Department of Agriculture, which, I think, is a seven-story building, and is being especially constructed for the use of the Bureau of Plant Industry, in whole or in part.

Mr. BUTLER. A private institution?

Mr. HAWLEY. A private building is being erected in order to assemble in one place the work of the bureau now divided among many small buildings that are unsafe for the records, bad for the health of the employees, and which are so separated as to impair efficiency. It is proposed to assemble them all under one roof and do away with some expenses of minor character, and is in the interests of greater efficiency. It is also for the purpose of putting the records where they will be safe, and where the employees may have reasonably adequate accommodations.

Now, if the gentleman's amendment is carried this step toward increased efficiency in the department will be checked, and we will not be able to take it. We can not use any of the money for the renting of this new building. I have been in several bureaus of this department, and they are very much crowded, and if the work develops, as it must necessarily develop under the provisions we have made in this bill, they will not have places in which to house themselves. It seems to me that for this year it is entirely proper to carry in the bill, without the limitation proposed by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD], a sum as small as $10,000 with which to provide for emergencies that no one could tell about when the bill was prepared.

Mr. COOPER. I understood the gentleman to say in reply to the question of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER] that some private individual is now constructing a building which will house these various bureaus?

Mr. HAWLEY. House the Bureau of Plant Industry.

Mr. COOPER. Who is the individual?

Mr. HAWLEY. I do not know.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Is the gentleman familiar with the condition of the arrangement just proposed?

Mr. COOPER. What surprised me was that a private individual was completing a structure and was arranging a contract with the Government of the United States.

Mr. HAUGEN. I will say to the gentleman that that is being done right along. We have a number of buildings in that way.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask another question. For how long a time will the Department of Agriculture be authorized to contract with this private individual for the use of this structure that he is now erecting?

Mr. HAWLEY. For a year at a time, but with permission to renew the lease, providing legislation warrants it, for a period of five years; but they can vacate at the end of a year.

Mr. LAMB. Mr. Chairman, I ask my friend if he will not withdraw his objection to the motion of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD], against his amendment striking out lines 4 and 5, and let us have a vote on this proposition.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think that would be a fairer way.

Mr. MANN. Let us have a vote on this proposition.

Mr. RUBEY. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have two minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is glad to recognize the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUBEY].

Mr. RUBEY. Mr. Chairman, I want simply to say this, that when this matter came before our committee I was absolutely surprised at the amount of money we were paying in rent. A further investigation proved to me that from a business standpoint this Government is pursuing the wrong policy in renting any buildings in the city of Washington. It ought to own its own buildings. We are now paying rent to these people for buildings all over this city, and those buildings are netting their owners all the way from 5 to 6 and 7 per cent, and so on up. It is absolutely unbusinesslike. The Government ought to own its own buildings in the District of Columbia.

We know that. That is a condition that exists, and the committee has to meet it. Therefore we necessarily had to make the appropriations to pay those rents, and we made them, and I do not think that the paragraph that has been proposed to be stricken out should be stricken out.

In connection with the statement of my opinion I want to say, Mr. Chairman, that about a year ago Congress passed a bill authorizing a commission to select a site and to erect a memorial to Mr. Lincoln. I introduced into this Congress, not long ago, a bill which authorizes that commission to erect a Lincoln memorial agricultural building, and if that were done we could put out there on the Agricultural Department grounds a splendid, great big building, where we could take care of our Department of Agriculture and put all its various bureaus under one roof. That would be far better than the present condition, where we are renting buildings here and there at enormous rates all over the city.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word of the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, I know that it is useless and out of place, perhaps, to make the suggestion that we ought to complete that building for the Department of Agriculture. I recall very distinctly the pride that I had in voting for the bill, that contained a moderate sum of money to erect a building dedicated, in a way, to agriculture. To our amazement we discovered that those who were in authority—I do not know who was responsible; whoever he is ought to be charged publicly with it—seem to have diverted and misdirected the expressed intention of Congress by erecting two legs of the building and not erecting its main body.

Mr. HAWLEY. Two wings instead of two legs. [Laughter.]

Mr. BUTLER. Yes; Brother HAWLEY says "two wings of a building," and leaving the body out of it. [Laughter.] Whoever was responsible for it did it with a disregard of the wishes of Congress, because that is not a building, and I do not suppose anybody would describe it as a building. One million five hundred thousand dollars was appropriated, a modest sum of money, but sufficient in amount to have erected a handsome building complete, in which we could have housed all the people engaged in the administration of that work.

Now, we spend almost $100,000 a year in rent for this department. That is the interest on $3,000,000. It will soon be $120,000—this year—or the interest on $4,000,000.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit a question right there?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin?

Mr. BUTLER. With pleasure.

Mr. COOPER. Suppose those two wings were together. Would they house any more people than they do now?

Mr. BUTLER. They would not.

Mr. COOPER. What is the great crime, then, in putting them apart?

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, I did not charge anybody with committing a crime, but I did charge whoever was responsible with having disregarded the plain intention of Congress, because it is not one building, but two disjointed parts of a building.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, then the gentleman's anxiety and desire is not to complain on account of the lack of accommodation which the expenditure of $1,500,000 would have given, but to fix the crime on somebody for buildng the wings.

Mr. LAMB. Oh, Mr. Chairman, we can not waste time in discussing the two wings of that building. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER] has expired.

Mr. LAMB. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a vote on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD], the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER] having withdrawn his amendment.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I withdraw the pending amendment and move to strike out lines 4 and 5.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pending amendment will be withdrawn. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] moves to return to lines 4 and 5 for the purpose of offering an amendment. The Clerk will read the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend page 69 by striking out lines 4 and 5.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD].

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, so much has been said in reference to the existing Agricultural Department Building over here and the methods of its construction that I am going to make a slight contribution on the subject.

The Senate passed a bill for a new Agricultural Building, a bill which came to the House and was passed by the House, providing for the construction of a building to cost a million and a half dollars. That bill came from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, although I was temporarily under the impression that it came from the Committee on Agriculture. There was an officer authorized in the Department of Agriculture to have charge of the matter, and my recollection is that the matter was given in charge of Dr. Galloway, now and then the head of the Bureau of Plant Industry. Plans were prepared for the construction of a building in accordance with the act of Congress. But we had had an Art Commission that had made plans for the beautification of Washington, some of which have been carried out and more of which have not been carried out, but which are constantly before us.

After those plans had practically been agreed upon for the construction of the building, some gentlemen or architects connected with the Art Commission—and the term "Art Commission" is not a proper term; it grew out of the McMillan Committee in the Senate, the committee that went abroad. Gentlemen came down here, I think Mr. McKim, of New York, was one of them, and they had a session with the persons connected with the administration. President Roosevelt took the matter up with these gentlemen connected with this fine-art proposition, and with a gentleman who was then a Member of his Cabinet and is now, I believe, a Member of Congress, and it was finally determined by the President that the recommendations of this commission should be adopted, and directions to that effect were given to the Secretary of Agriculture.

I have never objected myself to the division of the building into three parts, only two of which were constructed, but I have frequently observed here and elsewhere that no place could ever be hot enough properly to punish those gentlemen who located those buildings one story beneath the surface of the ground, where clerks in time of hot weather were compelled to work in rooms where the air was not free and generous in hot weather.

I do not know whether that blame is on the part of the architect who was a member of this commission or not. But the President—President Roosevelt then—simply felt that it was his duty to follow the recommendations of this commission, which had made an exhaustive study of the beautification of Washington and the development of the Mall at an expense of some sixty or seventy thousand dollars, paid out of the Senate contingent fund. We located the Grant Monument down here in accordance with the same proposition precisely—another mistake, in my judgment—and it is expected that we will locate the Lincoln Memorial at the other end, between here and the river, in line with the Washington Monument, on the same plan; and every plan in recent years concerning buildings to a certain extent is following the recommendations of that commission. The gentlemen here who cavil about following it in connection with the Department of Agriculture Building ought to remember their opinion when they are called upon to vote on these other propositions for the beautification of Washington and the construction of public buildings here.

Mr. DALZELL. May I ask the gentleman if the construction of these wings exhausted the million and a half dollars appropriated for the building? It was intended for a building, was it not?

Mr. MANN. It was intended for a building. It did exhaust the appropriation.

Mr. HAUGEN. I want to call the attention of gentlemen to this fact, that the construction of this building for the Department of Agriculture is not different from the construction of other buildings on similar ground. The State, War, and Navy Building, the Interior Department Buildings, and the Treasury Building are all constructed in the same way.

Mr. MANN. I do not know whether the Treasury Building was originally constructed underground or not. I know that a part of it is below the level of the ground now. But it is not underground like the Agricultural Department Building.

Mr. LAMB. Oh, yes.

Mr. MANN. The whole first story of the Agricultural Building is underground, and inaccessible, unless you go down a flight of stairs.

Mr. LAMB. I think, if I chose to do so, I could tell as much about that as any man here, because the Agricultural Committee went in a body to see the gentleman charged with the responsibility, whose name gentlemen on either side will not call. I know all about it, but I do not choose to bring it in here now for discussion. It is to a certain extent ancient history. Belonging on the other side, I do not choose to discuss the question. It was supposed by our committee that the buildings were going to be put on top of the ground; but Congress adjourned, and when we came back here the building was under the ground.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the gentleman a question. When the appropriation was made for the Agricultural Department Building, or the first wing, as I recollect—I have not looked it up lately—it was to be constructed immediately in the vicinity of the present building. Am I correct?

Mr. LAMB. It seems to me so.

Mr. CANNON. That is my recollection. In pursuance of that there was an excavation made, as the appropriation provided—a hole in the ground. Subsequently, without any legislation whatever, the east wing as it now stands was built at a place not adjacent to the present Agricultural Building. Am I correct about that?

Mr. LAMB. That is my recollection.

Mr. CANNON. And a new excavation, as I recollect in a general way, was made so as to construct that wing adjacent to the old building, then standing and still occupied, costing, if I recollect aright, to make that hole in the ground $40,000.

Mr. LAMB. I do not know how many thousand dollars it cost. I know it ought not to have been done in that way.

Mr. CANNON. But that was abandoned, and so far as I recollect, without any change in legislation, the east wing was constructed as it now stands. I have not refreshed my recollection, but I think I am not mistaken about it.

Mr. LAMB. I ask for a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD].

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. FITZGERALD) there were—ayes 20, noes 41.

Accordingly the amendment was rejected.

Mr. LEVY. I ask unanimous consent to return to page 68, line 18, to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. LEVY] asks unanimous consent to return to page 68, line 18, for the purpose of offering an amendment.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Reserving the right to object, I should like to know what the amendment is.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 68, strike out the words "twenty-five thousand and seventy-five dollars" in lines 18 and 19 and insert in lieu thereof the words "fifteen thousand dollars."

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. I object.

Mr. LEVY. I should like the opportunity to explain this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan objects. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Salaries, Office of Experiment Stations: One director, $4,500; 1 chief clerk, $2,000; 1 computer, $2,000; 1 draftsman, $1,800; 1 clerk and proof reader, $1,800; 1 executive clerk, $1,600; 1 editorial clerk, $1,400; 1 editorial clerk, $1,200; 1 draftsman, $1,200; 2 clerks, class 3; 4 clerks, class 2; 7 clerks, class 1; 6 clerks, at $1,000 each; 12 clerks, at $900 each; 1 messenger, $840; 3 messengers, messenger boys, or laborers, at $600 each; 4 messengers, messenger boys, or laborers, at $480 each; 1 skilled laborer, $900; 5 laborers or charwomen, at $480 each; 2 laborers or charwomen, at $240 each; in all, $59,840.

One executive clerk, $1,600.

That is new legislation.

Mr. LAMB. This is simply a new place, to take care of the additional work of the bureau. That is all there is of it.

Mr. LEVER. I should like to ask the gentleman if he insists on his point of order? If so, I should like to be heard on the point of order.

Mr. FOWLER. I reserve the point of order, if the gentleman desires to be heard upon it. I think I shall insist on the point of order unless there is some good reason offered for creating this executive place.

Mr. LEVER. Let me say to the gentleman from Illinois that the Office of Experiment Stations is one of the biggest offices in the Department of Agriculture. It deals with the distribution of the funds under the Morrill Act, under which the various agricultural colleges of the country have been established. It also deals with the expenditure of money under the Hatch Act, which created the various experiment stations in the various States of the Union. It also disburses the money available under the second Morrill Act of 1890, which was a further endowment of agricultural colleges. It also has to do with the proper disbursement of the money under the Nelson amendment and the Adams Act, and that work necessarily increases as time goes along. This new place has been added for the purpose of taking care of the increasing work of this great office. And I will say to my friend that if he will go through this roll of the Office of Experiment Stations he will find that very few new places have been added. I think there are only two in the whole roll, and this for a bureau which expends as much money as any bureau in the Department of Agriculture except the Bureau of Forestry. It is a very important bureau.

Mr. FOWLER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEVER. Yes.

Mr. FOWLER. I desire to ask if it is not a fact that under this paragraph a number of clerks have been added for the purpose of doing the very same work which the gentleman has detailed in his argument in favor of creating this new place?

Mr. LEVER. I will say to the gentleman frankly that after looking hastily through the roll as submitted to us, and looking through the bill, I do not find that there is any new place added except the one to which he refers and one other, involving only a $900 new place.

Mr. FOWLER. In line 17 there are two clerks of class 3. I ask if they are not new?

Mr. LEVER. I think there has been an addition of perhaps one clerk at $900.

Mr. FOWLER. There are two clerks of class 3.

Mr. LEVER. That is a transfer to the statutory roll from the lump fund for drainage, in accordance with the law on the subject. The gentleman has been informed, as we have gone along in this bill, that an amendment was put on the Agriculture appropriation bill in the Senate last year, requiring that all positions of a clerical nature should be transferred from the lump fund to this statutory roll. There really have been but two new places provided, I think, in this roll. One is the place to which the gentleman refers, one executive clerk, $1,600, and the other, as I now understand it, one clerk, at $900.

Mr. FOWLER. Why can not the work be done by the two additional clerks of class 3 created by this act?

Mr. LEVER. The gentleman does not understand. These clerks to whom he refers, in class 3, are transferred from the lump fund to the statutory roll, and when transferred they will be doing the same work that they are now doing while they are paid out of the lump-sum fund.

Mr. FOWLER. What does this executive clerk do?

Mr. LEVER. I can not give the details of that. I presume he takes care of the correspondence, and various things of that kind.

Mr. FOWLER. Were there any hearings upon that question, and was any recommendation made for the creation of this new clerk?

Mr. LEVER. The department says:

This is to take care of the additional work of the bureau, and will enable a few promotions to be made.

I should like to discuss that proposition. The difficulty with a lot of these rolls has been that we do not make any places at the top, so that there is no chance of promotion of the little fellows at the bottom. In other words, the statutory roll is absolutely air-tight, except by legislative enactment, and unless we make an occasional promotion at the top of the roll it is absolutely impossible to promote from the bottom. In other words, the promotions must go up as vacancies occur at the top of the roll.

Mr. FOWLER. This new place was created for the purpose of giving everybody a chance to make one upward step.

Mr. LEVER. Not that entirely, but that was a consideration, and I think that will be a very wise thing to do. We do not want the men who work day in and day out at the bottom to have no hope of reward for long and good service.

Mr. FOWLER. Why did you not increase the salaries of the small-paid clerks?

Mr. LEVER. We did increase the salaries of 159 of these low-grade clerks.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I wish to state that this increases the number of clerks to be employed, and, according to the ruling of the Chair the other day, it is not subject to a point of order, inasmuch as it has been previously authorized. It is a new place, but a point of order does not lie against an increase in the number of employees where an increase in number of clerks is found necessary in the administration of the affairs of the bureau.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, in view of the fact that no good reason has been offered for the creation of this new place, I make the point of order that it is new legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is prepared to rule. The Chair is aware that the general act governing the department gives the head of the department power to employ additional employees, including clerks, no matter what they may be called; but the Chair understands that the compensation of these clerks must be fixed by existing law. If a new clerk is appointed to a position that had not heretofore existed, and it does not fall within the classifications covered by existing law, obviously there will be no existing law fixing his compensation. As the Chair understands it, the compensation for clerks carried on the roll under whatever designation, or employees under whatever designation, may be continued upon the theory that the compensation is fixed by the last appropriation bill, which is an exception to the general rule that an appropriation bill governs only the year for which it was enacted, but under that exception alone apparently the compensation is fixed by law for employees. It appears to the Chair if the new clerk is appointed, with a new designation to which no salary is attached, to a position not heretofore carried, then it is obnoxious to the point that there is no existing law fixing the compensation. The Chair is of the opinion that the point of order must be sustained, and therefore sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

To carry into effect the provisions of an act approved March 16, 1906, entitled "An act to provide for an increased annual appropriation for agricultural experiment stations and regulating the expenditure thereof," the sums apportioned to the several States and Territories to be paid quarterly in advance, $720,000: Provided, That not to exceed $15,000 shall be paid to each State and Territory under this act.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. How much of this money is now being expended by the Government? Has the money all been expended?

Mr. LAMB. Yes.

Mr. LEVER. Oh, yes; undoubtedly the money is all being expended.

Mr. MANN. It is taken by every State and Territory?

Mr. LEVER. That is our understanding of it.

Mr. LAMB. They submit a detailed statement to the Secretary of Agriculture every year. They have to do that.

Mr. MANN. I understand that. And they are asking for more now?

Mr. LAMB. They are not asking for more, but the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER], in a bill which he has introduced, is asking for additional appropriations for another purpose—to make this educational system complete, and to have it take up from these various agricultural colleges and experiment stations the information they have been gathering since the Morrill Act in 1862 and put it out on the farms in the way of demonstration. The gentleman will agree to that bill, I am sure.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, as I understand it, there are two propositions now pending. One is that the Government shall increase the amount to be expended by the States or experimental colleges in giving primary instruction in agriculture and the other is to have an increased sum expended by the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. LEVER. In cooperation with the States, and conditioned upon the fact that the States themselves must appropriate as much to that purpose as they get from the Federal Government, and no more.

Mr. MANN. Yes; but the two propositions are entirely distinct.

Mr. LEVER. I think not.

Mr. MANN. I think so. One is to have the work under the direction of the Department of Agriculture, and the other is to have the work under the direction of the State experiment stations.

Mr. LEVER. That is not quite the fact. The latter proposition which the gentleman has in mind is a bill which I have introduced, and which has been indorsed by the various agricultural college organizations of the country, appropriating a certain sum to be expended through the agricultural colleges. Of course, the general administrative features will be under the control of the Department of Agriculture, just as they are now under the Morrill and supplementary Hatch Acts. The other proposition I do not have in mind, unless the gentleman is referring to the Page bill, which is an entirely different proposition.

Mr. MANN. I have not examined the Page bill. That may take another tack, but there are several bills pending in the House.

Mr. LEVER. Oh, yes; quite a number, involving quite a number of different ideas.

Mr. MANN. Some of which contemplate one plan and some of which contemplate the other plan. As I understand the plan of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER] in his bill, it is that the money shall be expended through the State experiment stations.

Mr. LEVER. Through the agricultural college of the State. That is a big difference which the educators make. That is the reason I call attention to it.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit another question on that point? As I understand, this appropriation refers only to carrying on the work already in existence with regard to assisting the experiment stations that are now established by the State agricultural colleges.

Mr. LEVER. That is true. This amount is appropriated each year and is a continuing appropriation.

Mr. TOWNER. And the bill which the gentleman has introduced and to which he referred a moment ago is for the purpose of a further extension of the work, but along the line of demonstration work in which the agricultural experiment stations will collaborate with the National Government in establishing experimental stations for work in the various districts of the United States.

Mr. LEVER. Hardly. The gentleman does not quite get the theory. It is not the purpose of the bill which I have introduced increasing appropriations for this purpose to establish in the various districts of the country additional experiment stations. The purpose is to give to the various States, through their agricultural colleges, a sum of money sufficient to make actual demonstration with the farmer himself, and upon his own farm, as to the advisability of putting into effect in his community the expert findings of the men whose duty it is to make these investigations and reports.

The Clerk read as follows:

To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to establish and maintain agricultural experiment stations in Alaska, Hawaii, Porto Rico, and the island of Guam, including the erection of buildings, the preparation, illustration, and distribution of reports and bulletins, and all other necessary expenses, $105,000, as follows: Alaska, $30,000; Hawaii, $30,000; Porto Rico, $30,000; and Guam, $15,000; and the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to sell such products as are obtained on the land belonging to the agricultural experiment stations in Alaska, Hawaii, Porto Rico, and the island of Guam, and to apply the money received from the sale of such products to the maintenance of said stations, and this fund shall be available until used.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman. I reserve the point of order on the paragraph. I would like to ask the gentleman from Virginia if he can give us the data as to how much these products produced at these various experimental stations have sold for? We spend $30,000 a year for experimental purposes in Alaska to maintain an experimental farm and authorize the Secretary to sell the produce of that farm. I have a curiosity to know how much we get for the produce that we raise by the expenditure of this $30,000.

Mr. LAMB. I have all that information in my room, but I have not got it here.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman ought to have it here. This is the place for it. It is of no benefit to me over in the gentleman's room.

Mr. LAMB. Exactly. I can tell the gentleman that there is not much from these foreign experimental farms, but there is something from the produce of our own farms around here; yet not so much as we hoped for when we established them.

Mr. MANN. We have been maintaining an experimental station in Alaska for a great many years.

Mr. LAMB. I do not think there is anything from that.

Mr. MANN. At an expense of $30,000. We have been maintaining another at the island of Guam at a yearly expense of $15,000 for a good many years. Guam is not very large. I do not know whether we are engaged in raising produce down there for the benefit of the natives who live in Guam or the people whom we send down there to run the government, but I would like to know whether any of our scientific farmers are able to get out of the produce which they sell one-half as much as it costs to run the station?

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. HAWLEY. So far as the Alaska station is concerned, they have been working up there to breed oats, wheat, and other cereal crops, and also to raise vegetable crops that will thrive in that cold region; and they have succeeded in breeding a good many and are distributing the seeds both of the cereals and the vegetables among the people there so that the people can provide themselves with vegetables and cereals without the enormous expense of transporting such supplies into that country.

Mr. MANN. I do not understand that they have been breeding up there very much. I understand that in Alaska, and I have read all the reports from the experiment station up there for years, they have been experimenting with different breeds of wheat, different kinds of small fruits——

Mr. HAWLEY. That is true also.

Mr. MANN. And different kinds of vegetables, where they procure the seed from other far north latitudes, and they give glowing stories sometimes about what they can raise, but do they raise anything?

Mr. HAWLEY. The director of the experiment station there was before the committee two years ago and he gave us some detail statements of their work there that seemed to be very useful and successful.

Mr. MANN. I suppose we shall go ahead with making the experiments. In fact, I would not stop the work, but I have read the reports of the experiment station up there. It never has struck me that they are doing anything. If it is true as some people claim that Alaska is a hidden territory, prepared to grow wheat in great quantities, they ought to be able to discover that after the course of many years. Does the gentleman from Oregon believe that anybody up there is growing anything, except the Government of the United States?

Mr. HAWLEY. I only know what was reported to us by the director and, I think, by the Secretary, that they were distributing these seeds of vegetables and cereals and encouraging the people up there to grow them, and that they were growing some.

Mr. MANN. Does anybody else grow them?

Mr. LAMB. They brought before our committee two years ago specimens of wheat and other things growing up there.

Mr. HAWLEY. Those were grown at the experiment station. The gentleman is asking for things grown by individuals.

Mr. LAMB. We asked the question if they could grow these cereals, and they said yes.

Mr. MANN. Of course, one can get specimens of wheat grown almost any place. It looks fine, but is it profitable to grow it? In the course of time have they gotten anybody else to see the benefit of these experiments, so that there is any good coming out of them?

Mr. HAWLEY. That was the understanding we had on the committee, namely, that they were inducing the residents there to use these seeds, and that they were succeeding with them.

Mr. MANN. I would like to know how much they get for the produce.

Mr. LAMB. If we had come in here with this item stricken out, we would have had a struggle.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Nutrition investigations: To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to investigate the nutritive value of agricultural products used for human food, with special suggestions of plans and methods for the more effective utilization of such products for this purpose, with the cooperation of other bureaus of the department, and to disseminate useful information on this subject, including the employment of labor in the city of Washington and elsewhere, and all other necessary expenses, $12,000.

Mr. EVANS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the word "twelve" in the last line of the paragraph and insert the word "fifteen."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 72, line 20, strike out the word "twelve" and insert in lieu thereof the word "fifteen."

Mr. EVANS. I know that this is subject to a point of order.

Mr. LAMB. I make a point of order, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. EVANS. I ask for a few minutes. I do not take the time of this House very often, and I now ask your attention to this matter. This subject of bulletins relating to food is one of the most important things and one of the subjects that people are more generally interested in than any other subject for which bulletins are issued. I have before me a list of the distribution of farmers' bulletins on the subject of "nutrition," which shows that 9,958,000 of these bulletins have been issued.

As shown by data secured from the Division of Publications, the number of farmers' bulletins on nutrition issued up to January 19, 1912, is as follows:

The distribution of farmers' bulletins on nutrition, which summarize data from the nutrition investigations of the Office of Experiment Stations.

That is one for every four and one-half of the grown people in the United States. I am only asking for $3,000 more, because Dr. Langworthy, the head of that department, one of the ablest and one of the most devoted public servants that we have in this country, wants $3,000 more with which to continue the work. Among the things which he wishes to investigate is cottonseed oil. He wishes to investivate also a substitute for potatoes. They wish to investigate a number of things for which they have not sufficient money. I am only asking for $3,000 for a subject which is immensely important and immensely popular. There are very few things that are more interesting to the public generally to-day than food and the nutritious value of food. It is a subject that a great many people are being increasingly interested in all over the country, and schools are being formed for that purpose and men are studying it as they never studied it before. I think the little sum of $3,000 which the department asks ought to be allowed.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. EVANS].

The question was taken, and the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. EVANS. Division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 13, noes 25.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Drainage investigations: To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to investigate and report upon the drainage of swamp and other wet lands and to prepare plans for the removal of surplus waters by drainage and for the preparation and illustration of reports and bulletins on drainage, including the employment of labor in the city of Washington and elsewhere, rent outside of the District of Columbia, and all necessary expenses, $96,700.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph. I think it is subject to a point of order——

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. I wish to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Subject to the point of order, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] offers an amendment.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Does the gentleman from Illinois wish to reserve the point?

Mr. MANN. I will reserve the point of order. There is no authorization of law for this drainage investigation, and I would like to know what we are doing and of what good it is. I will be very glad to reserve the point of order.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. I would like to say to my colleague that I think under this appropriation the department has gone into parts of the country where we have overflowed land, where there are lands that are necessary to drain before crops can be grown successfully, and devised ways and means where that can be done, preparing plans, and in that way this has been of great assistance to the people of those localities.

Now, my colleague will readily recognize that all over this country there is a great deal of valuable land, some of the most fertile land in the United States, and while it is true that it may be said it is largely a local matter, to be taken up by State and county and local authorities, yet the Agricultural Department is doing a great deal that is no more authorized than this. I think this appropriation has been of great value to the people living in that kind of country. And I hope my colleague will not make the point of order, if it is subject to a point of order, because it is of such great value.

Mr. HAWLEY. In one place I know there were lands that were foul or sour, and the farmers did not know how to treat them. A Government expert went in there and examined the situation. They had put expensive fertilizers on them and tried expensive methods of restoring them to a good condition of agriculture and tillage, but had been unsuccessful. The expert showed them the whole difficulty consisted in the lack of proper drainage; that the waters overflowed and remained there on account of the condition of the soil; and after proper drainage the land became very fertile and fruitful.

Mr. MANN. It does not require a drainage expert to ascertain whether land which is sour or saturated with water would be better off if drained.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. The drainage expert knows that is what the land needs. If he knows that, he tells the people, and they can go to work to act according to the plans proposed.

Mr. LAMB. That very question was asked Dr. True, and partly in answer he says that upward of 50 of their projects have been formed in the drainage districts and the construction work is now being carried on or about to be undertaken. He says, however, that it should be understood that the problem of draining large areas of swamp land is a complicated one, and consequently will take people a great deal of time in a number of these areas to understand what is required to be done. So far as I know personally they have made many surveys along the Chickahominy and they have taught those people how they could drain certain large tracts of land.

Mr. MANN. I have no doubt of that.

Mr. LAMB. And in South Carolina all this experimental work of draining is being carried on to a great extent.

Mr. BARNHART. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAMB. Yes.

Mr. BARNHART. I want to inquire where the authority of the Government begins and where it ends in States where agricultural stations are maintained at the cost of the State?

Mr. LAMB. My friend ought to ask me something easy.

Mr. MANN. There are not any that are maintained in that way.

Mr. BARNHART. We have in the State of Indiana the Purdue University, for instance; and notwithstanding the fact that they have soil experts and surveyors, and all of that, the Government sent us a bunch of engineers down in the Kankakee region and made a survey along the stream and analyzed the soil. Why take these men from Washington if the Purdue University is maintained for that purpose right there on the ground, virtually?

Mr. LAMB. Ask me something else that is easy; it is just as difficult as the other question was.

Mr. BARNHART. The State does maintain Purdue University.

Mr. LAMB. Do not these people operate in conjunction with them?

Mr. BARNHART. Not that I know of.

Mr. MANN. That does not make any difference whether they do or not. It is there, and fully able to cope with the problems that arise. We have all had attention directed recently to drainage investigations in the Florida case, where apparently the Government starts out with a view that it is the duty of the General Government to find out how to drain the Everglades of Florida. That work is now being carried on by the State of Florida. I hope it will be done successfully. It ought to be carried on by the State. I can see no reason why the General Government should go in and advise in reference to the drainage of every swamp in the country or every large area of submerged land. The States are quite able to do it. Take the Kankakee swamps in Indiana and Illinois, and those States are quite capable of furnishing all necessary funds for the purpose of drainage, though the Agricultural Department very likely contributes some beneficial knowledge.

Mr. LAMB. Does my friend move to strike it out?

Mr. MANN. I reserve a point of order on it.

Mr. LAMB. I would like to hear the point of order discussed. Why is it subject to a point of order?

Mr. MANN. It is the gentleman's business to show authority for the existence of this provision. If the gentleman can find anything in the law anywhere that authorizes the Government to carry on drainage investigation at this time, I will subside.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman to continue to reserve his point of order a moment.

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have a few minutes' time.

Mr. MANN. Let the gentleman take the floor.

Mr. LEVER. I will suspend, Mr. Chairman, until the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] gets through.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I hope my colleague, Mr. MANN, will not insist upon any point of order against this paragraph. While it is true that the National Government does many things which might properly be done by the States in the way of conducting investigations and examinations affecting agriculture, I am sure that if you will look through this bill you will find a great many items concerning which the same statement might be made as that which has been made on this particular proposition. I think there is hardly a State anywhere in the Mississippi Valley in which there are not thousands of acres of land that need the right kind of drainage to make them very valuable lands for agricultural purposes.

I know that in the State of Illinois—and I think that our State is a fair sample of what the people in other States are doing for themselves—has done a great deal in the way of promoting agriculture, and yet I know that in that State there are many thousands of acres of swamp land along the river bottoms, such as the Embarrass, Wabash, and the Kaskaskia and other rivers, where, if proper investigations were made as to the drainage of those lands, they could be made more valuable and the owners could be shown methods which if put in operation they would not lose their crops through overflows at certain seasons of the year; and I am sure that it would be the means of adding thousands of dollars to the wealth of the people of that State, and if put in operation over the United States millions of dollars to the wealth of the people of the whole country.

The National Government has gone into the West—and I think properly so—and has devised plans whereby it is possible to irrigate sections of those lands in that country, and as a result of that we have seen these arid sections there that years ago grew nothing and were a barren waste now changed into the most fertile sections of the United States. And so we have spent in the western country many thousands, and even millions, of dollars. It is true that a large bulk of that money will be returned in time to the Treasury, but we have expended a great deal of money there in showing those people how properly to irrigate those lands and how properly to plant certain crops that are produced abundantly; and I am sure that there is no one in the House to-day who does not feel that the National Government has not exceeded its authority when it has gone into that section and shown those people what they can do for their own community.

It can be said with equal propriety that in the States of Utah and Wyoming and Montana and other States of the West they could have taken up those questions and settled them for themselves. But we have not done so; we have not forced them to do that. We have not held a deaf ear to them when they came to Congress and asked that some money be appropriated for those purposes. So when we come to look at the great area—I think it is stated to be an area of 75,000,000 acres in the United States—that could be greatly benefited by proper drainage, we would make of them equally as valuable lands for certain crops in those sections of the country as we have made in the country beyond the Mississippi River in those arid regions to which I have referred.

I do hope that this paragraph may be permitted to remain in the bill and that the appropriation may even be increased, so that the agents of the National Government may go out and create an interest in the matter of drainage and show the people how the work can be done by means of plans and specifications, so that this great area of land may be reclaimed for agricultural purposes. I am sure that when we do that we will add to the wealth of this country by millions, yea, by hundreds of millions of dollars. I believe that as an investment nothing in this bill could be of more value to the people than this item of drainage, which is now proposed to be stricken out on a point of order. I appeal to my good friend from the State of Illinois, Mr. MANN, that he will not insist upon this point of order against this paragraph, but that he permit it to remain in the bill. [Applause.]

The country is now complaining of the lack of land to make homes, and many of our people are going to Canada, where there is a great deal of land yet unsettled. It occurs to me that we could well take in hand the reclaiming of these overflowed and wet lands, so as to help make them productive of food products for the people. For several years now the people have seen the finest crops lost, and most times because there was lacking the proper drainage. We spend hundreds of thousands of dollars to teach the people how to get rid of injurious insects that destroy fruits and other farm products. It occurs to me it is just as legitimate a work for the Government to show the owners of land how to properly drain it as it is to show them how to get rid of insects so as to grow crops. There would be millions added to the wealth of our country each year if these lands could be properly drained.

The wet lands, in many instances, are of the most fertile in the State, and will produce abundant crops if looked after in the right way, so as to get the water off and prevent the injury to crops. The argument that the Government has no right to go into this kind of work, it seems to me, is hardly sound in view of the many other things that are now being done by this great department. Many times all that is necessary to start the work is to send some one out into those regions and show the people what is necessary and how to do it, and they will readily take hold, and in that way the proper condition is brought about. The farmer is always ready and anxious to take hold of projects that will improve his land and make it grow better crops; it is his interest to do so. If that were not true, the Agriculture Department would not to-day be the great success that it is. In Illinois our farmers are sending their boys to the State university, so they may learn how to farm in a scientific way, and as a consequence our farmers are advancing and becoming better educated in farming all the time, and our land is farmed in a more scientific manner than heretofore. The old "slipshod" way of farming in Illinois is a thing of the past, and they are to-day understanding the soil and plant life better than ever in its history.

The day of calling the farmer a back number is past. He is an intelligent man and keeps up with the times. He reads and is posted, and is as able to discuss affairs of the day as well as any other man. The cry "back to the farm" will cease to be necessary when we still carry further the work in favor of the farmer. Let us do what we can to help him, for from the man on the farm must come the necessary means of the sustenance of our people.

We hear much to-day of the high cost of living, and yet the farmer is not getting an exorbitant price for his product. There are too many people who get a profit on what the farmer produces from the time it leaves his hands until it reaches the consumer. Oftentimes the men who handle the farmer's product make more than the farmer who grows the article. The menace of great wealth in this country does not spring from the man on the farm. He is not the one who forms a monopoly, but must take what the buyer of his product desires to give him, and must pay for the necessaries of life and pay for the necessary articles used on his farm what the seller asks. It is to be hoped that this provision may remain in the bill and the amount increased, so that next year more work can be done along this line than in the past.

Mr. CANDLER. Mr. Chairman, I want to say just a word in reference to this matter, and join in the appeal of the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER], who has just taken his seat, to his distinguished colleague over here [Mr. MANN], that he will not insist upon his point of order which he has interposed to this paragraph.

As has already been referred to by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER], one of the great questions in this country is to supply water to certain sections of the country and to certain lands that lie in that part of our great domain. Another great question that is pressing itself upon the attention of the people is this other question of drainage—the best way of getting water off the land when there is too much on it. That is a question that is especially interesting to the people throughout our section of the country, and I dare say throughout many other sections of this great Republic. They are very much interested in it, and while, as was suggested a moment ago by the gentleman from Indiana, certain work may be done by the States and within the States by the agricultural colleges and the experiment stations, still a greater work can be done by the Government of the United States, especially in connection with the agricultural authorities, in the way in which a great deal of this work is being done.

I know that in my own section of the country, while we have had some benefits which have arisen from the provisions of former bills on this subject, and no doubt will derive benefit from this provision, if it remains in the bill, which has been small in comparison with the work that has been done by the local authorities and at their own expense, yet somehow or other, as we well know, the people of this country have got more confidence in the Federal Government than they have in the local authorities. They have more confidence in the experts sent out by the Agricultural Department under this provision and other provisions, and they listen to those experts more intently and adopt their methods more readily than they do in taking the advice of the local authorities, with whom they come in contact frequently—more frequently, perhaps, than they do with the agents of the Federal Government.

Mr. BUTLER. And they also have more confidence in the Federal Treasury. [Laughter.]

Mr. CANDLER. Yes; they also have more confidence in the Federal Treasury. And I am glad that they possess that confidence in the Federal Treasury, and that we all possess that confidence; and I hope the day will never come when the American people will lose confidence in the Treasury of this great Republic. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Mississippi yield to the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. CANDLER. With pleasure.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I would like to ask the gentleman what is there that is mysterious about the drainage of swamp lands and wet lands that is to be learned to the extent of $96,000 a year. It is a well-known system of engineering, is it not?

Mr. CANDLER. Of course, there is a plan of engineering. There is nothing mysterious in reference to it. That is very true. Nevertheless, we know that there are lands all over this country, from one end of it to the other, that need drainage. The people need aid and encouragement in many lines in connection with that work. If you are going to investigate only propositions that are mysterious, you will turn aside from some of the most practical things for the benefit of the people of this country—things in which they should be given help and aid, which would be highly to their advantage.

Mr. BOOHER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield to the the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BOOHER] or to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SLAYDEN]?

Mr. CANDLER. I will yield now to the gentleman from Missouri if the gentleman from Texas has finished.

Mr. BOOHER. I would like to ask the gentleman who owns all of this swamp land. Are they private individuals or is it the Government?

Mr. CANDLER. Oh, some of it is owned by private individuals and some of it is State land and some of it Government land, probably.

Mr. BOOHER. If they are private lands, why should not the owners do the draining?

Mr. CANDLER. Just a moment. I did not hear the last remark of the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. BOOHER. Why should not the owner of swamp lands drain them without appealing to the Government? It seems to me it may be said that some of these people in the employ of the Government want to find out whether water will run down hill. [Laughter.]

Mr. LAMB. Mr. Chairman, I think I can answer that in the words of Dr. True. He says they have different classes of enterprises brought to their attention, and that most of their work relates to the large tracts of land which can be drained only by community effort. He says that in a few instances they have prepared plans for the drainage of small tracts as examples of what could be done in certain regions to encourage communities to undertake the work of drainage. I agree with the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BOOHER] in the main, that the owners should do some of this work themselves. De novo, I would not be in favor of doing this. I believe the States and individuals ought to do it. But if we had stricken this item out there would have been a howl all over this country.

Mr. BOOHER. I agree with the gentleman on that, but is that a good reason for this appropriation?

Mr. CANDLER. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have two minutes more.

Mr. RUBEY. I move, Mr. Chairman, that the gentleman from Mississippi be allowed two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUBEY] asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. CANDLER] be extended two minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LAMB. We must not let this discussion run away with the time of the committee.

Mr. CANDLER. I will say that the same answer made by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BOOHER] a moment ago could be made in reference to the arid lands of the West.

Mr. BOOHER. No; you can not make the same application, because under the irrigation laws the money will eventually get back into the Treasury of the United States. We are irrigating Government land, and the people pay for water rights.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. We have spent a great deal more than we have got back.

Mr. CANDLER. I dare say when the account is made up at the end of all these great irrigation projects it will be found that millions have been expended that have never come back to the Government in any direct way. But we do not spend money on behalf of the Government with a view to getting it back directly or immediately from the investigations and developments which are made, but we expect to get it back in the prosperity which follows, in the benefits which come to the people by means of the functions of the Government when they are properly directed and used.

As I said at the outset, this is an important matter. It is more important than the mere dollars and cents involved in this little item that appears in this bill. This money has been used to great advantage in the past and will be used for greater benefits in the future, and the benefits that have already been derived from it are apparent. Therefore I appeal to my friend not to insist upon the point of order, if indeed this provision is subject to the point of order, but to let it remain in the bill and let this committee pass upon it as to its merits, and let the benefits which we have already experienced go forward in the future. [Applause.]

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, this item appears on its face to be a proposition to expend $96,000 in the next fiscal year to advise somebody how to do something that any capable county surveyor could instruct them very well how to do. The reason for it submitted by the chairman of the committee, my dearly beloved friend from Virginia [Mr. LAMB], is that heretofore on some occasion the department has prepared plans which have been found acceptable for the drainage of swamps and wet lands. He couples that with the statement that usually these schemes are of such magnitude that they have to be undertaken by the community; that an individual can not carry them on. If that is so, then in the name of Heaven, why should not the community do the work? The reason offered by the gentleman from Virginia in support of this item is, I believe, a quotation from the testimony of Mr. True.

Mr. LAMB. I was quoting from him. I was not giving my own opinion.

Mr. SLAYDEN. He says that it was done for some company. In other words, the corporation that owned these lands had induced the Government of the United States to employ engineers for its benefit, something which it might very well have done for itself. I can see no possible reason why the United States should go into the State of Texas, or the State of Louisiana, or Mississippi, or Illinois, or any other State and undertake to teach the people to do something in which they can be instructed by men in every community who are entirely capable of giving that instruction as to how to do the work in the most practicable and economical way. This is an effort to get the Government to do something that the communities ought to do for themselves, that the States ought to do for their State lands. Gentlemen who have any respect for the remnant of State sovereignty and dignity ought to pause and consider the trend in this House seen in the effort to have the Federal Government invade the States and even invade the counties and assume every duty and responsibility that properly lodges upon them. I sincerely hope that the gentleman will insist on his point of order, and it will be insisted on by somebody, Mr. Chairman.

[Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. LAMB. I move that all debate on this paragraph be now closed.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I should like a little time on this.

Mr. MADDEN. I wish five minutes on this.

Mr. LAMB. We have got to proceed with the bill.

Mr. CANNON. If I may be indulged, I make the point of order that debate on a point of order runs within the discretion of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule on the point of order.

Mr. LAMB. I yield to experience and age.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, this bill provides, among other things, for the appropriation of a small sum, aggregating a little more than $90,000, for the purpose of giving the Secretary of Agriculture an opportunity to examine and survey overflowed and swamp lands in order to determine what is necessary to be done for the proper drainage of such lands. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] has raised a point of order against this paragraph of the bill. He claims that it is new legislation, not in the interest of agriculture, and ought to be stricken out. I deny that proposition. The appropriation provides for the collection of information, how to extend the area of farming lands, and how to prevent the destruction of crops in lowlands by overflow and inundation, both of which are directly in the interest of agriculture. I therefore insist, Mr. Chairman, that this appropriation is germane to the subject matter and ought not to be excluded from the bill. It can not be classed as new legislation. The point of order, in my opinion, is not well taken and ought to be overruled.

Mr. Chairman, anything which is done for the purpose of increasing either the yield or the area of the farm is in the interest of agriculture. There is now a growing and pressing demand everywhere for good farming lands, and this demand will increase in proportion to the increase of our population. When we examine the statistics of the world's crops for the last five years we are forced to the conclusion that the annual increase in the yield of the leading food products of the world has not kept pace with the increase of population. The following table has been compiled under the authority of the Secretary of Agriculture:

[1] Total production of countries from which returns have been received in 1911 is 3,013,358,000 bushels against 3,575,936,000 bushels for the same countries in 1910.
[2] This is the preliminary estimation for the crop of 1911.

This table shows that five years ago the world was raising about as much foodstuff as is raised now. What is true with the crops of the world is true with the crop yield in the United States. I submit the following table, published under the authority of the Secretary of Agriculture, which shows the yield of seven of the leading crops of the United States for the last three years in support of this proposition.

The following table, which is published under the authority of the Secretary of Agriculture, shows that there is but slight or no increase in the production of the following seven leading agricultural products during the last three years in the United States. In some instances it shows a decided decrease.

Crop.	1909	1910	1911

[1] The above estimate for cane sugar includes the entire product raised in Hawaii and Porto Rico, which is not official.

These figures show conclusively that we are fast approaching the time when the American people will be able to consume the entire product of the American farm. The rapid falling off of the export of our bread and meat products for the last five years brings us to a realization of the problem which confronts us. I have arranged the figures in a table for the purpose of comparison and I will extend it in the RECORD.

The exports of some of the leading food products are shown by the following table, which is taken from the report of the Department of Commerce and Labor, Bureau of Statistics, for the years 1906, 1907, 1908, 1909, and 1910.

It has been estimated that we consume annually about 7 bushels of wheat per capita in America. It has also been estimated that our wheat land is on the wane, and under present conditions we can not expect to produce more than 700,000,000 bushels annually. If this be true, when our population reaches the one-hundred-million mark we will be able to consume our entire wheat crop. Thereafter we will be compelled to go abroad for a portion of our breadstuff or find new wheat fields at home. If these tables can be relied upon, we must conclude that what is true of wheat is also true of corn, rye, and oats. The same alarming condition surrounds all of them alike. The rapid and astonishing decrease in the exportation of hogs, cattle, and sheep, and the meat and oil products thereof, as revealed by these tables, leads us to the inevitable conclusion that unless we can find some way to increase the acreage and yield of the American farm we will be compelled to go upon the markets of the world within a few years to buy bread and meat to feed at least a portion of the American people.

Much of our farming in the past has been carried on in a sort of a haphazard way, with but little thought or care for the preservation of the life of the soil. Crops have been planted indiscriminately without reference to rotation, and when one of our fields failed to produce as bountifully as we anticipated, instead of searching for the cause, with a view of renewing the soil, we kept on in the old way, planting whatever happened to come handy until the land wore out. Then it was abandoned as an "old field" and left to grow up in bushes and wash full of gullies. The remedy was to clear up a new field to take its place. Much land has been lost in this way for a time, at least, and it will require the expenditure of much time, capital, and labor to reclaim it and make it productive.

NEW FIELDS.

But the new and uncultivated lands have most all been preempted long ago, and instead of replacing our "old fields" by clearing up new ones we are confronted with the proposition that there are but little or no new lands out of which to make new fields, and it would seem that our only hope is to renew our old fields, and keep renewing them annually, so that we may be able to maintain a steady increase of production in harmony with the increase of our population. In order to do this we are compelled to abandon our old methods of farming and adopt new and more skillful methods.

SCIENTIFIC FARMING.

The Department of Agriculture, agriculture experiment stations and agricultural schools in the various States are doing much to revolutionize farming and reduce it to a science. By chemical analyses they are able to determine the properties of soils, the quantity of plant-producing force contained therein, the kind of crop to be planted thereon, and the length of time any one crop can be successfully raised on a given soil. They can also tell what ingredient or ingredients, if any, are lacking in the soil for the production of certain crops and just what kind of fertilizer must be used thereon in order to make it yield bountifully. In many States they are making these tests by counties and townships, and preparing maps showing the rich and poor lands by a system of colorings on the maps, at the same time giving the chemical analyses of the soils, the quantity of plant-producing life contained therein, which enables the farmer to tell not only what kind of crops to plant on a given piece of soil, but enables him to tell how many crops he can raise on it in succession without endangering the life of the soil.

Many farmers of late have taken a deep interest in these experiments. They have organized farmers' institutes in many States, where they meet periodically for the purpose of discussing scientific farming. They often offer premiums for the best specimens of different farm products, and procure able men, learned in plant life and the properties of soils, to lecture on topics relating to the improvement in farming. While one of these lecturers is handling his subject a system of catechism often takes place. Everybody is at liberty to ask questions. I attended one of these meetings last fall in my district, and while one of the lecturers was on the floor discussing the properties of soils and how to treat the same in order to increase the yield, we became so interested in propounding questions to elicit specific information regarding our own lands that we kept the speaker on the floor an hour overtime without knowing his time had expired. Here I learned with much interest that old fields with a crop of sage only for many years, and "sour soil," which had refused to produce anything from time immemorial, had been reclaimed by the skillful hand of science and forced to give up their long hidden wealth. Mr. Chairman, if "sick" land can be healed by the prescription of the agricultural alchemist and restored to its virgin vigor, if the sage grass of the old field and the crawfish castles of sour land can be converted into bountiful crops of corn and wheat or inviting pastures of grass and clover by the magic touch of science, we may still hope that the full capacity of the American farm has not yet been measured.

RECLAMATION OF SWAMP AND OVERFLOW LAND.

Mr. Chairman, while we are wondering what to do and where to look for an increase in the acreage of the American farm, while we see annually a decided and an alarming decrease in the exports of the products of our farms, and realize that we are rapidly approaching the time when the American people will consume all the products of the American farm, and that thereafter we will be forced to enter the markets of the world to buy at least a portion of our food supply, which will increase in quantity in proportion to the increase in our population, we must admit that our Government has been active in searching for relief.

She has given to the "worn-out" lands of the Mississippi Valley and the Appalachian Slope a new touch of life by the application of fertilizers; she has aroused the sleeping Plains of the West by a system of irrigation and converted barren wastes into fruitful fields of agricultural hope and promise.

However, there is one source of supply which seems to have been much overlooked in the past, yet it is the richest and most productive of all other lands. It is a rich alluvial deposit scattered over 41 States with a soil sufficiently rich to raise 100 bushels of corn per acre for 50 years in succession; no hillsides to wash away; no barren plains to blast our hopes, but an everlasting corn-producing soil of 75,000,000 acres—the swamp lands of America—our greatest hope of increase to the acreage of the American farm. But little has been done by the Government to reclaim these lands, but now the time has come when they must be reclaimed. I presume that most all of it belongs to citizens, and but little, if any, is owned by the Government. For the benefit of the reader I submit the following table, by States:

The reclaimable swamp area, by States, according to the Statistical Abstract of the United States for 1910, issued by the Department of Commerce and Labor.

It will be seen that Illinois has more than two and one-half million acres of this swamp land. Mr. Chairman, there is still another class of land which needs the attention of the Government, and that is the overflow lands. They produce abundantly, but the crops are often destroyed entirely by destructive overflows. More than 500,000 acres of such lands lie in my district in Illinois. This district is composed of 11 counties, bounded on the east by the Big Wabash River and on the south by the Ohio River. Many streams traverse it from the north and northeast to the east and south, among which are the Little Wabash River, the Big Saline and Little Saline Rivers, Grandpier Creek, Lusk Creek, and Bay Creek, with many other smaller streams, all of whose waters empty into the Big Wabash and Ohio Rivers. All of these rivers overflow their valleys occasionally and destroy property worth millions of dollars. A lock and dam has been constructed by the Government in the Big Wabash River near Mount Carmel, Ill., but little, if any improvements have been made above this point. Nothing has been done to improve the Little Wabash River, Big Saline and Little Saline Rivers, Lusk Creek, Grandpier Creek, and Bay Creek, all of which can be made navigable streams, sufficient to give to the people of my district and other portions of southern Illinois cheap water transportation for marketing their entire crops. The district is purely agricultural and raises an immense crop of corn and wheat annually, much of which is often overflowed and destroyed. These streams are long and very crooked, narrow and shallow in places, caused by a filling-up process of deposits, which is common in all streams not cared for. In the fall of 1910 much of this valley land was inundated and a crop of corn yielding from 100 to 150 bushels per acre was destroyed. It was caused by the accumulation of headwaters, which could not find an outlet because of the narrow, shallow, and crooked condition of these streams. The Government is prepared with boats, machinery, and labor for dredging the channels of rivers, and if these streams were deepened by a system of dredging, beginning at the mouth and extending upstream for a few miles, an easy and rapid flow of the water would be attained, thereby preventing the accumulation of headwater, resulting in destructive overflows. This is what must be done before these lands can be properly reclaimed.

I am told by some of my colleagues that all of these lands are owned by citizens and that whatever improvements are made by the Government will result in the increase of the value of private property, and for this reason the owners of the lands ought to do the work and pay for it; while others who are more learned in constitutional law say that there is no power in the Constitution to appropriate money out of the Treasury to improve private property. I would do no violence to the Federal Constitution, neither would I be in favor of doing anything which would establish a dangerous precedent; but, gentlemen, you must remember that if these streams were reclaimed and made navigable, they would deal directly with interstate commerce, a subject which is directly under the jurisdiction of Congress.

Again, it must be remembered that the cost of making navigable streams and maintaining them is too big a proposition for any farmer or any number of farmers. It is unfair and unreasonable, and too late to try to shift this responsibility upon the shoulers of the farmers. The United States has taken upon herself long ago this duty.

Mr. Chairman, agriculture is fundamental in character, and its consideration ought to be of first importance throughout the world. It is the oldest as well as the most useful occupation, having commenced when Adam was driven out of the Garden of Eden because of his transgressions. Upon it all other occupations must depend for support; without it none can prosper. He who seeks to retard agriculture strikes a blow at civilization and becomes an enemy to mankind. He who seeks to extend the area of the farm or to increase its annual production is a public benefactor. The hungry must be fed, the naked must be clothed, and the shivering must be sheltered. Let no one vote against this appropriation, lest it be said of him that his action has increased the pangs of hunger among the poor and driven the helpless to despair. Let our votes be unanimous for the farmer, unanimous for larger areas and bigger crops.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HOWARD. The gentleman from Illinois is not discussing the point of order made by his colleague, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I am trying to bore out the boll weevil from the cotton bolls of Georgia—the gentleman's State. [Laughter.]

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, I again rise to a point of order. The gentleman is not discussing the point of order raised by the gentleman from Illinois.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois will discuss the point of order.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, the distinguished gentleman from Atlanta——

Mr. HOWARD. No; Georgia.

Mr. FOWLER. Who lives in a city bigger than his State——

Mr. HOWARD. Oh, no.

Mr. FOWLER. I presume does not want anything else discussed on the floor of this House except that which pertains to his own great city.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, I respectfully make another point of order that the gentleman is not confining himself to the point of order under discussion.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD upon this subject.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks upon this subject in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LAMB. Mr. Chairman, if this situation were so that I could close this debate I would do it, but I can not, and I therefore appeal to gentlemen to please let us get along as soon as possible.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the Chair will notice that this paragraph is not for farm drainage, and is not connected with farm drainage at all. It is to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to investigate and report upon the drainage of swamp and other wet lands, and so forth. The meaning of that is the investigation of the drainage of swamps. It already has been used for the purpose of making an investigation of the drainage of the Everglades, and properly so, as covered by the language of the bill. That authority is not conferred anywhere in the act creating the Department of Agriculture, or in any law upon the subject. This matter has already been ruled upon. I do not know whether the Chair has the ruling or not. A few years ago a point of order was made upon this item and the matter was discussed at some length, and the Chair sustained the point of order. The item went out on a point of order upon the ground that it was not within the purview of the act creating the Department of Agriculture, or any other act of Congress that the department should have the authority to make investigations into the drainage of swamps throughout the country. I respectfuly insist that the former ruling ought to be followed now for the same reason, and I therefore make the point of order.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be heard very briefly upon the point of order. I do not at all agree with the conclusions reached by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] as to the correctness of a former ruling of the Chair upon this proposition or upon his own deductions. It is true that a point of order some four or five years ago was made against this paragraph, and without any serious discussion, as I remember, the point of order was held to be well taken. I desire, however, to call the attention of the Chair to the fact that the decisions of committee chairmen touching items in the agricultural appropriation bill have been influenced very largely by the constructions placed upon the organic act creating the department by these chairmen. If they were liberal in construction, such propositions as these were ruled to be in order; otherwise, out of order. I desire to call the attention of the Chair to section 520 of the statutes creating the Department of Agriculture, that section being the organic act. I read:

> There shall be at the seat of government a Department of Agriculture, the general design and duties of which shall be to acquire and diffuse among the people of the United States useful information on subjects connected with agriculture in the most general and comprehensive sense of that word.

If the Chair is convinced in his mind that the purpose of these investigations primarily affect agriculture and its development, and must necessarily affect agriculture, then the Chair must hold the point of order to be not well taken.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question in that connection?

Mr. LEVER. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. If the appropriation provided in this paragraph could be used under its terms for other purposes than those connected with agriculture, does the gentleman think it would be in order under that provision of law?

Mr. LEVER. On that very proposition I desire to call the gentleman's attention, and that of the Chair also, to a ruling of the Chair in a former Congress, and the Chairman of the committee at that time happened to be the gentleman's colleague, Mr. Boutell. The ruling was in this respect: I offered an amendment as a new paragraph providing "for exploration and investigation within the United States to determine a possible source of supply of potash, nitrates, and other natural fertilizers." The chairman of the Committee on Agriculture, then Mr. Scott, reserved the point of order. The merits of the proposition were discussed for some time, and finally the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Moss] made the point of order against the amendment. The Chair ruled in this language, holding the amendment in order:

> It is quite apparent from the language of the fundamental law that the Secretary of Agriculture is given very broad powers for making different investigations here in furtherance of the interest of agriculture, and the Chair is inclined to think from a careful reading of this amendment, and especially the words "and other natural fertilizers," that it is clear the investigation as to the source of supply of potash and nitrates are clearly in furtherance of the interest of agriculture; in other words, that it comes within the broad powers given to the Secretary.

And it seems to me, following the reasoning of the Chair in this case, if the present occupant of the chair can be satisfied in his own mind that this appropriation is to be used and is being used in furtherance of agriculture, then the point of order is not well taken. That is all I desire to say upon the point of order. The conclusion on the main proposition is inevitable.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, if I remember rightly I made an argument in favor of the gentleman's amendment upon the point of order before my colleague from Illinois. That item was clearly in order, but that has nothing to do with this item at all. There is no pretense in this item that it is even for the drainage of agricultural lands. There is no pretense that it has anything to do with agricultural lands. As to the first part of the paragraph—

> To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to investigate and report upon the drainage of swamp and other wet lands—

That may have no relation to agriculture whatever. There are lots of swamp lands that are being drained for the purpose of building upon them. I own a small amount of property—not very much—in the city of Chicago which used to be a swamp. It is drained. It is not drained for agricultural purposes. This appropriation could have been used for that purpose. The potash appropriation was for agricultural purposes, quite a different proposition, and the Chair can not stop with saying that it is for the removal of surplus waters by drainage and inject into that the words "for farm purposes," and that it is to report upon the drainage of swamp and other wet lands "for farm purposes." It is not for the determination, as the gentleman suggests, of what the Chair thinks may be done with the money. The question is, What does the language of the paragraph provide?

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Illinois does not contend that the potash amendment, to which he referred in terms, says that the results of those investigations would have to be used for farm purposes.

Mr. MANN. No; but there was no way by which you could discover natural sources of potash in this country without affecting the farm industry, without providing material for necessary fertilizers. This money could all be expended without a dollar of it affecting farm or agricultural industries in any direction whatever.

Mr. LEVER. It seems to me that is a point of discretion for the Chair.

Mr. MANN. It is not for the Chair to determine whether he thinks it will be expended for agricultural purposes. He does not know how it will be expended. The fact that it has been expended in the past in one direction is no criterion. The language of the amendment must control, and it is not pretended that it is confined to farm purposes in any way.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has given this paragraph some little attention, and has studied in connection therewith the ruling of a former Chairman of the Committee of the Whole when this identical language was under consideration. The Chair is aware that at that time the identical language was held subject to a point of order. The objection is made that the language does not limit these activities or investigations to land which would be the subject of agriculture. As far as that point is concerned, the Chair is not able to see the distinction between this paragraph and numerous other paragraphs in the bill, including the one in regard to natural deposits of potash. It is perfectly apparent that there are a great many of the activities of the Department of Agriculture that may be advantageous in manufacturing, and some possibly in mining, but if the main purpose must necessarily be agricultural, it undoubtedly would come within the scope and powers of the Department of Agriculture.

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] says that it is impossible to conceive of a discovery of a natural deposit of potash or other natural fertilizer which would not directly affect agriculture, and the same argument applies to the drainage of swamp lands, that it is impossible to conceive of the drainage of swamp land that would not affect agriculture, not only at that locality, but of the entire country dependent for its food supply upon agricultural land available in the market. The Chair is unable to see anything in the scope of that paragraph that removes it at all from the general jurisdiction of the Department of Agriculture, and with the exception of a very small technical point, the Chair would be entirely convinced that the paragraph was in order, and was within the powers of the Department of Agriculture.

The language of the section is that the money shall be expended for the employment of labor in the city of Washington and elsewhere and for rent outside of the District of Columbia. The language of the decisions—not one isolated decision on a particular set of words, but a long line of precedents establishing a general rule of construction in this House—has been that language in an appropriation bill attempting to give the head of a department power to employ labor is limited to the department in the city of Washington. That being a general line of precedents, and well settled by repeated decisions, the Chair feels bound to follow it. The Chair must very reluctantly, therefore, sustain the point of order.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina, a member of the committee, offers an amendment.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa rose.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, my amendment is as follows:

On page 73, at the end of line 8, insert as a new paragraph the following:

"Drainage investigation: To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to investigate and report upon the drainage of swamp and other wet lands which may be made available for agricultural purposes, and to prepare plans for the removal of surplus waters by drainage from such lands, and for the preparation and illustration of reports and bulletins on drainage, including the employment of labor in the city of Washington and elsewhere, and rent outside of the District of Columbia, and all necessary expenses, $96,700."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order on the amendment.

Mr. LEVER. Then I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will send his amendment to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by inserting, after line 8, the following:

"Drainage investigation: To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to investigate and report upon the drainage of swamp and other wet lands which may be made available for agricultural purposes, and to prepare plans for the removal of surplus waters by drainage from such lands, and for the preparation and illustration of reports and bulletins on drainage, including the employment of labor in the city of Washington, and all necessary expenses, $96,700."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order on the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is overruled.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I want to offer an amendment to strike out "$96,700" and make it "$200,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] offers an amendment to the amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the amendment by striking out the words "ninety-six thousand seven hundred" and inserting in lieu thereof "two hundred thousand."

Mr. LAMB. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this paragraph and amendment thereto close in five minutes.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I object. I hope the gentleman will not insist on that motion.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Give me one minute.

Mr. LAMB. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] has been standing up here for reduction, retrenchment, and reform, and now what is he doing? [Laughter.]

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Here is an important item.

Mr. MADDEN. I hope the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. LAMB] will not make that motion.

Mr. LAMB. My friend from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] is so amiable and gentle that I move that the debate close in 10 minutes.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that that motion is not in order at this time. When an amendment is offered, the rule is specific that there shall be five minutes' debate before such a motion as the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. LAMB] is now making.

Mr. LAMB. I will make it 15 minutes, if that will be satisfactory.

Mr. MANN. Could we get an agreement to close debate?

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto be closed in 15 minutes.

Mr. MADDEN. Make it 30 minutes.

Mr. LEVER. Make it 20 minutes.

Mr. MADDEN. I would prefer that it be 30 minutes. There are some gentlemen on the floor here who have not taken up the time of the committee at all. I am going to object——

Mr. LEVER. Make it 20 minutes.

Mr. LAMB. Can not we agree to make it 20 minutes? I will let my friend have five minutes, and then I will make the motion at the proper time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN] is recognized.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I dislike to take up the time of the committee, although I have not, I believe, so far said one word with reference to this bill. I have listened very carefully to the arguments which have been adduced in support of the measure which is now proposed in a somewhat different form, and none of them seems to me to be valid. The Government of the United States, Mr. Chairman, may properly undertake a work which a State is not able to carry on, or which a State could not carry on in a proper manner, or to an extent which would seem necessary. But it is not proper, in my judgment, that this Government should spend money upon an undertaking which is already being carried on by the respective States and in various localities in a manner which leaves little, if anything, to be desired. If there is anything connected with this matter which is not the subject of a mathematical calculation, I know not what it is. Drainage is an exact science. It needs only a sufficient knowledge of engineering and how to apply the well-known rules of gravitation in order to put it in operation. It is already being done, as I have said, in the communities of my own State, where in the northern part there has been more than $1,000,000 spent in the reclamation of flat lands. Along the Missouri River in my own State, and in that of Missouri, the various drainage districts have undertaken this work, which they understand perfectly, and which they are carrying out in a most successful manner. Why, therefore, should the Government go into this matter? What occasion has been given? What need is there for it? What is the reason that the United States should undertake this kind of business? It needs no elaborate, scientific research in order to carry on a drainage proposition. As I have said before, it is a simple matter of engineering, which ordinarily the county surveyor is amply competent to lay out and carry through, if the necessary money is provided. It is true it will produce great benefits and great profits to the owners of the land. I have known many instances where land worth almost nothing was, after these drainage propositions had been carried through successfully, worth a hundred to one hundred and fifty dollars an acre, and sometimes more. But why should the Government contribute to it when these very parties who own this land, if the State will only provide proper laws for the creation of drainage districts, are able to carry it on? There is no trouble in their obtaining money for it. They have not had any difficulties of the kind in my region, or anywhere else of which I know. I think this provision should go out of this bill.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I offered the amendment to increase this appropriation, because, in my judgment, the appropriation is too small for the purposes for which it is intended in this bill, and I believe that the Government can well afford to appropriate the additional amount for this purpose. I believe if we do take up this subject in a more extensive way than we are now doing, in the course of a year or two we will see one of the greatest results that we have seen produced in the Department of Agriculture. I hope the amendment will prevail.

Mr. REDFIELD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Certainly.

Mr. REDFIELD. It is my understanding, Mr. Chairman, that there is one very strong reason why some, at least, of this work must be done by the National Government and can not be done by the States, even if they are ready and willing to do it. That is because the larger projects of this kind are directly connected with the improvement of navigable streams. The great areas of swamp lands, involving large problems of hydraulic engineering, can not be drained by any merely local process, but they have to be drained into and form a portion of the improvement of navigable waters. That has been the case, if I am correctly informed, in the State of New York; it has been the case, I am told, in other States. And in order to get that unity of action requisite it is necessary to have the supervision of the Government engineers.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will my colleague yield to a question?

Mr. REDFIELD. Yes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. If this work were to be done in connection with the improvement of navigable streams, could it not be more profitably done by the Army engineers who have charge of that work?

Mr. REDFIELD. I think undoubtedly it would have to be done by Army engineers. But as to this paragraph, it is for the purpose of finding out what the conditions are—whether they are such conditions as require the attention of the National Government or not—and I can see no possible objection to learning what the truth is. Now, as regards this work being done by any engineer, and being, as the gentleman said, a small task of engineering, I will agree, Mr. Chairman, it is a small task when the engineer has learned how.

But, having spent some years myself in connection with engineering plans, it is my understanding that there are very few, a very limited number, of men in this country who have the experience requisite to deal with such drainage problems on a large scale. The great examples of drainage in this world are European examples, and there is certainly one case which I recall where it has been necessary to send to Holland to find men experienced in drainage on a scale large enough to deal with the problem. It is not a matter of an acre or two, but it is a matter of draining large areas, large volumes of water, which may seriously affect navigable waters. I trust the amendment will prevail.

Mr. TALCOTT of New York. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman from New York to tell us what portion of the drainage of New York has been done by the General Government.

Mr. REDFIELD. In response to the question of my colleague from New York, I will say that I know of no drainage that has been done in the State of New York by the Federal Government, but one of the great jobs to be done by the State of New York might, I am informed, radically affect the improvement of the Oswego River. I think any engineer will agree that the drainage of large areas must be considered—not always, but often—in connection with the possible improvement of navigable waters.

Mr. LAMB. Mr. Chairman, I move that debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto be closed in five minutes.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I hope that the gentleman from Virginia will not press his motion at this time.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Virginia will give the gentleman the five minutes, if he desires it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. LAMB] moves that debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto be closed in five minutes. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that serious objection exists to the passage of the original amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER], but a still more serious objection exists to the amendment offered by my colleague [Mr. FOSTER].

The Government of the United States ought not to enter upon a work of this kind. The States of the Union are amply able to do the work of reclaiming the swamp lands, and the Federal Treasury ought not to be dipped into for a purpose such as this. It is all very well for men who own large tracts of swamp land to have the Government of the United States come to their aid to drain the land in order that the land may become more valuable, and in order that they as individuals may be able to get more money for what they have to sell; but we are entering upon a dangerous field when we undertake to say that the Government of the United States should develop the lands of the country that may be under water now. The owners of the lands themselves should pay for the drainage, and if they need any information as to how their land should be drained the States in which they live can furnish them with that information. Every State in the Union has a college of some kind in which this kind of work is done, and all of these colleges are glad to send men into every locality in their States to furnish the information and to make the investigation upon which the work can be entered upon intelligently.

If we begin by making this appropriation, we will have established a precedent under which, within a year or two, appropriations will be called for, requiring not only the expenditure of the money necessary to employ the men engaged in this work in the city of Washington, but to appropriate money required to drain the swamps and pay for the draining of the swamps out of the Federal Treasury. We ought not to do it. I protest against it. It is not wise. It is unjust. It is unbusinesslike. It ought not to be entered upon. It is a State function, and the States should be allowed to still continue to perform that function, with which they are properly charged under the law. The United States Treasury ought not to be raided for this or any similar purposes.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. FINLEY). All debate is closed on this paragraph. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] to the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER].

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have the amendment reported again.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. BORLAND). The Clerk will again report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the amendment by striking out the words "ninety-six thousand seven hundred" and inserting the words "two hundred thousand."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER].

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that he was in doubt.

Mr. LEVER. A division, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Those in favor of the amendment will rise and stand until they are counted. [After a pause.] The ayes will be seated and the noes will rise. On this vote the ayes are 26 and the noes are 37.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I ask for tellers on that.

SEVERAL MEMBERS. Oh, no!

Mr. LEVER. Gentlemen, you are voting against this whole drainage proposition.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chairman appointed Mr. LEVER and Mr. GREEN of Iowa.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 41, noes 40.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Total for Office of Experiment Stations, $1,866,000.

Mr. LEVY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. LEVY] moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. LEVY. Mr. Chairman, I think this method of renting public buildings in the District of Columbia for the use of the United States Government is a great mistake.

We ought to have some other system, and I regret exceedingly that the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MCLAUGHLIN] should have objected to my request for unanimous consent to return to page 68. The manner in which the rentals are determined for public buildings in the District of Columbia is very crude. For instance, on page 68, line 18, of this bill there is an appropriation of $25,075 for the rent of the building occupied by the Forestry Service. This building is located at 928 and 930 F Street. The total assessed valuation of the building and land is $138,600. For the rent of the ground floor the owners of the building receive $3,600 a year, which makes the total rental $28,675 a year. The appropriation asked for is the return on a valuation of $200,000, or over 14 per cent gross to the owners. The Government occupies seven floors of this building, which was erected in 1887 and which at the present time is a very dangerous building in case of fire.

I desired to amend the section by inserting the words "fifteen thousand" instead of the words "twenty-five thousand and seventy-five dollars." I hope the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MCLAUGHLIN] will allow me to ask unanimous consent to go back to page 68, line 18, and strike out "twenty-five thousand and seventy-five dollars" and insert "fifteen thousand dollars."

Mr. LAMB. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I understand my colleague to say we are paying $25,000 a year rent for a building which is worth $120,000?

Mr. LEVY. No. The land is assessed on the books of the assessor's office of the District of Columbia at $78,000, and the building at $60,000; but, to be fair, I think the ground is worth $125,000.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is assessed, under the law, at two-thirds of the real valuation. The valuation would be $180,000, and for part of it they obtain $25,075?

Mr. LEVY. Yes; and the owners receive $3,600 a year for the ground floor.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That shows why it is profitable in this District to rent buildings to the Government.

Mr. LAMB. Mr. Chairman, I wish the gentleman from New York [Mr. LEVY] had stated something of that sort to Mr. Zappone, the disbursing officer of the Department of Agriculture, and to the Secretary. In that case they would have arranged these matters. We can not work them out in detail here.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. LEVY] asks unanimous consent to go back to the paragraph on page 68, line 18, for the purpose of offering an amendment.

Mr. LEVER. I object, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, we could not hear anything that was said.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For inquiries in regard to systems of road management throughout the United States and for giving expert advice on this subject, $25,000.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the word "twenty-five," in line 6, and insert the word "fifty."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Idaho [Mr. FRENCH] moves to strike out the word "twenty-five," in line 6, and insert the word "fifty."

Mr. LAMB. What page and line is that on?

Mr. FRENCH. On page 75, line 6.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, I am one of the Members of this Congress who believe that the Agricultural Department does more practical service for the people of the country than probably any other department within our organization. When we think of the tremendous benefit that has come to the farmers of the country as a result of the work of the Agricultural Department in connection with animal industry, in connection with grains and fruits, in connection with the handling of the soil in order that it may produce the most with the least waste, in connection with a thousand subjects that are of vital interest to the farmers especially and the people generally of the country, we are bound to appreciate the importance that this department has assumed in our political organization.

A few days ago, while this bill was under consideration, I was one of a comparatively small number of Members who voted against the appropriation for a continuation of the distribution of free seeds throughout the United States. I believed at that time, as I have believed for a number of years, that the money that is spent in the distribution of seeds could be better spent by the Department of Agriculture in inquiry along lines of interest to the growers of live stock or experiments of interest to agriculturists or pomologists, or if not so spent could be better saved. I do not believe that the people are asking for the distribution of seeds in the manner that has been practiced by our Government, and, while I am frank to say that I believe every Member of Congress should dispose of his quota of the allotment in the spirit of the law, so long as the appropriation shall be made, I still think that in doing so he is simply helping the people of the country to make the best out of a bad bargain which is made when the Government goes into the general seed business without due regard to the quality of the seeds distributed, without due regard for the various conditions under which they may be grown, and when no reports are required from those who receive them. There is a large and important work that the department is doing when it sends out test seeds for scientific and practical experimental purposes upon the part of the farmer and when the farmer makes valuable observation and report to the Government. I do not refer to this, and this great work ought to go on. I do refer to the popular distribution of seeds that are purchased in the market and distributed by Members of Congress without any idea of report therefrom.

The amendment that I have proposed calls for an increase of $25,000 in the appropriation looking to the encouragement of better road building within the United States. This is one-tenth or less than that of the amount set apart for the purchase of seeds, and I believe that this one-tenth, if this Congress can see fit to authorize its expenditure, will be productive of more real good than the entire appropriation that will be spent for seeds to be purchased indiscriminately and to be distributed indiscriminately throughout the United States.

It must be apparent to everyone conversant with the relation of our highways to property values that good roads bear a vital relation not only to the convenience of the traveling public but to the value of farm lands and the profit that can be made upon every commodity or product that the farmer has to sell. It is a well-known fact that it costs the people of the United States more than twice as much to haul a wagonload of produce a mile as it costs the people of Europe to do the same piece of work. The reason for this is, the States of our country, as a general thing, have poor roads, while the countries of Europe, as a general thing, have splendid highways. It costs in the United States, on an average, something like 25 cents per ton per mile to bring the products of the American farmer to the markets and, where there are no markets, to the railroads or other shipping points from which the products can be sent to market. It costs 10 cents per ton per mile to our neighbors in Europe to do the same work. To-day our agricultural products aggregate more than eight billions of dollars in value every year. Just what the weight of all this vast amount of various kinds of products may be I have not the means of knowing, because, naturally, it is composed of a variety of commodities. Part of it is corn, part of it is wheat, part of it is fruit, part of it is butter and eggs, part of it is cotton in the South, but at any rate it aggregates such a vast amount that it is estimated that not less than half a billion of dollars is thrown away every year because of poor roads.

I say that half a billion of dollars is thrown away every year. I mean by that that here is an expense that no one receives profit from. There are classes of expenses that are hard to bear, but result in some good to some one, but the half billion of dollars that is spent annually in the hauling of farm products to markets over poor roads, in excess of that which the farmer would need to pay out with good roads, constitutes an item that is a total loss to him and that does not go to the profit of anyone.

When we think that half a billion of dollars is half as much as it costs us annually to run our Government; when we think that half a billion of dollars is nearly as much as has been spent in the history of the country in the improvement of our waterways and harbors; when we think that it is more than twice as much as has been expended in public buildings throughout the United States; when we think that it is equal to the estimated value of all the timber on our national forests, exclusive of Alaska, we are impressed with the waste that is going on.

Measured in another way, every farmer can figure it out for himself that it costs him on an average 25 cents per ton per mile to haul his commodities to market, and that more than half of this—that is, 15 cents per ton—is loss on account of poor roads. Let him multiply the number of tons that he has to haul by the number of miles, and then let him figure this at 15 cents per ton, and he can approximate for himself just what his individual loss is because he is compelled to haul his produce over poor roads. Of course, in some places it would be more and some places less, and I speak of average conditions only.

The amendment that I have proposed, if enacted into law, would provide only a small amount of money with which the Department of Agriculture may conduct examinations into the question of road building. The best material could be ascertained for each locality, the best kind of roads could be inquired into for each section of the country, and information that would immediately help those who are interested in every locality in good roads could be disseminated that would work incalculable good to our people. This amendment looks merely to experimental work and aid that our Government in an advisory way could give to the farmers generally.

Last summer I introduced a bill looking to cooperative road building to be carried on by the Federal Government, the States, and the several counties within the States. I shall not attempt to give in detail the terms of the bill. In brief, however, I provided in the bill that the Government appropriate annually about as much as it costs for the building of two or three battleships, $20,000,000. I provided that this money should be apportioned among the States in proportion to the population, not including the population of cities of more than 30,000 people. I provided that any State might have its share of the appropriation upon showing that the State itself and the county within the State to be benefited would each bear one-third of the expenses for the construction of a given road. I provided further that the general plan of construction and the supervision of roads should be under the direction of the Good Roads Division of the Department of Agriculture.

I want to call attention to one or two features of this plan by way of explanation. There are some who would have the money apportioned according to population. Manifestly, such an apportionment would be unfair because it would give to some States that have cities containing a million or two million population a tremendous advantage over States whose population is scattered widely in agricultural sections. I think that the mention of this provision is enough to carry conviction that some basis of distribution must be agreed upon other than that of population. Maybe the basis that I have suggested is not the correct one, but that is a matter of detail that can be worked out, and probably the friends of Federal aid to good roads will need to give and take a little in their ideas on this question in the working out of all the features to be considered.

Another feature to which I would call especial attention is that which provides that each State and county receiving aid shall bear its third of the expenses, providing the Government will bear the other third. There are some who say, Why not have the Federal Government bear all the cost? My answer is this: The people will have to pay for road building, no matter whether the Federal Government bears all of the expense or only a portion of it, as I have proposed in my bill. So, in the long run, it will not make any great difference. I have tried, however, to provide a system by which the Government could bear its part of the responsibility without the charge being made that the Government was playing politics or favorites with this county or that county, with this locality or that locality, on account of the political pull that some person might have or think that he might have. I believe that the plan that I have proposed will safeguard this absolutely, and that in every section of the country, every county can have Federal aid under the plan that I have proposed just as soon as it can be able to satisfy the State authorities that it is ready to bear its third of the expenses and just as soon as the State would be able to assure the Federal Government that it too is ready to bear its third. This is the plan that I would provide, and I would have these roads taken up and constructed in the order of their application.

There are some who may not be ready to accept the idea of Federal aid in road building and look upon it as a novel scheme. May I suggest that every important country of Europe to-day lends federal aid to the building of good roads. We are told that France has the most satisfactory roads in the entire world; but France did not have such roads until the French Government by national aid cooperated with the localities in the construction of good roads. We are told that Germany and Italy and Great Britain have good roads, but not one of these countries had good roads until the national government took up the question of road building, instead of leaving the problem alone to the localities. More than that, the question is not necessarily a new one in our country, so far as theory is concerned. The last Republican national platform contended most emphatically for good roads in language which reads as follows:

> We recognize the social and economic advantages of good country roads, maintained more and more largely at public expense and less and less at the expense of the abutting property owner.

The last Democratic platform, which was prepared shortly after the Republican platform, is not less strong and reads as follows:

> We favor Federal aid to State and local authorities in the construction and maintenance of post roads.

I am not much surprised that the Republican Party four years ago should have declared in such straightforward language its faith in Federal assistance in road building, but it is a matter not only of some surprise but of profound congratulation that the Democratic Party, which has stood so emphatically for the doctrine of State and local rights, should have out-Heroded Herod in advocacy of Federal cooperation in road building. So, I say, both of the great political parties are fairly well committed to the idea.

But this is not all the recognition that has come to the subject by those who have been intrusted with the responsibility in the matter of making careful inquiries into the question. In 1908 Mr. Roosevelt appointed a commission that was known as the Country Life Commission, the purpose of which was to inquire into the great subject of country life, and probably the chief idea for this inquiry was the drifting of the people from rural communities to the cities. This commission made its report, and in the report the question of good roads came in for its share of consideration and elicited from the commission attention which was finally summed up in the language which I shall quote:

> The demand for good highways is general among the farmers of the entire United States. Education and good roads are the two needs most frequently mentioned in the hearings. Highways that are usable at all times of the year are now imperative not only for the marketing of produce but for the elevation of the social and intellectual status of the open country and the improvement of health by insuring better medical and surgical attendance. The advantages are so well understood that arguments for better roads are not necessary here. Our respondents are now concerned largely with the methods of organizing and financing the work. With only unimportant exceptions, the farmers who have expressed themselves to us on this question consider the Federal Government is fairly under obligation to aid in the work. We hold that the development of a fully serviceable highway system is a matter of national concern, coordinate with the development of waterways and the conservation of our native resources. It is absolutely essential to our internal development. The first thing necessary is to provide expert supervision and direction and to develop a national plan. All the work should be cooperative between the Federal Government and the States. The question of Federal appropriation for highway work in the States may well be held in abeyance until a national service is provided and tested. We suggest that the United States Government establish a highway engineering service or equivalent organization to be at the call of the States in working out effective and economical highway systems.

Again the Secretary of Agriculture, in the Yearbook for 1910, finally concluded his consideration of the problem of public highways within the United States by saying:

> In every State the sentiment is strongly in favor of effective highway legislation, and in most of the States not having adopted it new legislation, either enacted or pressed for enactment, will embrace in some form or other the principle of State aid or State supervision.

So I say the question is not new or novel from the theoretical standpoint, even though we have been slow in placing it into execution.

The Government should have part in this work of road building, because it will be an economical thing to do. The most of the roads that have been built in our country until within the last few years were built upon the responsibility of the locality interested. Most of our roads until comparatively recent years were built by volunteer work by members of the locality, which work was measurably satisfactory, and by the working out of poll taxes and road taxes, which is not satisfactory and which is condemned by the farmers from one end of our country to the other. If the same amount of money represented by the sum that is supposed to be worked out in road taxes every year could be judiciously spent upon roads receiving the benefit, probably not less than two or three times as much could be accomplished in the way of road building, even if the money was to be spent under the direction of the road supervisors, who would be elected in every community to handle the disposition of the same.

But this plan of road construction is being discarded by the various States of the Union, and our farmers are beginning to realize more and more that the parts of the country which are developing good roads are the sections where State and counties are cooperating in a large degree in the matter of road construction.

The idea of county and State cooperation in road building is one that is comparatively new, and although we have had but a few years' experience the results have been so satisfactory that many States have attempted the system and are now building their roads in large part by means of State assistance. They have found out these things—that they get better roads; that they are enabled to provide a suitable engineer, who can assist in outlining a plan for a comprehensive system of roads for a locality; and that by carrying out this general plan, and all working together for its completion, they can attain infinitely better results than where a short stretch of road is built by one community, another short stretch by another community, and so on throughout the country. Another thing that they have found out is that they get more for their money. And, after all, from the practical standpoint, when it comes to public affairs this is a prime consideration to be borne in mind by every farmer.

Finally, then, I am in favor of Federal aid in road building because our Government for a hundred years has been giving Federal aid to projects that it was believed would work to the general good of our country. Within our own time the Federal Government has spent nearly half a billion of dollars in the improvement of our rivers and harbors. Within our own time the Government has expended, and will have expended within the next few years, nearly half a billion of dollars for the construction of the Panama Canal. Within comparatively recent years the Federal Government has expended a quarter of a million of dollars for the erection of buildings to house the offices of the Government scattered throughout the United States. Within the last comparatively few years the Federal Government has donated to the railroads of the United States nearly 200,000,000 acres of land as a bonus upon condition that the railroads would construct their lines into sections of the country that it was believed it would be desirable to be opened up. We are not asking that any appropriation be made that could even be compared with anything that I have suggested here. So far as this item is concerned, it is insignificant. Even if the plan that I have mentioned of Federal aid in the general building of roads be considered, the cost would be small to the Government in comparison with the moneys that have been spent for economic reasons in the manner that I have indicated. Yet, in spite of this, probably no sum that we could expend would net more of genuine profit in dollars and cents to the agricultural communities than that which we could expend for the development of our public highways.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. FRENCH].

The question being taken, the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For investigations of the best methods of road making and the best kinds of road-making materials, and for furnishing expert advice on road building and maintenance, $75,000.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by striking out the words "seventy-five," in lines 9 and 10, on page 75, and inserting in lieu thereof the words "one hundred."

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, I believe there is no subject that has been considered by this committee which is of more importance to the people of the whole country than the question of the improvement of the public roads. It is not important merely to one section. It reaches into every part of this broad land. I regret to see that the estimates made by the department for this work have been cut down by the committee in this bill over $35,000. It seems to me that there is no other item of the appropriation bill that could have been more consistently kept up to the estimates of the department than this one, and, Mr. Chairman, I desire especially——

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, we have, as a matter of fact, increased the appropriation $15,000 over the amount of last year.

Mr. TOWNER. Yes; I want to do justice to the committee in regard to that. It is true that a slight increase has been made over the appropriation of last year, but in no other line has there been such a tremendous advance, and for no other work has there been such an imperative demand, and when we consider the modest increase asked for by the department to meet this demand it would seem as if it were plainly our duty to grant it.

THE WORK OF THE DEPARTMENT.

The director in his report calls attention to the fact that the present may be considered the most important period in the history of road improvement in the United States. All over the country the old localized systems of road making and supervision have been abandoned and State or centralized systems are being substituted with higher standards and larger expenditures. This brings with it the necessity of expert investigation and greater knowledge. But the investigation and knowledge of one State can be made available for all only through the medium of the General Government. Hence this office of the Department of Agriculture has been instituted and is advising and in every way assisting the States in the accomplishment of this great work.

It has conducted laboratory and field investigation to determine the physical and chemical composition of road materials and preservations. Economic investigations are made to determine the effect of good and bad roads on the prices of lands as affecting the prices of farm products, and upon the social relations and moral welfare of rural communities. Statistical investigations are being made as to the mileage of roads of various classes and the cost of improvement of various kinds. Assignments of engineers have been made for the purpose of giving advice in special cases. Actual construction has been done in cooperation with local authorities of object lesson and experimental roads to demonstrate standard types of road construction, to introduce new methods, to experiment with new materials, and to instruct local road officials in the proper methods of road building. Competent engineers and experts are developing plans by which the entire road system of a given locality is studied, its soil, its materials for road making, its various means of construction, maintenance, and administration. Upon these plans detailed reports and estimates for the use of the local authorities can be prepared, giving all data of value, together with recommendations and detailed plans and estimates for future work. Besides this, lectures and addresses by road experts are being given, road-improvement trains are sent over the railways, and thousands of bulletins are published and circulated. It is neither true economy nor a wise policy to cut down the moderate and reasonable estimates of the department for the carrying on and developing of this important work.

THE GROWTH OF THE MOVEMENT.

The modern good-roads movement began in 1885 and was largely inspired and stimulated by the invention and use of the bicycle.

The wheelmen organized and began issuing literature calling attention to the poor condition of the country roads and the great loss occasioned thereby. The press assisted in educating public sentiment and State aid was secured in many States for permanent road improvement.

In 1893 the Office of Public Roads was organized as a bureau of the Department of Agriculture. A small appropriation was made available, and the General Government began in a small way the work of disseminating information, testing materials, and giving instruction, both theoretical and practical, in road making.

The last step and principal stimulus has come with the introduction and use of the automobile. It has created a much greater interest generally, and it has created organized effort, which is the most effective method of securing results.

A GREAT SUBJECT.

Coincident with what may be called these adventitious stimulants to progress has come an appreciation of the inherent importance which this part of the transportation problem possesses. More than 300 years ago Lord Bacon wrote:

There be three things which make a country great and prosperous—a fertile soil, busy workshops, and easy conveyance for men and things from place to place.

We possessed the first requisite, a fertile soil, in supremest measure as a gift of Providence. We acquired the second, busy workshops, under the fostering eye of wise legislation, through the energy, inventive genius, and industrial skill of American workingmen. The third and last requisite is transportation, and for the last half century our attention and efforts in this direction have been principally given to the building of railroads. We have succeeded in building the most efficient and extensive railway system the world possesses, and in that regard we have made our transportation system a great accomplishment.

But transportation, like charity, begins at home. It is a wonderful achievement to have secured the great trunk lines which gridiron the country, carrying great trains of merchandise in every direction and to every market. But when we find it takes as much time and money, on an average, to transport produce from the farm to the railroad as it costs to carry it by rail to its final destination we realize that we have been omitting in our consideration one great element of the transportation problem. When we ascertain the fact that it costs more to transport the farmer's grain and stock from the granary and feed yards to the station than to carry it from New York to Liverpool we can understand something of the importance of good roads.

NATIONAL AID.

I shall not attempt to discuss now the extent to which the National Government should aid in the work of general highway improvement except as it affects the work of this department and along lines already operative and well advanced. There are probably 40 bills now pending in Congress, carrying appropriations ranging from a few thousands to hundreds of millions of dollars for national aid in highway improvement. It is not likely action will be taken on any of these, but this work of the department can be materially extended to the manifest advantage of all.

I would not advocate lavish expenditures from the National Treasury in this work. But moderate expenditures certainly are justifiable. Indeed, such action has the highest historic and individual sanction. Early in our history a strong sentiment was developed toward the establishment of a system of national highways to be built and maintained by the National Government. Numerous appropriations were made from the National Treasury for that purpose aggregating over $14,000,000, and extending over a period of more than half a century. As early as 1753, after his return from the French forts, George Washington first introduced the subject of uniting the East and West by a system of public highways. Writing on the subject to William Irvin, he said:

For my part, I wish sincerely that every door to that country may be set wide open, that the commercial intercourse may be rendered as free and as easy as possible. This, in my judgment, is the best if not the only cement that can bind those people to us for any length of time, and we shall be deficient in forethought and wisdom if we neglect means to effect it.

In 1808 Mr. Jefferson, writing to Mr. Liepee, said:

Give us peace until our revenues are liberated from debt * * * and then during peace we can chequer our whole country with canals, roads, etc.

The General Government has aided the railways by grants of lands and other subsidies. More than 450,000 square miles, or 266,000,000 acres, of land were thus donated—an area equal to France and Germany combined, and of a value of more than $500,000,000.

We have spent over $225,000,000 in improving the Mississippi River alone, and we have for many years annually expended on an average $50,000,000 on rivers and harbors.

We have spent $2,000,000 for roads in Porto Rico, $2,000,000 more in Alaska, and $3,000,000 in the Philippines. We are spending $400,000,000 for a water highway in Panama.

It is hardly justifiable to question the right or the policy of the General Government to aid in highway improvement, and if we may judge from the popular expressions it is the desire of the people that the Nation should thus aid in this great work.

The national Democratic platform for 1908 declared:

We favor Federal aid to State and local authorities in the construction and maintenance of post roads.

The Republican platform declared:

We recognize the social and economic advantages of good country roads maintained more and more largely at public expense and less and less at the expense of the abutting property owners.

WHAT IT WILL COST.

We have approximately 2,200,000 miles of public highways in the United States. One hundred and ninety thousand miles are already well improved. But 20 per cent of the roads carry 90 per cent of the traffic. If the permanent improvement of only the most important is considered we have 440,000 miles of roads to improve. Deducting those already improved and we have 250,000 miles of highway now demanding attention. The cost of permanently improving these roads will average $6,000 per mile. This would mean the expenditure of $1,500,000,000. But it need not all be paid at one time, neither is it contemplated that the General Government should assume all the burden.

Under the old system nearly the entire cost of highway improvement was placed upon the adjoining landowners. This would put the burden of highway improvement, in the benefits of which all share, upon one class—the farmers. But if all share in the benefits all should share in the burdens. The landowner should bear his share, the township, county, and State, including the cities and towns, all these should contribute to the great work. Finally, the Nation should lend its aid. Just what part of the burden it should assume it is perhaps too early yet to wisely determine.

It should be remembered in this connection that the General Government has now a direct interest in road improvement. It has established over 40,000 rural mail routes over which every day the officers of the Nation are compelled to travel over a total mileage of nearly 1,000,000 miles. It can afford to take a direct interest in that which will best facilitate this work and increase its efficiency.

NECESSITY OF THE WORK.

But in some way this money will have to be raised and the work will have to be done. Ex-Gov. Bachelder, master of the National Grange, says good roads would save the farmers $125,000,000 annually. It would likely be much larger. Seventy-five per cent of the world's commerce starts for its destination on country roads. It is impossible to determine with accuracy the total tonnage of farm products transported from the farms to the market towns, and of the building materials, machinery, goods, wares, and merchandise transported from the towns to the farms.

But it is safe to estimate it at over 1,000,000,000 tons. The average distance from the farm to the town is 9 miles. It costs 26 cents per ton per mile to transport these products over our unimproved roads. It costs but 12 cents on our improved roads. This would mean that bad roads are costing us annually $140,000,000. The burden of this is principally on the farmer, but it is not all his. Part of the high cost of living, which is the most serious problem the workingmen of the cities have to confront, is to be attributed to the condition of our country roads, which for long periods of time are impassable for the transportation of food products raised on the farm.

The question has another and a still more important side. The movement in population from country to town, from the farm to the city, has a tremendous significance. The economic phase is interesting and important, but the social and moral is significant and sinister. For more than half a century this movement has been going on with continually accelerated force. Especially has this been true with the young. The flower of American youth have been taken from the country to the city. Vast numbers of clean country lads and sweet, pure country girls have been drawn from their homes by the lure of the cities. Tempted by the promise of better wages, shorter hours, amusements, society, the joy of living in an atmosphere of activity and gayety, they have abandoned the old farm, with its long hours, its arduous toil, its slow pay and small profits, its muddy roads, its isolation, its lack of society, its want of amusement and recreation. To brighten the life of the country and to make it pay to be a farmer would alone change all this. And there is no other single factor that will contribute so much to secure these as good roads.

From every possible standpoint the good-roads question is one of Nation-wide interest and of almost transcendent importance. To assist in the solution of its problems in even the moderate degree contemplated by this slight increase in the appropriation would appear amply justified. To aid in the accomplishment of a result so universally desired and so unquestionably necessary would seem not only a privilege but a duty.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, I hope that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER] will be adopted. I do not believe that the average member of this committee has devoted any special study to the road question. I do not believe this House knows that the several States of the Union in the year 1911 expended upon the highways of the United States $142,000,000. I believe it would be safe to say that two-thirds of that $142,000,000 was wasted, because of the fact that the people in the States in which this money was expended and those in charge of road building knew nothing about the construction of permanent highways. I do not know any money that could be expended by this Government that would redound more to the real upbuilding of this country than to send, through the Office of Public Roads of the Agriculture Department, experts into the different States of the Union for the purpose of giving object lessons in good road construction. This office is doing splendid work under the administration of Hon. Logan Waller Page, the director.

For instance, we have in the United States now 2,000,000 miles of public highways. With the enormous expenditure of $142,000,000 a year we only have in the United States 190,000 miles of what may properly be termed improved highways. That shows that this amount of money which is being appropriated in the several States is being wasted and that this Government ought to send out its experts to show people how to construct permanent roads. Out of the 190,000 miles of public highways which can be called improved six States have 108,000 miles, leaving only 82,000 miles of improved highways in the remaining 42 States. This work is needed. The people in my section of the country want to be informed as to how to use the raw material at hand in the construction of good roads. They build roads which are not permanent, and build them in a haphazard way. No money could be expended more judiciously than this additional amount that my friend from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER] has asked for. I hope this committee will vote for this $25,000 increase, so that we can furnish more of these experts to extend the work of instruction that is being done by the department.

Mr. LAMB. Mr. Chairman, we have increased this appropriation $28,000. We have done well by this road-improvement work, and this educational work, and all the money that we might appropriate here would not effect the purposes that the gentleman asks for.

I ask for a vote.

Mr. BOWMAN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. LAMB. I move to close all debate on this paragraph and amendments thereto in five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia moves to close debate on the paragraph and amendments thereto in five minutes.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BOWMAN. Mr. Chairman, I wish to say just a word or two in support of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER].

Over 35 years ago I was employed by the State of Massachusetts as a civil engineer in connection with the building of some sample roads. They, having received resurfacing as occasion required, are now in just as good condition as the day they were built. In part, as a result of the construction of these roads, the State of Massachusetts stands to-day among the first in the character of its roads and in the mileage of improved roads in proportion to the total number of miles of road in the State. If the information which might have been obtained at that time had been diffused generally throughout the United States, as provided by the paragraph under discussion, I am quite sure there would by this time have been many more roads of this character built. Information regarding this important subject, which is now obtainable in the State of Massachusetts and in other States, is not properly diffused. In this connection the following table will be of interest.

Public roads—Mileage and expenditures under specified heads, calendar year 1904, by States and Territories.

[1] One half the cost of road construction and repair in the District of Columbia is paid from congressional appropriation, the other half by the District out of the general revenues from taxation of property.

The purpose of this provision under discussion is to enable the Department of Agriculture to gather information wherever obtainable and properly diffuse it throughout the States. I do not think any other portion of this agricultural bill is of more importance than this, if adequate appropriations are made and continued.

For investigations of the best methods of road making and the best kinds of road-making materials, and for furnishing expert advice on road building, and maintenance for these purposes.

The resultant improvement in the roads of the country would reduce the expense of getting material to and from the farm, the mine, and the factory, and tend, as much as any other one influence, toward the advancement of the agricultural interests of this country.

The investigations and experience of foreign countries in road making and maintenance, in connection with our own work in this direction, has given us a vast store of information. Hence the most important provision in the paragraph under discussion is that which provides "for furnishing expert advice on road building and maintenance." If this expert advice is made available, it will result in most cases in better location and construction at lower cost. Better methods of maintenance will also prevail.

As the experts travel from one section of the country to the other they will, in addition to aiding in the construction of new roads and in the maintenance of those which have recently been constructed, they will also, doubtless, be the means of conveying information from one State to the other of what is being done in the other sections. This will promote a spirit of emulation which can not but result in the general improvement of the highways of the whole country. The people of this country appreciate the waste of time and labor traveling upon a bad road and know the extra expense connected with the upkeep of animals and wagons when used on bad roads as compared with the expense when used upon a modern highway, and I am sure they will approve of any legislation which will tend to give them better roads.

I trust that the amendment providing a more liberal appropriation for this purpose will prevail.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

There was no objection.

Mr. BOWMAN. I should like the same privilege.

There was no objection.

Mr. CANDLER. Mr. Chairman, have the five minutes been exhausted?

The CHAIRMAN. The five minutes have been exhausted. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER].

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. TOWNER), there were—ayes 24, noes 50.

Accordingly the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For conducting field experiments and various methods of road construction and maintenance, and investigations concerning various road materials and preparations; for investigating and developing equipment intended for the preparation and application of bituminous and other binders; for the purchase of materials and equipment; for the employment of assistants and labor; for the erection of buildings; such experimental work to be confined as nearly as possible to one point during the fiscal year, $20,000.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order on the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. On what ground?

Mr. MANN. There is no authority of law for it, and I think even the ruling of the Chair previously made would hardly apply to the construction of roads. It certainly would not apply, unless the Chair is prepared to hold that the construction of roads is part of a proper system of agriculture, regardless of where they are constructed.

This paragraph is for the construction of a road in some one locality, confined to one locality. By the specific terms of the paragraph it provides for experimental construction to be confined as nearly as possible to one point. It authorizes in that connection the erection of buildings. Just what occasion there is for that I do not know. I do not care to take up the time of the committee. From my point of view it is so plainly out of order that I do not think it requires discussion. If the Chair has the other point of view I do not care to delay either the Chair or the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will ask the gentleman from Illinois if this Bureau of Public Roads was not created under a special act?

Mr. MANN. I think not. It has existed by sufferance for a great many years in the Department of Agriculture. There is no act creating it that I know of.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will ask the gentleman from South Carolina if there is an act creating the Bureau of Public Roads?

Mr. LEVER. There is none that I know of, as I understand it.

Mr. MANN. All of the items, I think, are subject to the point of order. I did not make the point of order on the other items.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be heard upon the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, as I pointed out a moment ago on the drainage proposition, all of these various items in the Agriculture appropriation bill, as to whether they are in order, is a question very largely for the discretion of the Chair. If the Chair believes that the construction of roads, the improvement of the road system of the country, is in the interest of agriculture and intimately connected with it, then the Chair will hold that the point of order made by the gentleman from Illinois is not in order. If the Chair believes that the construction of roads does not affect agriculture one way or the other, primarily or secondarily, then the Chair will sustain the point of order. It is a question for the Chair as to whether or not the various items in this bill are primarily concerned with agricultural development or in the interest of agriculture, and of course the Chair is well aware what roads mean to agriculture.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. LEVER. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman think it any more necessary to have roads than to have railroads, or any more necessary to have railroads than to have harbors, or any more necessary to have harbors than to have ships, and does the gentleman think that an appropriation for the purchase of a ship line would be in order on this bill upon the ground that it is comprehended within the meaning of the organic act?

Mr. LEVER. I do not think the gentleman's point is at all analogous with the point that I am making.

Mr. MANN. I do not see any distinction.

Mr. LEVER. The point I am making is that the agricultural products of the country can not be placed in touch with the markets of the country except through a system of roads, and if this paragraph here affects agriculture one way or the other it is certainly in order.

Mr. MANN. The corn and wheat of the West is sent on the Great Lakes by vessels. Why not buy a line of vessels?

Mr. LEVER. You can not run a vessel over the dry land in Illinois.

Mr. MANN. But you can run them over the Lakes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is prepared to rule. The Chair recognizes that roads, especially rural highways, are the method of communication between the farms and the markets, and agriculture, being the greatest one business in this country, the improvement of highways must necessarily be indirectly, and to some extent directly, connected with the great business of agriculture. But, as a matter of fact, it is no more connected with it than, as was intimated in the brief reference by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, is the business of mining or of manufacturing or of any other line of business. In fact, transportation is in itself in many respects a separate business. The language of the statute creating the Department of Agriculture is very broad, and yet it confines the investigation of matters that are agricultural.

The Chair, therefore, sustains the point of order, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

And not to exceed 10 per cent of the foregoing amounts for the miscellaneous expenses of the work of any bureau, division, or office herein provided for shall be available interchangeably for expenditure on the objects included within the general expenses of such bureau, division, or office, but no more than 10 per cent shall be added to any one item of appropriation except in cases of extraordinary emergency, and then only upon the written order of the Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order on the paragraph. This makes all of the appropriations in this bureau interchangeable up to 10 per cent. There is absolutely no justification for such a provision. It makes them liquid appropriations, and that ought not to be permitted. No other department of the Government has any such provision. I withdrew the point of order on the item for the Forestry Service because of the peculiar conditions of the Forestry Service, but under this provision 10 per cent could be added to the total appropriations for the Forestry Service and all the other services provided for in this bill.

Mr. LAMB. Mr. Chairman, I concede the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

The Clerk read as follows:

Total, Department of Agriculture, for routine and ordinary work, $15,549,976.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add to line 16, page 76, the following:

"No part of any money appropriated in this act shall be paid to any executive officer, clerk, or employee below the grade of clerk as compensation in the Department of Agriculture who is not specifically provided for and enumerated herein."

Mr. LAMB. Mr. Chairman, on that I make the point of order.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a ruling. It is a limitation on the appropriation.

The CHAIRMAN. That appears to the Chair to be a limitation on the appropriation, and the point of order is overruled.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, this is a matter that we discussed the other day. Under the act of May 26, 1910, the Secretary of Agriculture, for the fiscal year 1912, and annually thereafter, is required to transmit to the Secretary of the Treasury, for submission to Congress in the Book of Estimates, detailed estimates for all executive officers, clerks, and employees below the grade of clerk, indicating the salary or compensation of each, necessary to be employed by the various bureaus, offices, and divisions of the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. LAMB. We know that. We have been acting under that all the while.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Under that law the gentleman has transferred to the statutory roll, if I recollect his statements correctly, some 1,900 positions from the lump appropriations.

Mr. LAMB. No; from the Forestry Service, 1,900.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Then it is much more than I had anticipated.

Mr. LAMB. There have been numbers of them transferred from the lump sum to the statutory roll. There is no doubt about that, and that made it necessary for us to make some of these increases that were objected to here.

Mr. FITZGERALD. And under this provision the gentleman in this bill has specifically provided for all of the officers of the character indicated specifically. The intention of the Committee on Agriculture and of Congress was to stop the practice of using these lump appropriations for the payment of services to employees below the grade of clerks. Unless some such provision as this be incorporated in this bill, each year, in addition to the employees specifically authorized in the bill, the department will take on new employees out of the lump appropriations and ask to have them transferred to the statutory roll.

Mr. LAMB. The gentleman is mistaken about that. Every time an employee is transferred from the lump sum that fund is reduced accordingly.

Mr. FITZGERALD. But the intention of the act is to prevent the employment out of the lump appropriations of services of the character specified and to compel estimates to be submitted specifically for such services, to have Congresss pass upon whether they will be authorized. Unless some such provision as this is incorporated in this bill it will continue an endless chain of employment of services of the character indicated out of the lump appropriations, and then they are transferred in the next bill to the statutory roll.

Mr. LAMB. There is only one case where I think the gentleman's argument applies, and I will be candid and say that in the lump-sum appropriation of $3,000,000 for the meat-inspection service, where we reduce them from that sum, it ought to be cut off, because that is a fixed amount. I would like to have the amendment again reported.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection the Clerk will again report the amendment.

There was no objection, and the Clerk again reported the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD].

Mr. MANN. How would you maintain the Forest Service? You appropriate a large sum of money for each national forest. What could you do with it? You could not pay it out for anybody.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. MANN. What could you pay it out for?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Pay it out for a character of service different from that indicated here. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. LAMB] himself has made the statement that they have transferred in the Forestry Service over nineteen hundred employees.

Mr. MANN. I am not speaking of those employees.

Mr. FITZGERALD. From the lump appropriation to the statutory roll, and then there are services of an expert character that will not be affected, but otherwise it is futile to ask the department to submit detailed estimates for services of the character indicated and at the same time permit them to have authority to employ to the limit of these lump appropriations in addition.

Mr. MANN. But the gentleman's amendment says that no employee shall be employed or compensated practically unless specifically provided for and enumerated.

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; it does not. It is in the language of the provision indicated at the instance of the Committee on Agriculture, and we intended to exempt the expert services which they do not specifically cover.

Mr. MANN. It is an employee below the grade of clerk. What could be employed in one of the national forests? They are all below the grade of clerks.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not know whether they are or not.

Mr. MANN. They are. They are paid below the grade of clerks.

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; the gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. MANN. Certainly. The rangers are below the grade of clerks. They are paid below the grade of clerks, and they are below the grade of clerks. You can not enumerate them.

Mr. LAMB. A great many of them are temporary, you know; six months, and three months, and so forth.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I understand a great many of them are enumerated, and must be enumerated if statements that have been made here from time to time are accurate.

Mr. MANN. In the national forests none of them are enumerated.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The bill specifically provides "21 forest rangers," "78 forest rangers," "198 forest rangers," "54 forest rangers," "734 assistant forest rangers"——

Mr. MANN. But they are not paid out of the appropriation for each specific forest. We make a specific appropriation for each forest, and necessarily that money is expended in the main largely in the payment of salaries. According to the gentleman's amendment not a cent of it could be expended.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman is mistaken. It could be expended for services of the character that it should be expended for.

Mr. HAUGEN. If the gentleman will turn to pages 2, 3, and 4 he will find many of these projects are appropriated for in a lump sum. None of the money could be paid for salaries.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

And the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized to continue investigations on the cost of food supplies at the farm and to the consumer, and to disseminate the results of such investigations in whatever manner he may deem best.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. CANDLER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from South Carolina be permitted to proceed for 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. CANDLER] asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER] may proceed for 10 minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, in the course of the consideration of this bill, carrying the appropriations for the support of the Department of Agriculture, there have been three lines of criticism of it.

It has been suggested by one class of critics that the appropriations for the various items are too large; that the Committee on Agriculture have failed to make such reductions as are warranted by the ideas of economy which the majority in this House has set for itself. To this criticism I desire to say first of all that the committee, in the preparation of this bill, did not regard the money appropriated by it as in any sense an expenditure; it has been our idea all of the time that every dollar appropriated for the Department of Agriculture is an investment of public money, rather than an expenditure, which brings back dividends in the way of increased production a hundredfold.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. LEVER. Yes.

Mr. MANN. If that is the case, why should not we increase the investment slightly?

Mr. LEVER. Of course the gentleman understands that we must go along gradually and slowly on all of these propositions.

Mr. CANDLER. There have been no decreases in this bill in reference to the matters which involve directly and specifically the development of agriculture itself throughout the country.

Mr. LEVER. If I had the time I could demonstrate beyond the shadow of a doubt that the information which the Department of Agriculture has given to this country, through its scientific research work and through the dissemination of expert advice touching the problems of rural life, has been worth to this Nation untold millions. The work of the department under the wise and aggressive management of its great Secretary has brought about in the last dozen years almost a complete revolution in the farm methods and practices of this country. [Applause.] I am certain that this statement is true as it affects my own section of the country, and it is an unwise statesmanship which seeks to reduce the appropriations to such an extent as to unduly curtail the activities of the various bureaus of this department. The committee which prepared this bill has no apologies to make for refusing to be unduly frightened by the demands for economy. We were impressed with the fact that here was a work upon which we could not afford, as men looking beyond the present, to become economical to the extent of parsimony. There was in our minds the old thought of penny-wise and pound-foolish, and no set of men who knows the work of this department and the results thus far obtained and those which are promised accomplishment would be foolish enough to adopt such a policy. I make bold to make the statement that there is not a great nation on earth which in its history has dealt less generously with its agricultural interests than has this Nation, 36 per cent of whose population is agricultural and which depends for its balance of trade and for the larger part of its domestic trade upon this great fundamental occupation. [Applause.] Even benighted Russia, according to the latest information available to me, expends annually for her agriculture approximately $25,000,000; the Republic of France, following the chart marked out by her great Napoleon, expends upon this industry over $9,000,000, and this, too, in the face of the fact that her area is less than that of the State of Texas.

Austria, realizing the importance of encouragement and aid to agriculture, expends over $9,000,000 annually; Hungary, over $9,000,000; and Japan, approximately, $4,000,000. If we were to appropriate according to our requirements based upon area, this bill would carry more than $1,000,000 to put us upon a parity with some of the nations I have mentioned. Carrying the idea further, I desire to quote from a speech delivered by me some years ago on this subject, as follows:

To aid in increasing productiveness and its value as an asset to the nation, every acre of land devoted to agriculture in France receives an appropriation of 9 4/10 cents, while Austria approximates 13 4/10 cents per acre, Hungary 12 4/10 cents, and Russia approximately 4 cents, while we, so generous in our care of every other industry, expend less than 2 cents for each acre of land in cultivation.

When consideration is had of such facts as these and when we know that this country must continue to be agricultural, not only to supply its own increasing industrial classes but to do its part in helping feed and clothe the teeming millions of this earth, the charge that this committee has been overgenerous with this department becomes ridiculous and falls flat.

Mr. CANDLER. It is demonstrated conclusively when we take into consideration the total appropriations made for this department from the time it was established under the commissioner up to the present time. I had upon the floor of the House the other day a detailed statement in regard to the matters and it showed the total appropriations made from 1839 down to and including 1912 amounted to only $168,000,000.

Mr. MANN. In view of what the gentleman says, I would like to ask him this: Does he think there is any other Government in the world that maintains as efficient and effective a department dealing with agriculture as the Department of Agriculture of the United States?

Mr. LEVER. Unquestionably there is not, and the wonder is that with so little money our Department of Agriculture can do such an amount of good. [Applause.]

Now, in answer to the suggestion of my friend from Mississippi [Mr. CANDLER] I desire on that very point to say this to the country generally: The Country Gentleman, I believe the oldest agricultural paper in the United States and certainly one of the best, in its issue of last week develops the fact that only 1 per cent of the total annual appropriations of this Government goes to the aid and encouragement of agriculture. It must be borne in mind that a large part of the appropriation carried in this bill does not affect agriculture solely, but goes to the benefit of all classes of people. The smaller amount is applied solely to agricultural purposes. Oh, no; we have not been extravagant; we have dealt with this department in a broad-minded and liberal way, giving to it all we believed it needs and withholding not one dollar which we believed necessary to a continuance of its splendid efforts in behalf of the people of this country. [Applause.]

Another class of criticism is based upon the idea that we have economized too much at the expense of the department. A close examination of the various items of the bill will disclose the fact that the principal reductions over last year's appropriations are in the Forestry Service, the expenditures for which have grown enormously in the past few years.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CANDLER. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the gentleman may be permitted to proceed until he concludes his remarks, which will not take much more time.

Mr. LEVER. It will take about seven minutes.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the gentleman may have seven minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the request?

Mr. CANDLER. I ask that the gentleman may proceed until he concludes his remarks, which will not take more than seven or eight minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. LEVER. When I came upon this committee, 10 years ago, the appropriation for the Forest Service was less than $200,000 annually, while the appropriation for this fiscal year is $5,503,000. The committee thought it could afford, without any detriment to this service whatever, to make certain slight reductions for the coming fiscal year, believing that the service, as big as it is, with so much ahead in the way of work, must necessarily grow gradually and that too large appropriations are too great incentives for extravagance and unwise expenditures. But in no other item of the bill can there be found a single reduction which, in my judgment, will affect materially the activities now being carried on under them. The reductions have been only slight and can not seriously affect the future service of the department. Every member of the committee desired to take no action in the way of reduced appropriations which would in the least cripple the operations of the splendid machine which has been built up in the department. We desired to continue the policy of liberality in appropriations for agricultural purposes. When I became a member of this committee the total appropriation for the department was a little more than $4,500,000, while the appropriation for the present fiscal year amounts to $16,900,000. The older members of this committee—oldest in point of service—have seen the appropriations quadrupled and some of them more than quadrupled, and is there a man here who is willing to rise in his place and dispute the proposition that every dollar expended during these 10 years has not been wisely expended and fruitful in its returns in added happiness and prosperity? [Applause.] And there is not a member of the committee, especially those of use who have grown up with the service, as it were, who wishes to make any apology for our part in helping to build up this wonderfully efficient branch of the Government service. [Applause.]

Another class of criticism is that the bill is sectional in its character, giving too much to the South. When we keep in mind the fact that the question of better agriculture is not one of Texas or South Carolina alone, but equally concerns Maine and Nebraska, this line of criticism is certain to answer itself. It is true, perhaps, that southern Representatives for the past 10 years have been more than ordinarily active in directing the attention of the Department of Agriculture to the undeveloped resources and agricultural needs of the South. Gentlemen must bear in mind that a new dawn is breaking upon the agriculture of our section; we are just beginning to come to a full realization of the wonderful treasures which our rich and varied soils hold for us; we are just commencing to break away from the old system of agriculture, the outgrowth of our peculiar system of labor, and of necessity we have had more problems to solve than would be found in sections of the country where agriculture has been for a longer time conducted upon the lines we are beginning to conduct ours in the South. Gentlemen can very well understand why southern Representatives should be active when some of our problems are known to them. Let me illustrate. The best experts in the land tell us repeatedly that the presence of the cattle tick among southern cattle means an annual loss in wealth to the South of from $40,000,000 to $60,000,000. My own State, one of the smallest in area in the country, it is said upon good authority, annually loses more than a million dollars on account of this pest. We have just come to know how to fight it, and I doubt if there is a State in the South which is not appropriating money out of its own treasury to supplement the appropriation of the Federal Government. I find that for the year 1911 the total expenditures in the Southern States for tick eradication were over $200,000, and that during the past four years these same States have spent over $636,000.

We have not been asleep to our own interests, and this is shown both by the appropriations which we make for this purpose and the fact that through the cooperation of the State and Federal Governments more than 147,000 square miles of territory have been released from quarantine. This area exceeds in size the combined areas of the States of Georgia, Alabama, and Mississippi. Southern Representatives have been active, it is true, in seeking appropriations from the Federal Government to help our States deal with this proposition, and up to date the Department of Agriculture has had appropriated through it for these purposes $1,232,000. With an annual drain upon our cattle industry of $60,000,000, is there a man here who can blame us for our activity, and is there one here who will say that appropriations made for such a purpose as this can be sectional in their character? The question of the supply of beef for food for the people is not and can not be a local question. Every man, woman, and child living at any point in this great country is as vitally interested in this problem as are we of the South. It is a national question. Are we of the South to be criticized for our activity in seeking appropriations for meeting the ravages of the boll weevil? Are we to permit our modesty to overcome our judgment in the face of a calamity such as was and is threatened by the boll weevil? Does anyone imagine for a moment that the production of cotton is either local or sectional? Dr. Thompson, president of the Ohio State University—and he is one of the greatest educators and one of the most patriotic men in this country—in a statement before the Agriculture Committee last week on this very question, said:

> You may say cotton is a local issue in the South, but, bless your souls, it is becoming a mighty pressing issue in Ohio, where we are using more and more cotton every year, and the question of cost of production is bound up in the question of what we can do. The man that circumscribes the cotton area of this world to-day circumscribes a large market of the future, and there is not a man on this committee who would vote more quickly for the protection and betterment of cotton fields than the man who lives in Canada or northern America, if he had an oppotunity to vote on that question.

What a big statement from a big, broad man. Every word of it is true—cotton is no more a local problem than is sunshine or rain. Cotton is even more than a national problem, it is international in its relationship to humanity. Mr. Chairman, I might go on indefinitely, showing that in every case where an appropriation has been confined in its expenditure to the South the problem involved has been bigger than the South. The Nation, in the North, East, and West, is vitally interested in the development of a better system of agriculture in the South. With 206,000,000 acres of untouched agricultural lands, rich much of it as the Valley of the Nile, with the cost of living increasing each day, with the production of foodstuffs practically standing still, while population steadily increases, the eyes of this Nation turn more and more each day to the South, from which section relief must come if relief come at all. The clothing and food supply of the Nation in the future, in my judgment, will depend largely upon the development of the agricultural resources of my section, and the revolution going on now—the new system which we are adopting, our new practices and methods, are so greatly increasing production as that to me there is no fear for the future. The agriculture of the South, its future, is anything but a sectional problem—it is Nation-wide, even world-wide. [Loud applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Fighting and preventing forest fires in emergency: For fighting and preventing forest fires in cases of extraordinary emergency, $200,000.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California is recognized.

Mr. RAKER. I have a small amendment which I desire to offer here. I desire to strike out the words "two hundred thousand" in line 13, page 77, and insert in lieu thereof "one million."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, line 13, page 77, by striking out the words "two hundred thousand" and inserting the words "one million."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from California.

Mr. RAKER. Just a moment. I have five minutes.

Mr. LAMB. I ask for a vote on that.

Mr. RAKER. I have five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California is entitled to five minutes.

Mr. RAKER. The only thing I have to say is that I wish to refer to the magnificent, eloquent, logical, and truthful statement made by my distinguished friend from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER] in order to carry this amendment.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, last year when the agricultural appropriation bill was reported to the House it carried an indefinite permanent appropriation for forest-fire emergencies. Being a permanent and indefinite appropriation, payable out of sums that might be collected from the national forests, and being contrary to the principles that have been adopted by Congress in connection with appropriations, a point of order was made upon the item, and it went out on the point of order. I prepared an amendment in the language that is in this bill, and which was afterwards agreed to in the House, leaving the amount blank and asking for the opinion of the members of the Committee on Agriculture. The suggestion was made that the amount be $1,000,000. It was agreed to without objection and without hesitation. It was stated in general debate the other day that if this appropriation of $1,000,000 were made it would hang up that much money in the Treasury of the United States. Nothing can be wider from the fact. The appropriation of the money does not disturb the actual money in the Treasury at all, and has no effect upon it unless it should be used. It does not affect the use of the money that is in the Treasury for other purposes.

Now, here is a case. We are carrying our own insurance against fires in national forests. We do not desire to appropriate a large sum of money for ordinary expenditure, and we provided last year that a million dollars should be appropriated for extraordinary emergencies. If a great fire or series of fires occur, then the money is there for expenditure for that purpose. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER] the other day stated that if these fires did occur the department would spend the money whether it was appropriated for or not. It may be that that was done once. And whether with or without authority of law, they came to Congress and asked for and obtained the authority for a previous expenditure of money. But we have no right to place that responsibility upon executive or administrative officers. If we, with knowledge beforehand, do not desire to appropriate emergency funds in case of extraordinary fires, the responsibility is upon us, and it can not be transferred to executive officers in the expectation that they will violate the law and expend the money without authority. What objection is there to making the emergency appropriation, so that if an emergency arises the money can be expended? The only excuse that can be offered is the desire of the Democratic leaders of the House to make a false play of economy and to advertise——

Mr. LAMB. Mr. Chairman, I challenge that statement——

Mr. MANN. And advertise the appropriation of less money. The gentleman can challenge that statement in his own time. It is true, and the gentleman knows it is true.

Mr. LAMB. I know it is not true.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman tries to make a record for economy by striking down an appropriation that probably would not be expended, but which, if needed, ought to be there for expenditure. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. LAMB. Mr. Chairman, I will detain the committee only for a few moments, and then I will ask for a vote. I would not desire to detain the committee at all if it were not for the statement just made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

Now, I want to prove out of the mouth of the Forester himself what is necessary for this emergency fund. The Chief of the Forest Service, Mr. Graves, stated in the hearing on this appropriation, under date of December 18, 1911, that it had only been necessary up to this time to draw on this appropriation to the amount of $22,000. He says:

It is not probable that there will be another such forest fire as the extraordinary forest fire of 1910, and it is thought that $200,000 in addition to the item of $150,000, which the Forest Service asked for fighting fires, will be sufficient.

Now, on this point I asked the Forester some questions——

Mr. RAKER. What page?

Mr. LAMB. On page 277. Mr. Graves said:

The past season has been drier in some localities than in a normal year, and we have been able to get along with only $22,000 more than the $150,000.

Bear in mind, gentlemen, that we not only gave him $150,000, but we gave him $200,000 as an emergency fund, which will in all human probability reach the emergency and will cover all that can be called for in any ordinary fire that may occur. Of course in case of such an extraordinary fire as that which occurred in 1910 this difficulty will be overcome in the very same way as that in which it was overcome before, by the Government coming to the rescue and the money being appropriated; and the only point in my judgment—and a good one—that my friend from Illinois [Mr. MANN] did make, is that this money is in the Treasury and not disbursed. That is true, and the fact that it is in the Treasury keeps it out of the appropriation here. There is simply that much money locked up in the Treasury, for the use of which there is no necessity, as the evidence before the committee shows beyond all peradventure of doubt. [Applause and cries of "Vote!" "Vote!]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER].

Mr. MORSE of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I move to substitute "$500,000" instead of "$1,000,000," as provided in the amendment offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER].

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. MORSE] to the amendment of the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER].

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by striking out "one million" and inserting in lieu thereof the words "five hundred thousand."

Mr. MORSE of Wisconsin. Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to call the attention of this House to the fact that in 1910 there were 79 fire fighters and 25 settlers burned to death in forest fires.

Mr. MANN. What do they care about that?

Mr. MORSE of Wisconsin. I believe they do care.

The timber on the national forests belongs to all the people of this Nation. It is worth, according to conservative estimates, $500,000,000. It seems to me that it would be the part of economy for us at this time to put aside a million dollars, the amount asked by the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] in his amendment, to be used as an emergency fund.

Gentlemen should remember that we are daily putting more settlers within the limits of the national forests. They are going in there continually. We cut down the appropriation for roads and telephones, although that was changed by amendment on the floor of this House. We are permitting settlers to go in there. We should protect them from fire. It is not a matter of dollars and cents alone, but it is a matter of the protection of human lives, and it seems to me that if another catastrophe occurs such as that which occurred in 1910, the blame will rest on this body, and not on the Secretary of the Interior.

I read an article in one of the magazines about a year ago, in which the then Acting Secretary of the Treasury was blamed for this loss of property and this loss of life. As a matter of fact, the blame should have been put here on this House, where it belonged. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LAMB. Mr. Chairman, I move that debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto be closed at once.

The CHAIRMAN. The question, first, is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. MORSE].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question recurs on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER].

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 35, noes 76.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend line 13 by striking out the words "two hundred thousand" and inserting the words "five hundred thousand."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. FRENCH], which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, in line 13, by striking out the words "two hundred thousand" and inserting in lieu thereof the words "five hundred thousand."

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, in line with what has been said already and from the language on the face of this paragraph it is apparent that this money is to be set apart and used only in an emergency. Last year a million dollars was set apart, and of that amount only about $20,000 was used, indicating the care that was exercised by the Forest Service in safe-guarding this fund against any extravagance.

It is the part of wisdom for this Congress to set apart half a million dollars, which is only half as much as was set apart a year ago to be used by the department, and remove the necessity of the department to act without authority of law as it was compelled to do in meeting the forest fires in 1910.

You do not need to look ahead in contemplation of authorizations of this character for any considerable period of time. A few days ago we increased the appropriation, so far as the Committee of the Whole is concerned, for permanent improvements in the forest reserves to half a million dollars. We are continuing the work of permanent improvements, and as they shall more and more be completed the necessity for an emergency fund will more and more pass away.

More than that, as has been suggested, settlers are acquiring lands within forest reserves. The State lands adjacent and scattered throughout the reserves are being taken care of and safeguarded against fires. Private lands are being improved and made less liable to injury by fire than they were in 1910. Because of that I believe that if this appropriation should be continued only for a few years it would cover the period of time in which the emergency appropriation would need to be considered in anything like the magnitude that is suggested here and that a smaller amount, probably, than that indicated by the bill itself would be sufficient. [Applause and cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. LAMB. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a vote on the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. FRENCH].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

That hereafter, when employees of the Department of Agriculture, either on lump fund or statutory rolls, are traveling on official business in the United States, they may be allowed necessary railroad and steamboat fares, parlor car, sleeping berth, and stateroom on steamboats, livery hire and stage fare, and other means of conveyance between points not accessible by railroad, but in lieu of subsistence and all other traveling expenses they may receive a per diem allowance, to be fixed by the Secretary, in addition to their regular salaries, subject to such rules and regulations as the Secretary of Agriculture may prescribe.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on that paragraph.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against that paragraph as being new legislation.

Mr. LAMB. The point of order is conceded.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

That hereafter officials and employees of the Department of Agriculture, either on lump fund or statutory rolls, may, when authorized by the Secretary of Agriculture, receive reimbursement for moneys expended for street car fares at their official headquarters when expended in the transaction of official business.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Total carried by this act for the Department of Agriculture, $15,836,976.

Mr. CARLIN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to return to page 12 for the purpose of offering an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk and ask to have read.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. CARLIN] asks unanimous consent to return to page 12 for the purpose of offering an amendment.

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, let us know what the amendment is.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by inserting after the word "another," at the end of line 21, page 12, the following:

"And indemnify the owners of milk cows condemned under section 2 of the act of Congress approved March 2, 1895, and the regulations of the District of Columbia in relation thereto."

Mr. LAMB. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order on that.

Mr. LEVER. I object to returning to the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is heard.

Mr. LAMB. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill to the House with the amendments, and with a favorable recommendation.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. BORLAND, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 18960) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and had directed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. LAMB. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and amendments thereto.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment?

Mr. LAMB. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a separate vote on the amendment on page 47, substituting $500,000 for the $275,000 carried in the bill.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a separate vote on every amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks for a separate vote on every amendment. The Clerk will report the first amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 13, strike out the word "seven" after the word "thousand" and insert the word "five," and strike out in the same line the words "and fifty."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read the next amendment, as follows:

Page 3, lines 8 and 9, strike out the words "one thousand and four" and insert the word "two."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read the next amendment, as follows:

Page 4, line 14, insert after the word "Bureau" the words "three thousand dollars."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read the next amendment, as follows:

Page 4, line 21, strike out "nine hundred" and insert "eight hundred and forty."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read the next amendment, as follows:

Page 4, line 23, strike out the word "two" and insert the word "one."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read the next amendment, as follows:

Page 4, line 24, strike out the letter "e" in the word "foremen" and insert the letter "a," so that it will read "foreman."

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, this amendment will be agreed to.

Mr. MANN. I object.

The question being taken, the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read the next amendment, as follows:

Page 4, line 25, after the word "dollars," insert "one assistant foreman of division, at $1,400."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read the next amendment, as follows:

Page 4, line 25, strike out the word "five" and insert the word "three."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read the next amendment, as follows:

Page 5, line 11, insert, after the word "engineer," the words "one thousand two hundred dollars."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read the next amendment, as follows:

Page 6, line 7, insert, after the word "care," the word "and."

The question being taken, the Speaker announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. LAMB. Division!

The House divided; and there were—ayes 93, noes 3.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the Chair count. I think there is possibly a quorum present.

The SPEAKER (after counting). One hundred and nine Members present; not a quorum. The Doorkeeper will lock the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 217, nays, 6, answered "present" 11, not voting 159, as follows:

"And provided further, That no part of the appropriation made by this act shall be used for the construction, repair, maintenance, or use of buildings or improvements made for forest ranger stations within the inclosed fields of bona fide homestead settlers who have established residence upon their homestead lands prior to the date of the establishment of the forest reservation in which the homestead lands are situated, without the consent of the homesteader."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk reported the next amendment, as follows:

Page 46, line 11, strike out the words "one hundred and fifty" and insert in lieu thereof the words "one hundred and sixty-five."

Mr. RUBEY. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry, to get some information.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RUBEY. Is this not the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois, increasing this amount $15,000?

The SPEAKER. The Chair is not able to inform the gentleman. The question is on the amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MANN) there were—ayes 58, noes 110.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. JAMES. And, Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the point of order made by the gentleman from Illinois is dilatory.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks not. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and ninety-two Members present, not a quorum. The doors will be closed, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absentees. The question will be taken on agreeing to the amendment, and the Clerk will call the roll.

Mr. ANDERSON of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be again reported.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent that the amendment be again reported. Is there objection?

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois objects, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 128, nays 82, answered "present" 7, not voting 176, as follows:

The SPEAKER. On this vote the yeas are 128, nays 82, answered "present" 7—a quorum. The Doorkeeper will open the doors.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may make a short statement, not covering over five minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, there is some confusion about the vote which has just been taken, and I feel it is necessary I should offer some explanation of my own attitude about this matter. When this item was under consideration in the Committee of the Whole, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] offered an amendment increasing the appropriation over the proposed bill from $150,000 to $175,000. The proposition was debated for some time, and finally I said, in the course of debate, this:

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, there is not a man on the floor of the House who does not know the expert information that the gentleman from Illinois has on this proposition. We have all admitted it here. I wonder if the gentleman would not agree, as a substitute for his amendment, to make it $165,000, and let us get along.

Mr. MANN. I would be quite willing to do that, with the understanding, expressed in debate, that the extra amount of $15,000 is put in for this purpose.

Mr. LEVER. I do not know that we could do that.

Mr. MANN. I do not mean to put it in the law, but I mean in debate, so that the Forestry Service will understand that the increase is for this purpose.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Why is it necessary to increase it?

Mr. MANN. It is absolutely essential. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to modify my amendment by making it $165,000 instead of $175,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the modification.

The Clerk read as follows:

"Strike out the word 'seventy-five' and insert in lieu thereof the word 'sixty-five.'"

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the modification will be made.

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I wish to inquire of the gentleman in charge of this bill what information he has that would justify the committee in accepting the amendment?

Mr. LAMB. Mr. Chairman, we are cutting this item considerably, $26,000, and we did it over the protest of the Forester, of course.

Now, listen to that—

We had no more evidence touching this item than what I have already given. Mr. MANN has thrown some further light on the subject.

Mr. FITZGERALD. No appropriation is ever reduced except it is against the protest of the official who is to expend the money.

Mr. MANN. The official who is to expend the money has not protested, so far as I know.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman from Virginia said he did.

Mr. MANN. I did not know about that. I have made an investigation of this matter since this bill was reported and have given to the House the information I obtained.

Mr. FITZGERALD. How much of this appropriation is to be expended in these particular investigations?

Mr. MANN. Probably twenty or thirty or forty thousand dollars. I can not tell the exact amount. I do not remember.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for four minutes more.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. LEVER. I will continue:

Mr. LAMB. I have given all the information we had. We were reducing these amounts all we could. We reduced them in proportion. I have previously stated that they had been increased too rapidly in preceding appropriation bills; at least some of us thought so.

Mr. MANN. And a large part of the expense is being paid by outside parties, the gentleman understands—as much as they are permitted to pay under the law.

Mr. LEVER. We made very serious cuts all along the line here.

Mr. LAMB. We cut the amounts over $300,000.

Mr. LEVER. I regard this as important, and the gentleman from Illinois is better informed, perhaps, on this proposition than any man in the country. I confess I have been somewhat moved by his statement in respect to the proposition, and if he is willing to make a reasonable divide I am willing to accept it, so that we may get along.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois as amended.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I feel that the colloquy which I have read, between members of the Committee of the Whole, demonstrates beyond a doubt that Members entered into a gentleman's agreement with the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] on this proposition, and for one I would rather suffer that this right arm should be cut off than to go back on an agreement made on the floor of this House. Hence I have voted for the gentleman's proposition.

Mr. BEALL of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from South Carolina yield to the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. LEVER. I do.

Mr. BEALL of Texas. I readily concede the right of the gentleman to bind himself by an agreement, but I am not willing for the impression to be created that there was any attempt to bind anyone else except the ones who made the agreement. I, together with many others here, voted against that amendment when it was pending in the bill.

Mr. LEVER. The gentleman from Texas was here on the floor of the House, and he heard the whole colloquy. He knew what was going on. The RECORD discloses the fact that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BEALL] did not protest or open his mouth on the proposition——

Mr. BEALL of Texas. Except to vote against it.

Mr. LEVER (continuing). And in his silence concurred in the agreement that was taking place on the floor of the House.

Mr. BEALL of Texas. The gentleman has no right to assume to make any agreement for anybody except himself.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think I remember the matter. I do not think I assented to the adoption of the amendment, and I discussed it afterwards. When we found that those who had control of the bill on the floor wanted to support the amendment, in view of what happened in the committee prior to that time it was a waste of time to demand a division.

Mr. LEVER. And by unanimous consent the whole proposition went through, as the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] knows.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It did not go through as a gentleman's agreement—by unanimous consent.

Mr. LEVER. As far as I am concerned, Mr. Speaker, I feel myself personally bound upon this proposition as one gentleman dealing with another, and I can not and will not go back upon the agreement entered into by consent of the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from South Carolina has expired.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MURDOCK. On the last vote taken some 20 or 30 gentlemen changed their vote from "no" to "aye." Will each gentleman's change of vote be found in the RECORD? Will it be printed there?

The SPEAKER. Why, no. The change of vote is shown in the record of the vote itself.

Mr. MURDOCK. And there will be absolutely no record of the fact that the gentlemen changed their vote?

The SPEAKER. No such thing as that appears in the RECORD.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit another request for unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. LEVER. And that is that all amendments now pending, except the one contained on line 10, page 47 of the bill, be voted on en gross, and that we proceed to vote upon the amendment on line 10, page 47, of the bill. We will save a great deal of time, and that is the only contested proposition in the bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that we ought to dispose of the amendment now pending before the gentleman makes his request.

Mr. LEVER. I thought the amendment had been disposed of.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the pending amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 46, line 16, after the word "of," insert the word "tree."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LEVER. Now, Mr. Speaker, I renew the request that I made a moment ago—that the remaining amendments be voted upon in gross, except the one contained on line 10 of page 47.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report that amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 47, line 10, strike out "two hundred and seventy-five thousand" and insert in lieu thereof "five hundred thousand."

The SPEAKER. The request of the gentleman from South Carolina is that after this amendment is voted on the remaining amendments be submitted in gross. Is there objection?

Mr. LEVER. That is it, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. MANN. For the present I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] objects. The question is on agreeing to the amendment just read.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the noes had it.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 51, noes 78.

Mr. MANN. I ask for the yeas and nays, Mr. Speaker, and so that everybody can vote I make the point of no quorum at the same time.

The SPEAKER (after counting). There are 161 gentlemen present—not a quorum. The Doorkeeper will lock the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll. When the roll is called those in favor of this amendment will answer "yea"; those opposed "nay."

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 72, nays 113, answered "present" 17, not voting 192, as follows:

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call my name.

The Clerk called the name of Mr. CLARK of Missouri, and he voted in the negative.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk announced the following additional pairs:

Until further notice:

Mr. SCULLY with Mr. CURRY.

Mr. ROBINSON with Mr. CRAGO.

Mr. POST with Mr. PLUMLEY.

Mr. RICHARDSON with Mr. PAYNE.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado with Mr. HANNA.

Mr. HENRY of Texas with Mr. BURKE of South Dakota.

Mr. HAMMOND with Mr. CANNON.

Mr. CLAYPOOL with Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania.

Mr. LITTLETON with Mr. DWIGHT.

Mr. CARTER with Mr. KAHN.

For balance of day:

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri with Mr. DYER.

Mr. DICKINSON with Mr. YOUNG of Kansas.

Mr. CATLIN with Mr. HENSLEY.

Mr. COX of Ohio with Mr. CAMPBELL.

Mr. ANSBERRY with Mr. TILSON.

Mr. LEGARE with Mr. MCLAUGHLIN.

Mr. COVINGTON with Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. A quorum is present; the "nays" have it, and the amendment is lost. The Doorkeeper will open the doors.

Mr. LAMB. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the remaining amendments be voted on in gross.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. LAMB] asks unanimous consent that the remaining amendments be voted on in gross. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman from Virginia will make his request so as to except the amendment inserted on page 73, covering the drainage investigation, I will not object to the other amendments being voted on in gross.

Mr. LAMB. I agree to that, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. There is no objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. LAMB], except on the one amendment, which the Clerk will report. Will the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] please state it again so that the Clerk can find it?

Mr. MANN. It is the amendment which came in on page 73, for the drainage investigation.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 73, line 9: "Drainage investigation: To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to investigate and report upon the drainage of swamp lands and other wet lands which may be made available for agricultural purposes, and to prepare plans for the removal of surplus water by drainage from such lands, and for the preparation and illustration of reports and bulletins on drainage, including the employment of labor in the city of Washington and all necessary expenses, $96,700."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the "noes" seemed to have it.

Mr. LEVER. A division, Mr. Speaker.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 97, noes 33.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the adoption of the remaining amendments.

The question was taken, and the amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the amended bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following motion to recommit, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

I move to recommit the bill (H. R. 18960) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, to the Committee on Agriculture, with directions to that committee to report said bill back to the House forthwith with the following amendment:

Amend the paragraph, on page 77 of the bill, reading as follows:

"Fighting and preventing forest fires in emergency: For fighting and preventing forest fires in cases of extraordinary emergency, $200,000."

By adding thereto the following:

"And the unexpended balance of the appropriation of $1,000,000 for fighting and preventing forest fires in cases of extraordinary emergency made in the act entitled 'An act making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1912,' is hereby reappropriated and made available for the purposes named during the fiscal year 1913."

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to recommit.

The question was taken, and the motion was rejected.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken, and the bill was passed.

On motion of Mr. LAMB, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted—

To Mr. BORLAND, for three weeks, on account of sickness.

To Mr. LITTLEPAGE, for five days, on account of important business.

PATROL OF MEXICAN BOUNDARY (S. DOC. NO. 404).

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith statements of the amount expended by the State of Texas for the increased force of rangers required for policing and patrolling the international boundary along the Rio Grande during the months of October, November, and December of the year 1911, and during the month of January of the year 1912, together with certain correspondence bearing thereon.

The correspondence explains my reason for transmitting the accounts to Congress. The additional patrol service by the State of Texas served to save to the United States the cost which a more extended patrol of the frontier by the Army would have entailed, and I recommend that an appropriation be made to meet the amount of the increased financial burden assumed by that State.

WM. H. TAFT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, March 12, 1912.

ENROLLED BILL AND JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bill and joint resolution of the following titles:

S. 339. An act providing for the reappraisement and sale of certain lands in the town site of Port Angeles, Wash., and for other purposes; and

S. J. Res. 83. Joint resolution making appropriations to meet certain contingent expenses of the Senate.

SENATE BILL REFERRED.

Under clause 2, Rule XXIV, Senate bill of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to its appropriate committee, as indicated below:

S. 4566. An act to provide for the purchase of ground and the erection of a Weather Bureau observatory building at Billings, Mont.; to the Committee on Agriculture.

THREE-YEAR HOMESTEAD BILL.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have printed 500 extra copies of the report submitted to-day by the Committee on Public Lands upon the bill S. 3367, known as the three-year homestead bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. LAMB. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 8 o'clock and 2 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, March 13, 1912, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting copy of a communication from the Secretary of War, submitting estimate of appropriation required to meet certain claims against the United States in connection with the Engineer Department (H. Doc. No. 613); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

2. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, submitting estimate of appropriation for expenses of collecting, assembling, etc., exhibits of the several executive departments in connection with the International Congress on Hygiene and Demography to be held at Washington, D. C., September, 1912 (H. Doc. No. 615); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

3. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting copy of a communication from the Secretary of War, submitting estimate of an appropriation for relief of Lieut. George Ruhlen, jr., Coast Artillery Corps, United States Army (H. Doc. No. 614); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

4. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, report of examination and survey of Red River of the North, Minn. and N. Dak. (H. Doc. No. 616); to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and ordered to be printed with illustrations.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. RANDELL of Texas, from the Committee on Ways and Means, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 1745) to amend the revenue laws so as to provide for furnishing certified copies of certain records to officers and other persons, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 411), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi, from the Committee on Expenditures in the State Department, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 21224) to amend section 291 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 412), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado, from the Committee on the Public Lands, to which was referred the bill (S. 3367) to amend section 2291 and section 2297 of the Revised Statutes of the United States relating to homesteads, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 413), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. NORRIS: A bill (H. R. 21768) to provide for a primary nominating election in the District of Columbia, at which the qualified electors of the said District shall have the opportunity to vote for their first and second choice among those aspiring to be candidates of their respective political parties for President and Vice President of the United States, to elect their party delegates to their national conventions, and to elect their national committeemen; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. LAFFERTY: A bill (H. R. 21769) to increase the limit of cost for the erection and completion of the United States post-office building at The Dalles, Oreg.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The VICE PRESIDENT presented petitions of the congregations of the Methodist Episcopal Church of Stroudsburg, Pa.; of the First Methodist Episcopal Church of Amboy, Ill.; and of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of South Gardner, Mass., praying for the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution to prohibit the manufacture, sale, and importation of intoxicating liquors, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented petitions of the Cigar Makers' International Union, of Arecibo; the Central Labor Union of Arecibo; the Men's Protective Union of Cabo Rojo; and Carpenters and Joiners' Union No. 1833, of Fumacas, all of Porto Rico, praying for the establishment of a department of agriculture and labor in that Territory, which were referred to the Committee on Pacific Islands and Porto Rico.

He also presented petitions of Cigar Makers' International Union of America, No. 467, of Arecibo; of the Central Labor Union of Arecibo; of the Federada Labor Union, of Juncos; of the Bakers and Confectionery Workers' Union of Juncos; of the Cigar Makers' Union of Juncos; of the Carpenters and Joiners' Union of Humacas; of the Albaniles Union of San German; and of the Boot and Shoe Workers' Union of San German, all of Porto Rico, praying for the enactment of legislation providing that citizens of Porto Rico shall be citizens of the United States, which were referred to the Committee on Pacific Islands and Porto Rico.

Mr. GUGGENHEIM. I present a short resolution adopted by the Chamber of Commerce of Denver, Colo., protesting against a change in the present tariff schedule on sugar. I ask that it be read and referred to the Committee on Finance.

There being no objection, the memorial was read and referred to the Committee on Finance, as follows:

Whereas the Denver Chamber of Commerce was the father of the sugar-beet industry in Colorado, having imported to this State in 1897 the first quantity of seed that was here planted, and having also opened an active campaign to secure the building of factories in the State; and

Whereas it has watched the industry grow to its present prominent place among the industries of this State with a feeling of pride in its achievement; and

Whereas at the present time there are over 150,000 acres upon which sugar beets are grown, adding millions of dollars to the taxable value of the agricultural lands of the State; and

Whereas there are over 10,000 farmers who are dependent upon this crop as their principal source of revenue; and

Whereas there has already been invested, largely by the people of Colorado, over $20,000,000 in sugar factories within the State; and

Whereas this industry has been built up upon the assurance that there would be no changes made in the present existing tariff on sugar, and the honorable Secretary of Agriculture has repeatedly given encouragement to the further development of this great industry; and

Whereas efforts are now being made to effect a radical change in such tariff conditions, which change, if made, will make for the lasting injury to this great industry of ours, thereby retarding the development of the State: Now therefore be it

Resolved, That the Denver Chamber of Commerce goes on record as being absolutely opposed to any change whatever in the present tariff schedule on sugar, and that a copy of this resolution be sent to our Senator with the request that the same be read to the Senate of the United States.

Adopted by the board of directors and membership of the Denver Chamber of Commerce on this 8th day of March, A. D. 1912.

THE DENVER CHAMBER OF COMMERCE.
ALLISON STOCKER, President.

Attest:
[SEAL.] THORNDIKE DELAND, Secretary.

By Mr. KERN:

A bill (S. 5844) granting a pension to William Howell (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. ROOT. I introduce a joint resolution, which I ask may lie on the table and be printed.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 89) to amend the joint resolution to prohibit the export of coal or other material used in war from any seaport of the United States, was read twice by its title and ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

AMENDMENTS TO SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. GUGGENHEIM submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $7,000 to enable the United States Geological Survey to make a thorough investigation and report thereon as to the number, character, and value for economic purposes of the various springs in the State of Colorado, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $17,500 to enable the United States Geological Survey to make an adequate topographic survey and map or maps of the area surrounding Denver, Colo., etc., intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

Mr. BANKHEAD submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $3,653.05 to pay Rittenhouse Moore for overwidth dredging in the Potomac River below Washington, D. C., etc., intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $12,092.56 to pay the Alabama Great Southern Railroad Co., being the amount of balance due for erroneous mail-pay deductions, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

TRANSFER OF BOOKS, MAPS, ETC.

Mr. BURTON. I introduce a joint resolution and ask that it be read at length.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 88) relative to the transfer of all books, maps, and other documents now in the possession of the National Monetary Commission was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That all books, maps, and other documents now in the possession of the National Monetary Commission be, and they are hereby, transferred to and made a part of the reference library of the Committee on Finance, United States Senate, and said property shall not be disposed of as provided by section 3618 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio desire present action?

Mr. BURTON. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to its present consideration?

Mr. CULBERSON. Let the joint resolution be read again.

The joint resolution was again read.

Mr. CULBERSON. I have no objection to it.

There being no objection, the joint resolution was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS—JOHN M. BUCKLEY.

On motion of Mr. WATSON, it was Ordered, That the papers in the case of John M. Buckley, S. 2939, Sixty-second Congress, first session, be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, no adverse report having been made thereon.

THE INITIATIVE, REFERENDUM, AND RECALL (S. DOC. NO. 406).

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask unanimous consent that the address delivered by the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] at Princeton University, Princeton, N. J., March 8, 1912, on the compulsory initiative and referendum and the recall of judges be printed as a Senate document.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the order is entered.

The order as agreed to was reduced to writing, as follows:

Ordered, That the address of the Hon. HENRY CABOT LODGE, entitled "The Compulsory Initiative and Referendum and the Recall of Judges," delivered at Princeton University, Princeton, N. J., March 8, 1912, be printed as a Senate document.

PACIFIC STEAMSHIP LINE (S. DOC. NO. 409).

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I ask unanimous consent that the report which I send to the desk, being a report of Senator BRISTOW, as special Panama Railroad commissioner, on the advisability of the establishment of a Pacific steamship line by the Isthmian Canal Commission, may be printed as a public document.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, an order therefor will be entered.

ADDRESS BY PRESIDENT TAFT (S. DOC. NO. 408).

Mr. OLIVER. I have a copy of the address by President Taft delivered at Toledo, Ohio, Friday, March 8, 1912, on the subject of the judiciary and progress. I move that the address be printed as a Senate document.

The motion was agreed to.

SIDNEY HENRY ET AL. V. THE A. B. DICK CO. (S. DOC. NO. 429).

Mr. BROWN. I ask that the opinion by Mr. Justice Lurton, delivered before the Supreme Court of the United States in the October term, 1911, in the case of Sidney Henry et al. v. The A. B. Dick Co., together with the dissenting opinion of the court handed down by the Supreme Court on last Monday, be printed as a Senate document.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 1 hour and 50 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

SERVICE PENSIONS.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 1) granting a service pension to certain defined veterans of the Civil War and the War with Mexico.

Mr. McCUMBER. As the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] has signified his desire to finish his address to-day, I ask that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the unfinished business will be temporarily laid aside. The Chair hears no objection.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION—ARBITRATION TREATIES.

Mr. BRADLEY. I will ask the Senator from Utah if he will yield to me just a moment on a personal question.

Mr. SMOOT. I yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. BRADLEY. I desire to explain for the benefit of the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. TAYLOR], and for my own benefit as well, that we had a general pair; that when the arbitration treaties were to be voted upon, my understanding being that he favored their adoption, I caused a dispatch to be sent him inquiring how he stood on the amendments, and he answering that he was for the treaties I concluded that he opposed the amendments and I voted against the amendments. I understand, since his return, that had he been present he would have voted with the members of his party for the amendments, and I make this statement in order to set him right on the record. Had I known that such was his position I would have withheld my vote.

AMENDMENT OF PRINTING LAWS.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, at the close of my remarks yesterday I had reached the question of the rate of pay for pressmen in the Government Printing Office.

The bill provides for an increase in the pay of job compositors and pressmen from 50 to 55 cents an hour. This increase applies to 60 job compositors and 100 pressmen, giving $7,500 additional compensation to the former and $12,500 to the latter, or a total wage increase of $20,000 in all. The bill also fixes definitely by law the wages that other employees of the Government Printing Office are now receiving. It likewise continues the present eight-hour provision, grants employees required to work on Sunday 50 per cent in addition to regular pay, double pay for employees required to work on regular holidays, and 20 per cent additional pay for employees required to work at night. As the resolution from the Columbia Typographical Union states, the leave-of-absence provision is highly satisfactory to the employees of the Government Printing Office. There are many other provisions in the bill very beneficial to these employees, and I can not conceive of any just ground on which they could oppose its passage.

RATE OF PAY FOR PRESSMEN.

I have been greatly surprised, however, to find that pressmen of the Government Printing Office are voicing opposition to the bill despite the fact that it carries an increase of 5 cents an hour in their compensation, amounting to a $12,500 increase for the 100 pressmen employed. These pressmen, however, are asking for an increase of from 50 to 60 cents an hour. Before the commission finally fixed upon the wages to be recommended in the pending bill it asked the Secretary of Commerce and Labor to have the Bureau of Labor investigate the rates of wages paid job compositors and pressmen in each of the 20 largest cities of the United States, distinguishing between the rates paid in newspaper offices and job-printing offices. The Commissioner of Labor was permitted to select such cities as he desired in which to make this investigation, and his reply covered inquiries made by representatives of his bureau in the following 15 cities: New York, Chicago, Philadelphia, St. Louis, Boston, Cleveland, Baltimore, Pittsburgh, Detroit, Buffalo, Milwaukee, Cincinnati, Newark, Washington, and Jersey City. This report shows both the union scale and the rate of wages actually paid in the printing establishments investigated, together with the hours of employment. When representatives of the pressmen presented a request to the Commission for an increase in wages of from 50 to 60 cents an hour instead of from 50 to 55 cents an hour, their attention was called to this report of the Bureau of Labor, but they have not as yet presented a single statement to dispute its fairness. Let me call attention to some of the wages paid pressmen, according to this report, which the Bureau of Labor compiled in February, 1911:

The following rates apply to cylinder pressmen in book and job printing offices in the cities named. (All these rates apply to day workers.)

The rates paid pressmen employed on job platen presses in the same cities were considerably lower than the wages quoted above, running as low as 27½ cents per hour in Cincinnati. The highest average wage paid platen pressmen was 48⅝ cents per hour in Chicago.

Now let me quote the rates of wages paid web pressmen for day work in newspaper offices in the same cities:

In considering this comparison in rates it should be borne in mind that the rate proposed by the commission of 55 cents an hour is a day rate. Pressmen employed at night will receive 20 per cent in addition, which would make their rate of pay for night work 66 cents an hour. The bill provides that the pressmen in charge shall receive 60 cents an hour day, and their night rate would be 72 cents an hour. Neither the day nor the night rate proposed by the commission is equaled in any other city of the country for pressmen employed under similar conditions. Employees of the Government Printing Office receive 30 days' leave on full pay each year, a privilege that is not granted them in the commercial world.

In connection with the rate of wages proposed for pressmen, I want to call attention to the fact that the Public Printer has several times estimated for an increase for these pressmen from 50 to 55 cents an hour, but Congress has thus far refused to approve this estimate. Again, in submitting his estimates for the coming year, the Public Printer has recommended that pressmen be paid at the rate of 55 cents an hour, as provided for in the pending bill. In view of all these facts, it appears to me that the Printing Commission has been most liberal in its recommendations concerning the pressmen and all other employees of the Government Printing Office.

WASTE OF PUBLIC DOCUMENTS.

Before it undertook to revise the laws relating to the distribution of Government publications the commission made a most thorough investigation of that subject. The commission was astounded to discover that since the act of 1895 the excess accumulation of documents in Washington which neither Congress nor the departments had been able to distribute amounted, in round numbers, to 10,000,000 publications. This number, the commission believes, is really a bagatelle compared with the vast amount of Government publications that have been wasted by improper distribution and of which the commission could find no trace. It is conservative to estimate that the 10,000,000 practically worthless documents that accumulated in Washington during the last 17 years cost the Government on an average 50 cents each for their printing, binding, handling, and storage, which would indicate a net loss of $5,000,000 on these publications of which the commission had definite reports.

I believe it is a safe estimate that the actual loss due to defective distribution methods has been at least five times this sum, or not less than $25,000,000 in 17 years.

Of this 10,000,000 accumulation, 3,000,000 were listed as useless documents by the departments when the commission began its work in 1905. Since that time the departments have turned over to the superintendent of documents 3,083,981 publications which they failed to distribute. The superintendent of documents has received 1,720,299 publications which were sent broadcast to the libraries of the country and have since been returned by them, the Government having had to pay the cost of transportation both ways, in addition to the expense of printing these documents, practically all of which had to be sold as waste paper.

On January 8, 1910, a "Select Committee on Waste Paper and Documents" reported to the House of Representatives (H. Rept. No. 116, 61st Cong., 2d sess.) that it had found more than a million documents in the House folding room, a large part of which had remained undistributed for years and were therefore considered useless. This accumulation was opened up to the Members of the House for general distribution, and yet tons of it subsequently had to be sold for waste paper, being utterly useless to anyone. Several years ago the Senate folding room had an accumulation of approximately 900,000 publications and thousands of these were turned over to the superintendent of documents owing to the lack of demand for them by Members of the Senate.

In the fiscal year 1909, the Public Printer, by direction of the Joint Committee on Printing, sold 1,435,272 Government publications as waste paper, receiving therefor the sum of $14,049.02. This accumulation weighed approximately 950 tons, which brought $\frac{1}{10}$ of a cent a pound as compared with an average of from 3½ to 7 cents a pound which the Government had paid for the plain paper before any printing or binding operations were performed on it whatever.

In 1910 the Public Printer reported a further accumulation of 950,698 publications, which he recommended for condemnation and sale as waste paper. The Printing Commission undertook to ascertain whether these publications were of use to any of the executive departments and had a complete inventory of them printed. This inventory was called to the attention of all the departments, independent offices, and establishments of the Government and, without exception, they all reported having on hand a sufficient number of the publications listed therein. Accordingly, the commission had to recommend that this accumulation, amounting to approximately 700 tons, be sold as waste paper at the rate of one-half cent a pound.

Again in 1911 the commission was called upon by the Public Printer to approve the condemnation of 473,457 documents which had accumulated in the office of the superintendent of documents and which he could not distribute. This time the commission undertook to ascertain whether any of these publications were of use to Members of Congress. Printed inventories of the accumulation were sent to every Member of Congress with letters stating that they could have such of the publications as they desired to file upon. In response to this letter the commission received requests for these documents from only 160 out of 485 Members of the House and Senate. These 160 Members took a total of only 180,714 documents out of the accumulation of approximately half a million that were placed at their disposal. The balance of this accumulation of documents had to be sold as waste paper, and, I have been informed, thousands of the documents selected by Members from the accumulation have since been thrown aside, having been found valueless. The superintendent of documents now has on hand another accumulation of several hundred thousand documents which he has been unable to distribute. Undoubtedly, the Printing Commission will sooner or later be asked to authorize the sale of this excess as waste paper.

One of the principal causes for the present waste in public documents is the extravagance with which congressional and departmental publications are duplicated in their printing and binding. I have here before me a startling example of the extent to which this duplication is practiced. I refer to the nine different forms in which volume 5 of the War Department Report for 1909 is published. This condition applies also to the War Department Report for the present and other recent years. Volume 5 of the War Department Report for 1909 (with the omission of a few appendixes) is identical with volume 1 of the Report of the Chief of Engineers for that year. As a part of the War Department Report it is House Document No. 103, and as a part of the Report of the Chief of Engineers it is House Document No. 111, both of the Sixty-first Congress, second session. In every one of the nine documents the report is published verbatim, requiring extra paper, extra printing and expense, but also imposing upon the Government the cost of postage to and, in many cases, from the libraries.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. BORAH. Did I understand the Senator to say that those nine volumes are duplicates of one another?

Mr. SMOOT. I say, in each one of these nine volumes, volume 5 of the War Department report of 1909 is published.

Mr. BORAH. How did that happen?

Mr. SMOOT. It is caused by the duplication of printing. The proposed bill will do away with that practice in the future.

Mr. GALLINGER, Mr. BRISTOW, and Mr. BROWN addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah yield, and to whom?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield to the Senator from New Hampshire first.

Mr. GALLINGER. I simply desire to ask the Senator who is responsible for the duplication of printing in that form and to that extent? It seems to me most preposterous that it should be done.

Mr. SMOOT. It is the lack of system in printing public documents by the different departments.

Mr. GALLINGER. And there has been no supervision of that matter?

Mr. SMOOT. No general supervision. Under the proposed bill that practice will cease.

Mr. GALLINGER. It is certainly time something should be done to stop it. There is no doubt of that.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield.

Mr. BRISTOW. I should like to inquire about how much of each of those volumes is taken up with that report?

Mr. SMOOT. Some of them at least half, some of them three quarters, and some identically the same with the omission of a few appendixes. The up number of each of these documents is bound in paper covers and distributed through the congressional document rooms. Other copies of this report, printed as congressional documents, are bound in buckram with special back titles and distributed to the Library of Congress, foreign exchanges, and the Senate and House libraries.

The departmental edition of this report is printed under a plain title; that is, without the congressional document number on the title-page, as follows: In paper cover, with the title-page of the Chief of Engineers; in red cloth, as volume 5 of the War Department Report; in black cloth, as volume 1 of the Report of the Chief of Engineers, and in plain buckram, both as volume 5, War Department Report, and as volume 1 of the Report of the Chief of Engineers, for each designated depository library. The superintendent of documents informs me that all the annual reports will be found in at least two bound editions and some of the parts appear in a third form, such as the Bureau of Education and some of the reports of the District of Columbia. These are in addition to the paper-covered "up number."

Similar duplications will also be found in the following series:

Geological Survey bulletins.
Geological Survey supply papers.
Geological Survey professional papers.
Geological Survey monographs.
Pan American Union bulletins.
Monthly summary of commerce and finance.
Special consular reports.
Ethnology Bureau bulletins.
Fisheries Bureau bulletins.
Hygienic Laboratory bulletins.
Labor Bureau bulletins.
Yellow Fever Institute bulletins.

The pending bill proposes to prevent this wasteful duplication by providing—

(1) That publications of which a departmental edition is printed shall not be included in the numbered document series of Congress, but shall be designated by title.
(2) That the annual report of each department shall not exceed two volumes and shall consist of the report of the head of department and such administrative reports as are necessary and relate entirely to the transaction of public business.
(3) That the publications printed for sale or distribution by the superintendent of documents shall be identical in all respects to those printed in pursuance of the original order.

These provisions, it is believed, will eliminate much of the unnecessary and wasteful duplication in the present printing of congressional and departmental documents in their various forms.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah yield further to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield.

Mr. BRISTOW. I should like to inquire if the Senator does not think that those bulletins he has referred to are very valuable and should be printed and given wide publicity?

Mr. SMOOT. Some are, and some are not.

Under the provisions of the proposed bill the report would receive just as wide publicity as under the present system. Take any Senator. If he wants the report he may not know that the same report is to be found in five or six or seven different publications, and he will only ask for one. Another Senator may distribute the same report and yet be a different document. The report is the same, only has another number and designated under another title.

Mr. BRISTOW. It is exactly the same thing.

Mr. SMOOT. It is exactly the same thing.

Mr. BRISTOW. Now, who is to determine under the bill the Senator has reported how many bulletins shall be issued, we will say, how many copies of the consular reports?

Mr. SMOOT. The law specifically states in every case just how many the department can print.

Mr. BROWN. Not this law, but the general statute.

Mr. SMOOT. I say, the proposed bill, if it becomes a law.

Mr. BROWN. How much reduction, for instance, does this bill make in the bulletins published by the Agricultural Department?

Mr. SMOOT. None whatever. In fact, in some cases there is an increase in the Agricultural Department allowance.

DEPOSITORY LIBRARIES.

To ascertain why the depository libraries of the country have been sending back to the superintendent of documents more than 100,000 documents a year for the last 17 years, the commission made an extended inquiry into the subject. The result of the commission's inquiry is reported in detail in a preliminary report made by it (S. Doc. No. 652, 61st Cong., 2d sess.). That inquiry showed that there were being sent to each of the 457 designated depository libraries throughout the country an average of 1,000 Government publications a year.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah yield further to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield.

Mr. BRISTOW. The Senator will pardon me for interrupting him, but I want to get information as he goes along. The Senator has been emphasizing the large number of documents returned from the depository libraries. As I understand it, every time that a document here is made a Senate document a copy of it is sent to each one of those libraries.

Mr. SMOOT. To each one of the depository libraries.

Mr. BRISTOW. Now, we have hundreds of documents made here ourselves that the libraries do not want and they would send them back. Are we not guilty as well as other people in regard to that?

Mr. SMOOT. I will tell the Senator that the selection plan in the proposed bill will do away with all that. The libraries will select what they want, just the same as a Senator or a Member of the House. There will not be great quantities of documents printed unless there is a request for them under the plan proposed in the bill.

Mr. BRISTOW. There were two or three documents ordered printed this morning. Of course the Senators have use for them or they would not have asked for the printing. A copy of every one of those documents will be sent to these depository libraries. Does the Senator mean that if this bill should become a law, none of those documents will be sent to a library unless the library requests it?

Mr. SMOOT. If they request them, they will be sent, and if not they will not be sent to them. The libraries can sign a request for a general class of publications and they will be sent to them; but the request will not be made unless the libraries are interested in them.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly.

Mr. BROWN. Does the limitation in this bill reach to other publications than those which we order ourselves?

Mr. SMOOT. All publications.

Mr. BROWN. Then one of these libraries would receive nothing from the Government in the way of public documents unless they filed a request.

Mr. SMOOT. Every week there is a list printed showing every public document that is published by the Government for distribution. They are sent that list and they know exactly what they can secure. If they desire anything upon the list, all they have to do is to request that the documents be sent them.

Mr. BROWN. If the superintendent of documents does not hear from the library nothing is sent?

Mr. SMOOT. Nothing is sent unless it is requested.

Mr. GALLINGER. But, Mr. President——

Mr. SMOOT. I want to say that if the larger libraries request that every Government publication be sent them under the proposed bill, of course, they will be sent just the same as now.

Mr. BROWN. What does the Senator mean by the larger libraries? Are they classified as designated libraries?

Mr. SMOOT. There are some four hundred and odd depository libraries that receive all publications. There are different classifications.

Mr. BROWN. Under this bill?

Mr. SMOOT. Under the present law.

Mr. BROWN. Under the proposed law they will not receive anything unless they ask for it?

Mr. SMOOT. Unless they request it. Of course they can request that every publication be sent them just the same as they do to-day, and it will be sent.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. GALLINGER. I want to get this a little clearer in my mind than I have it now. If this list is sent to the libraries and they have no use for the documents named on it, then the documents become waste paper, do they not?

Mr. SMOOT. No; under the proposed bill there will not be printed more of any one publication than requested. They are only printed in editions now, and they would only be printed as ordered under the proposed bill. Suppose, for instance, 100,000 copies of the "Diseases of the Horse" should be ordered printed by Congress—I refer to "Diseases of the Horse," but the statement is equally true of any other public document—under the old law 100,000 copies would be printed immediately; but under the present law—that is, the law passed since the formation of the Printing Commission—they would be printed in editions, and no more would be printed than are actually called for.

Mr. GALLINGER. I know that system was adopted even before the Senator from Utah became chairman of the committee.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. GALLINGER. And a great saving was made.

Mr. SMOOT. A very great saving.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am quite familiar with that matter, because I somewhat cooperated in it; but what was troubling me was, is it proposed to send out this list in advance of the printing and let the libraries make their selection in advance? If that is not done and libraries do not want them, then they are in the hands of the Senate, and the Senate has not any use for them. I do not see exactly where the saving comes in unless the lists are sent out in advance.

Mr. SMOOT. The lists are sent out, as I have said, once each week. Of course, the lists reach them in most cases as quickly as the publications are ready for distribution.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think there will be great difficulty about that; but still, if the Senator's commission can make even a little saving in that direction, I shall be very glad to have it done. I think there is now an inordinate waste.

Mr. SMOOT. In the 17 years since 1895 there have been distributed to depository libraries a total of 8,998,902 documents, to miscellaneous other libraries 1,779,475, and to geological libraries 755,042, making a total of 11,533,419 volumes. This continuous flood of documents was more than the great majority of the libraries could provide with shelf room.

An investigation developed the fact that, in addition to having returned to the superintendent of documents almost one-fifth of all the publications sent them, the libraries had in storage in cellars and other inaccessible places thousands of tons of Government publications which they had no shelf room for and which they could not make available to the public. Sixty out of the 396 libraries making reply to the inquiries of the commission frankly stated they could not provide room for all the documents sent them. Of the depository libraries, 142 declared that they preferred to select the publications to be sent them instead of being required to receive all the Government issued, as under the present law. Fifty-seven other libraries were not sufficiently interested in the subject to even reply to repeated inquiries from the commission. So it is safe to assume that fully half of the libraries are not desirous of receiving all the publications that the superintendent of documents now sends them. Many of the libraries that prefer to continue getting all of the Government publications also indorsed the selection plan as proposed by the commission.

Incidental to this investigation of depository libraries, the commission ascertained that much of the excess distribution to these libraries was due to duplicate mailing lists maintained by the departments. The commission took up this question with every department of the Government, and as a result 2,166 libraries were stricken from the mailing lists of the departments that had been sending to these libraries duplicate copies of publications which they were receiving from the superintendent of documents. The report of the Chief of the Division of Publications, Department of Agriculture, for the fiscal year 1910 shows that this revision of library mailing lists resulted in an aggregate saving of more than 220,000 publications in one year for that department alone.

The following is a summary of replies made by the depository libraries to the principal questions which the commission asked them in its inquiry of 1910.

I ask the privilege of having this list, together with extracts from a few of the hundreds of letters which the commission has received from these libraries, printed as part of my remarks without reading them all.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, permission is granted.

The matter referred to is as follows:

REPLIES TO LEADING QUESTIONS PROPOUNDED TO DEPOSITORY LIBRARIES BY THE PRINTING INVESTIGATION COMMISSION, MAY 20, 1910.

Colgate University Library, Hamilton.
Government publications should be accessible to readers who may wish to borrow them. Advocates right to select.
Pratt Institute Free Library, Brooklyn.
While desirous of getting everything for library, approves of suggestion that privilege of selection be accorded.
Astor Branch, New York Public Library, New York City.
Should have opportunity to receive reports of congressional hearings and reports. The designation as a depository library should not be affected by a change in congressional districts. Selection should be permitted.
Library of the College of the City of New York.
An amended list of publications, classified according to character of library and relative usefulness of same, should be furnished libraries as a guide to selections.
Union College Library, Schenectady.
While preferring to receive everything, expresses the opinion that certain publications are "totally valueless."
Troy Public Library, Troy.
Approves suggestion as to selection. A depository library should be permanent. Circulation should not be restricted.
North Dakota:
State Historical Society Library, Bismarck.
While personally desirous of receiving all publications, favors selection.
Ohio:
Ohio Wesleyan University Library, Delaware.
All documents should be distributed through the superintendent of documents. He should be permitted to supply duplicates when desired.
Toledo Public Library, Toledo.
While desirous of receiving all, suggests that smaller libraries should not be compelled to receive all.
Oregon:
University of Oregon Library, Eugene.
While categorically expressing desire to receive all, favors selection.
Pennsylvania:
Carnegie Library of the Pennsylvania State College, State College.
State libraries should receive everything; smaller libraries only what they select.
The Historical Society of Pennsylvania, Philadelphia.
Desires only what is of especial interest.
The Free Library of Philadelphia.
A depository library should be such permanently; should receive the journals and be allowed to loan public documents.
Philadelphia Museum Library.
While desirous of receiving everything, favors right to select.
Watts de Peyster Library, Lancaster.
If bound publications are sent out promptly, would prefer not to receive the unbound.
Scranton Public Library, Scranton.
Designation should be permanent. Superintendent of documents to examine periodically whether law is lived up to.
Carnegie Library of Pittsburgh.
While personally desirous of receiving everything, strongly urges the privilege of selection. Many duplicates could be used.
Rhode Island:
Rhode Island State Library, Providence.
While desirous of receiving all, advocates a classification of libraries Commends greater promptness of late as to receipt of books.
Providence Public Library.
Only cares for department sets, because of receiving them earlier.
Westerly Public Library, Westerly.
Advocates privilege to select. Patrons should be allowed to take publications out of library.
South Dakota:
South Dakota State College Library, Brookings.
Allow selection; inspect periodically; have one complete depository, from which near-by smaller libraries could borrow.
Tennessee:
Carnegie Library of Nashville.
Strongly urges privilege of selection.
Texas:
Agricultural and Mechanical College of Texas Library, College Station.
While this library can use all, approves of selection privilege.
Texas State Library, Austin.
Disapproves distribution by Members of Congress; no sense in limiting purchase to one copy apiece.
Carnegie Public Library, Fort Worth.
The largest libraries should be made the depository libraries; a paid commission of librarians should be organized to work out a system of making public documents of most value to the people; documents should be grouped by subjects; cataloguing should be provided.
University of Texas Library, Austin.
While desirous of obtaining everything, favors privilege to select; reduce number of depositories; allow binding of but one edition of department reports and distribute them promptly; make provision for fuller and prompter index.
Virginia:
Virginia State Library, Richmond.
While desirous of receiving everything, concedes desirability of permitting small libraries to select.
Washington:
Washington State College Library, Pullman.
All documents should come from a single source; privilege to select favored.
University of Washington, Seattle.
Personally desires to receive all, but favors privilege to select for smaller libraries.
Wisconsin:
La Crosse Public Library, La Crosse.
Advocates comprehensive index to congressional set.
Wisconsin State Historical Library, Madison.
While desirous of receiving all, favors classification of depository libraries, with a view to permitting selection.

Mr. SMOOT. The fact that the superintendent of documents had on hand in his accumulation many thousands of copies of the Official Gazette of the Patent Office led the Printing Commission to make a special inquiry into this distribution. Under the present law each Member of Congress is entitled to designate 8 libraries in his district or State to receive the Official Patent Gazette, which is issued weekly. According to this provision 3,904 libraries could have been designated, but on April 16, 1910, when the commission made its investigation, only 3,201 had been named by Members of Congress. Of this number, investigation showed that 1,574 wanted to continue receiving the Gazette, 925 replied that the Gazette was of no service to them, while 702 failed to make any reply to repeated inquiries of the commission. As a result of this investigation, the commission recommended that the superintendent of documents discontinue sending the Official Gazette to 1,627 libraries, or more than half of those on his list originally. The commission is therefore firm in the belief that the distribution of the Patent Gazette should be confined to the designated depository libraries.

I ask to have printed a statement showing the result of the commission's inquiries in the distribution of the Official Patent Gazette to libraries:

The VICE PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, permission is granted.

Mr. SMOOT. The bill also proposes a further economy in the printing of Patent Office publications by discontinuing the expensive and useless library edition of the patent specifications which is now required by law to be sent to every United States district court, the capitol of every State, and each executive department. The library edition of patent specifications consists of three immense volumes, which are sent monthly to these courts and libraries. These three volumes average between 9,000 and 10,000 printed pages a month. The Secretary of the Interior has made a thorough investigation of the uses to which this library edition has been put and has found that it is practically of no value whatever. With one exception, judges of the United States district and circuit courts replied that the publication was of no service to their courts, and the majority of the libraries replied that they had no practical use for it, the weekly Patent Gazette being a more serviceable publication for them. The discontinuance of the library edition will effect a saving of approximately $65,000 a year. The bill provides another method whereby libraries may obtain copies of patent specifications and drawings at far less expense to the Government.

Another investigation conducted by the commission in regard to the distribution to libraries was that relating to geological publications. Under the present law each Member of Congress is entitled to designate four libraries in his State to receive publications of the Geological Survey. On April 16, 1910, when this investigation was undertaken, but a little more than half of the total number of possible designations had been made. Of the 1,008 geological depository libraries at that time, 158 expressed a desire to be stricken from the mailing lists, having no use for geological publications; 145 preferred to make selections of the publications to be sent them; 189 failed to reply to repeated inquiries from the commission. As a result of this investigation 347 libraries were stricken from the list of geological depositories. It is apparent, therefore, that this distribution was of service only to about a fourth of the libraries that could have been designated under the present law.

I submit herewith a tabulated statement showing the result of this inquiry relating to geological depository libraries:

VALUATION PLAN FOR CONGRESS.

I now come to the most important part of the bill as it relates to Congress. I refer to the proposed valuation plan for the distribution of publications to Members of Congress. By this plan each Senator and Member will be accorded an annual credit with the superintendent of documents at the Government Printing Office by which he can obtain any number of publications subject to valuation distribution to the amount of his credit. At present Senators and Members are allotted a fixed quota of every publication sent to the folding rooms, whether or not these publications are of any service to them. Let me illustrate briefly: Under the quota plan the Senators from Kansas receive as many Nautical Almanacs, Reports of the Coast and Geodetic Survey, and Reports of the Commissioner of Navigation as the Senators from New Jersey. The Senators from Massachusetts get as many irrigation bulletins as the Senators from Idaho. Members of Congress from New York City each get as many agricultural yearbooks, cattle books, and horse books as Members of Congress from Nebraska.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. SMOOT. I do.

Mr. BRISTOW. I should like to inquire if the Senator from Utah has made an inquiry as to what becomes of the horse books and cattle books, for instance, which would be assigned to Congressmen representing a city district?

Mr. SMOOT. In many cases they are transferred to Senators and Members who can make use of them, and, in turn, they transfer documents that would be of more interest to the constituents of the Senator or Member from a city district.

Mr. BRISTOW. But what publication now would a Representative from the city of New York, for instance, be greatly interested in that he could dispose of, say, 1,200 horse books for?

Mr. SMOOT. Under the proposed plan he need not take one horse book; he can have any publication or document that is printed, and take the whole $2,500 worth if he so desires.

Mr. BRISTOW. Under the present plan, though he is assigned, we will say, so many horse books—100 or 1,200, or whatever the number may be—do the 15 Representatives representing the city of New York, for instance, trade those off for some other documents? What would they want? What would they get? What would they use? What public documents are used for distribution in a city?

Mr. SMOOT. They perhaps would want the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD; a great many of them perhaps would want reports on the Navy; they would want the Nautical Almanac; they would want immigration publications; and they could take any documents of interest to the people of New York, or they could take their entire quota in one document if they so desired, under the proposed plan.

Mr. BRISTOW. But what I am trying to get at, if the Senator has the information, is as to what becomes of the books that are now assigned, but which are evidently not used?

Mr. SMOOT. Some of them are sold; in fact, most of the documents not wanted are sold as old waste paper.

Mr. BRISTOW. But valuable books that are in demand throughout the country, like the horse book, of which we had 100,000 copies reprinted not long ago, are certainly not sold as waste paper?

Mr. SMOOT. No; they are transferred to some Senator or some Representative, as the case may be, who is directly interested in that particular book; but under the proposed plan, if the Senator from Kansas wanted his full quota in horse books, he could take all horse books, or if he wanted all Agricultural Yearbooks, he could take his full quota in Agricultural Yearbooks.

Mr. BRISTOW. But, again, Mr. President, a Member of the House or a Senator is now given a certain quota, and he has this opportunity for exchange. The sum total of the documents that are assigned to him when exchanged for those he wants gives him a very desirable number for distribution. How much is that curtailed by this proposed plan?

Mr. SMOOT. None at all. If the Senator will just wait a moment I will show him the amount that is expended each year for the printing of public documents, how it is divided, and what it has been for the last six years; but under the proposed plan we have divided the amount so that every Senator will have $2,500 worth a year to his credit and every Representative will have $1,800 worth.

Mr. ROOT. How is that amount ascertained?

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator from New York asks how that amount is ascertained. I will reach the figures in a very few minutes and show just exactly how it is ascertained.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, emphasizing the wisdom of the suggested plan as it is being outlined by the Senator from Utah, I will say that I have turned to a list of documents that are to my credit at the present time, and, while I have not made an accurate calculation, I am very sure that there are on that list at least 1,000 documents relating to irrigation. I have not a constituent who cares anything for any of those documents. There must be also on the list several thousand geological bulletins, for which there is no call from my section of the country, except in very rare instances. There are four or five hundred copies of the messages and documents, which I believe it is very wisely contemplated to abandon publishing, and so on through the list—several thousand copies of public documents printed at the expense of the taxpayers that I have not any earthly use for and should be glad to give them to any Senator who wants them.

Mr. ROOT. I should like to ask the Senator from Utah whether the entire quota for each Senator and Representative of each of these public documents is printed?

Mr. SMOOT. Once a week each Senator receives, or should receive, the published statement of the documents that are to his credit.

Mr. ROOT. But are the documents which are to the credit of each Senator all printed?

Mr. SMOOT. Under the edition system they are not all printed. That has been one of the great savings that have been made within the last few years. We print now in editions.

Mr. ROOT. There is no very great demand in my State for reports on the boll weevil, I will suggest to the Senator.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, I think there is possibly an opportunity for a misunderstanding as to the agricultural bulletins. The Senator from New Hampshire says that he has no use for bulletins on irrigation.

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes.

Mr. BRISTOW. And the Senator from New York [Mr. ROOT] says he has no call for bulletins on the boll weevil; but he has a certain number of bulletins from the Agricultural Department assigned to him, and he can take them all in boll-weevil bulletins, or irrigation bulletins, or bulletins on the culture of tobacco, or he can select any one or any number of these bulletins that his constituents desire.

Mr. GALLINGER. That would not apply to the geological bulletins.

Mr. BRISTOW. No; but it does to the boll-weevil bulletins and the irrigation bulletins.

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes.

Mr. BRISTOW. There are hundreds of bulletins that are never distributed in the State that I in part represent, because the people there have no use for them, but the full quota, I think, of agricultural bulletins is distributed every year by the Representatives and Senators from that State, and the publications in which the people of that State are interested are the ones that are sent, and the bulletins in which they are not interested are not sent, but are used in other States where they are of value.

Mr. SMOOT. This brief enumeration, I believe, makes fully apparent the vital defects in the present quota system of distribution for Congress. It is easy to understand how, under such a system, there has been an enormous waste in the distribution of these publications. The accumulation in the folding rooms from time to time of vast quantities of documents that Members of Congress have been unable to distribute is really only a small part of the waste caused by this system. It is in the knowledge of almost every Senator, I believe, that literally thousands of tons of Government publications have been sent into their States that have been of little or no benefit to their constituents. This distribution of useless publications has been made largely for campaign purposes and because Members of Congress did not have the means of obtaining such publications as would interest and be of value to their constituents. Under the proposed valuation plan a Senator from an agricultural State could use his entire credit, if he so desired, to obtain agricultural yearbooks for his constituents; a Senator from a mining State could use his document credit entirely for geological publications; or a Senator from a State interested in maritime affairs could use his document credit for publications relating to navigation.

For the information of the Senate I submit herewith a list of standard publications annually allotted to the folding room, with the fixed quota credited to each Senator and Member, and the total number of copies of each authorized by law for the Senate and the House of Representatives. I believe a study of this list will convince Senators of the inequality and waste in the present system.

Mr. President, I should like to have the list printed without reading, as it is somewhat long, but I will name a few. For instance, the Abridgment of the Messages and Documents, of which each Senator gets 43 copies and each Member of the House gets 19, a total of 4,000 copies being printed for the Senate and 8,000 for the House. Take the Agricultural Yearbook. Each Senator has a quota of 1,152 and each Member of the House 897. There are 110,000 copies printed for the Senate and 360,000 copies for the House.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, may I inquire how many of the Yearbooks are not distributed?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I have not the list with me, but, so far as the Agricultural Yearbooks are concerned, I will say to the Senator, they are practically all distributed. I now ask, Mr. President, that the table to which I have referred may be printed without reading.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, permission is granted.

The table referred to is as follows:

Mr. SMOOT. When the commission began to investigate the distribution of documents by Congress it held a preliminary hearing, May 7, 1910, on the valuation system which had been suggested by Hon. Walter I. Smith, then a Member of Congress from Iowa and now a judge of the United States Circuit Court.

Mr. Smith in his statement to the committee said:

My plan would be to find out what the entire senatorial and congressional quota amounts to per Member and the amount per Member in cost, and then provide that each Senator and Representative shall be credited with that amount at the office of the superintendent of documents for the year ending March 4; abolish the folding room of the Senate and the House of Representatives, and have the entire distribution through the superintendent of documents, who would furnish to each Senator and Representative upon his order any public document and charge it at the regular price ordinarily charged by the superintendent of documents. Of course, this credit would be payable only in documents. Under this system the superintendent of documents would from time to time order an edition of any document when there were sufficient requisitions to justify it. There never would be any documents printed except as actually needed for distribution. Every Member could get exactly what his constituency wanted, and the cost to the Government, if the credit was equal to the present expenditure, would be the same as now. But, in view of the enormous waste of the present system, and the fact that every Member now receives many documents he has no use for, I think the credit in dollars at the office of the superintendent of documents could well be put very considerably below the total present cost.

I regard this plan as one of economy to the Government, of tremendous convenience to the Members, and as accomplishing the purpose sought by furnishing the various constituencies with what they both want and need. It would also stop the annoying and reprehensible practice of Members soliciting one another for transfers, whereby what the law contemplates shall go to one district is diverted to another.

The superintendent of documents, Mr. August Donath, also made an extended statement at this hearing and has since assisted the commission in working out the proposed valuation plan for distributing documents.

Dr. W. T. Wirt, of the Geological Survey, also explained to the commission how the survey has for a number of years maintained a valuation account in the distribution of its publications to Members of Congress.

The commission submitted the valuation plan to a score of the leading book publishers in the United States for advice as to its practicability or suggestions as to the proper method of putting it into operation.

I submit some of their replies for the information of the Senate.

Lewis Parkhurst, who is in charge of the Athenaeum Press in Cambridge, Mass., for the firm of Ginn & Co., of Boston, Mass., replying for that company said:

I quite agree with you that the method of printing these Congressional publications and distributing them equally among the Members of Congress, no matter what their interests or their constituents' interests may be, must have resulted in a very great waste of the people's money during these many years. I have often thought of this as various things have come in to me in which I had absolutely no interest.

Now with reference to your proposed plan called the "Valuation scheme." It would seem to me that, without any question, the Members of Congress would be better able to supply their constituents with the kind of publications that most concerned them than under the present system. Whether or not there would be any net saving to the Government would depend, of course, upon the size of your appropriation to each Member. If you know what you now expend and can take a certain portion of that, say one-half or two-thirds, and divide it equally among the Congressmen, then you will make a great saving. If, however, it is only in the kind of material and not the total amount, I can not see how you would save anything. Possibly you might be able to manufacture a little more closely than you can at present. If you have considerable excess printing now, that, I should think, would be largely done away with in future, provided you could hold your Congressmen to their original estimates.

You ask, first, "Do you think such a scheme practical for Government publications?" It seems to me thoroughly practical, provided you can agree upon the appropriation, and provided your Congressmen will give their orders all at once, so that you can know just how many of each document you will need to print.

To answer your second question, "Would it result in any economy if conducted in a businesslike manner?" I think it would.

To sum up, then, I should think by changing your method as suggested you would give much better service to your constituents for the same amount of money, and with cooperation on the part of your Congressmen and careful oversight on the part of your management you might be able to save considerable. Of this last point, however, I do not feel so sure, because I imagine your Congressmen will insist on spending about so much anyway.

Mr. G. H. Mifflin, president of the Houghton-Mifflin Co., publishers, of Boston, Mass., in his letter said, concerning the valuation scheme:

From our standpoint and experience, we can not see why this plan is not entirely practicable and why it should not result in a very material saving to the Government, for the Printing Office can invite advance orders from the Members of Congress for the publications about to be issued and can base the editions they print on the orders they thus receive precisely as a publishing house does. If the edition that is printed is exhausted by excess of orders, it is a simple matter to reprint from the electrotype plates. The cost of presswork, paper, and binding can, of course, easily be estimated in advance, so as to determine the price for quotation to Members, the only indeterminate question being the cost of the composition and electrotyping, including costs of any cuts, maps, etc., and the size of the first edition, which will determine the addition per copy to the manufacturing cost that should be allowed for the plates or plant.

We are extremely desirous of cooperating with you in saving a waste which is apparent, and if we are not sufficiently explicit or can give you any further information, please call on us freely.

F. A. Duneka, general manager of Harper & Bros., publishers, of New York, in his letter said:

In reply to your letter of May 15 asking advice as to a more economical and satisfactory method for the distribution of Government publications by Members of Congress, we beg to say that the plan you outline in general seems distinctly better than the method at present employed. It is a basic principle of all book publishing that the number of any book printed should not materially exceed the number in demand by the public. Any excessive overproduction means financial loss, of course.

This method, it seems to us, would be eminently fair to Members of Congress and to their constituents, and should certainly result in large economies. It is closely analogous to the method employed by most large publishing houses in this country.

William W. Ellsworth, secretary of the Century Co., publishers, of New York, said of the valuation scheme:

Your proposed "valuation scheme" seems practical and would certainly result in a saving to the Government. If a circular could be sent to each Member of Congress and to the departments needing books, calling for the number wanted in advance of publication, the great accumulations of books would cease. Very soon the printers would learn the average number of extra copies that would be needed.

Scott, Foresman & Co., educational publishers, of Chicago, Ill., in their reply stated:

Referring to your recent letter in regard to the printing and distribution of Government publications, we are pleased to give you what information we can, judged in the light of our experience. Our conclusions when applied to Government business, however, might be false, as our volume of printing would only be a small percentage of the amount turned out in the Government Printing Office yearly.

Replying to your questions—

First: We believe that the scheme would prove practical after a period of two or three years; at that time the Printing Office would have some data on which to base its edition of a particular document.

Second. It is our opinion that errors in forecasting the demand for any particular pamphlet, with consequent reprintings in case of a shortage, or an overstock, would nearly offset any advantages over the old system for the first two or three years, but, as stated above, a marked economy would, in our opinion, be shown after this period by the plan proposed in your letter.

Rand, McNally & Co., printers and publishers, of Chicago, Ill., in explaining their plan of printing editions said:

We believe the valuation scheme outlined in your letter will result in great economy.

E. W. Fielder, of D. Appleton & Co., publishers, of New York, in his reply said:

The present plan in vogue in the Government Printing Office by which the size of editions are fixed without any regard whatever to demand, is, as you point out, and as might have been foreseen, entirely unsatisfactory. We do not see, however, that any of the practices and customs of the publishers engaged in commercial business could assist materially in remedying matters.

You ask us whether we think the plan which you outline, by which the Superintendent of Documents must anticipate the demand for particular publications, would be practical. This, in our opinion, would depend entirely upon the amount of assistance which the Superintendent of Documents might receive. If he were obliged to depend entirely upon his own experience and judgment, we can see possibilities of confusion and much dissatisfaction. If it were possible, however, to devise a plan by which the Members of Congress should in advance state their requirements as to particular publications, it would be, we should think, comparatively easy so to manage the printing of editions as to lead to little or no waste and great economy. We make this suggestion with considerable timidity, because it is so obvious that it must have occurred to your commission, and we presume, have been rejected for some good reason not apparent to use.

J. W. Hiltman, treasurer and manager of the Edward Thompson Co., law publishers, of Northport, N. Y., said in his reply:

The "valuation scheme" suggested in your esteemed favor of May 14 we believe would work satisfactorily providing the Members of Congress could be prevailed upon by law or otherwise to make requisitions in advance of printing for the number of copies of every public document (current) they desire.

An advance requisition scheme would probably make a "valuation scheme" unnecessary and might to an extent prevent Members from trading their "valuation balances" (a passing thought, which please pardon). We believe it would reduce the printing office expenses to the minimum and still give to every Member of Congress as many copies of each public document as he desired.

In working out the detail for the proposed valuation plan the commission called upon the Public Printer for an itemized statement showing the estimated cost of publications allotted to Senators and Members during each of the following fiscal years, 1904, 1905, 1906, 1907, 1908, 1909, 1910, and 1911, based upon the prices charged therefor by the superintendent of documents. These prices are the same as the bill requires the superintendent of documents to charge Members of Congress under the valuation plan. The estimates submitted by the Public Printer for these fiscal years cover the sessions of Congress from the second session of the Fifty-eighth Congress to and including the third session of the Sixty-first Congress. It is believed that these estimates form an absolutely fair basis upon which to compute the valuation credit for Members. The estimates for each year include not only the standard publications to which I have already referred, the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, and the Congressional Directory, but also every special publication that Congress ordered printed and distributed through the folding rooms, such as "Diseases of the Horse," "Diseases of Cattle," "Hinds' Precedents," "Tariff Hearings," "Jefferson's Bible," "Memorial Addresses on Lincoln, Garfield, and McKinley," "Moore's Digest of International Law," "Charters and Constitutions," and the "Conference of Governors."

The following table shows the total value of all these publications allotted to Senators and Members under the present quota system based on the prices charged by the superintendent of documents and the total average per year, including United States maps:

Value of all publications allotted to Senators and Members based on prices charged by the superintendent of documents.

Fiscal year—	Total value.
1904	$968,114.10
1905	905,032.15
1906	1,081,234.80
1907	956,817.05
1908 (no figures obtainable)
1909	1,368,012.91
1910	1,384,100.01
1911	1,137,916.79
Total for 7 years	7,801,227.81
Average for 1 year	1,114,461.11
United States maps	20,000.00
Total per year, including United States maps	1,134,461.11

Using this annual average of $1,134,461 as a basis, the commission proceeded to determine the credit that should be allotted Senators and Members under the valuation system. A study of the present quotas showed that Senators receive a third more CONGRESSIONAL RECORDS and Yearbooks than Members of the House and twice as many other publications, and that the quotas of CONGRESSIONAL RECORDS and Agricultural Yearbooks cost approximately two-thirds of the entire value of all the publications allotted to Congress. The commission decided therefore that the credit to be accorded each Senator and the Vice President should be a little more than one-third greater than that to be given each Member, Delegate, and Resident Commissioner of the House of Representatives.

Taking the increased membership of the Senate and the new apportionment for the House as a basis, the commission came to the conclusion that $2,500 would be an equitable annual credit for each Senator and the Vice President, and $1,800 for each Member, Delegate, and Resident Commissioner of the House. Such a credit would amount to $1,032,700. As I stated before, the total average annual value of publications allotted to Senators and Members from 1904 to 1911, inclusive, was $1,134,461. This sum, as compared with the total for the annual credit proposed, would indicate a saving of $101,761. In addition to this sum, the commission ascertained that by abolishing the present folding rooms and consolidating this distribution for Congress under the superintendent of documents, at the Government Printing Office, as would be necessary to the success of a valuation plan, a further saving of $55,975 could be effected, making the total annual saving under the valuation plan $157,736. This estimated saving is the minimum that could be made if every Senator and Member used his entire document credit. It is believed, however, that many Senators and Members will not exhaust their credit, and as the unexpended balance is not to be carried over from year to year it is thought that an estimate of $200,000 a year saving under the valuation plan is a most conservative one. This estimate does not take into consideration the far greater saving that would be made in distributing Government publications in accordance with the actual requirements of the State or district of each Senator or Member. Under the valuation plan not a single publication need be wasted, for Members of Congress will not have to distribute great quantities of documents, as at present, simply to get rid of them.

Nor does this estimate take into consideration the present expense of hauling the thousands of tons of documents to and from the Capitol folding rooms. With the centralization of this distribution in the office of the superintendent of documents, and the location of the new city post office just across the street from the Government Printing Office, adjoining the Union Station, it would be possible to have the documents carried almost direct from the Printing Office to the mail trains, thus saving from 24 to 48 hours time over the present method of hauling documents from the Printing Office to the Capitol, from the Capitol to the city post office, and back again from the city post office to the Union Station.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly.

Mr. BRISTOW. Now, referring to the allowance of $2,500 of documents to each Senator, that is to expire with the year, as I understand, and of $1,800 for a Representative in Congress, some of those documents or publications have a commercial value. What system of distribution does the Senator recommend in order to avoid the possibility of the credit being cashed by the sale of these documents to secondhand bookstores? Such a thing has been done in the past.

Mr. SMOOT. That has been done in a few cases, I will admit, but I do not see how it is possible to prevent a Senator or a Member of the House drawing out these documents and selling them to a secondhand dealer. I will say to the Senator that there have been a few such cases reported—but very few.

Mr. BRISTOW. I have been advised in the years that have gone by that at times employees in the House and Senate or employees in the offices of Congressmen and Senators have dealt in this literature. Would not this credit system offer a larger opportunity for the clerks or the employees, or even the Congressman, if he were disposed to do such a thing, to realize upon these publications?

Mr. SMOOT. On the contrary, it minimizes it as compared with the present law. Under the present law the documents go from the document room to the folding room, and then from the folding room back to the document room and then to the train. Under this plan they would go direct to the superintendent of documents. Then the document room is to distribute the documents, and I think if the superintendent of documents found that any Member of Congress was ordering a book sent to a secondhand store it would be reported. But this plan in the proposed bill minimizes the chances of doing such a thing.

Mr. BRISTOW. To illustrate, a Senator whom I have in mind complained at one time that valuable documents and books which he had sent to constituents were not delivered, and an investigation showed that the Post Office Department had never received the documents. The Senator thought they had gone to his constituents. But they disappeared.

Now, in the thousands of documents and publications that are being distributed the opportunity exists for subordinates, if they are disposed to be dishonest, to sell them. Indeed, documents which Senators thought had been distributed to their constituents have been found in secondhand bookstores in this city. What system does the Senator recommend to prevent that occurring under the credit plan?

Mr. SMOOT. Of course we can not legislate to make men honest; that is impossible; but under the proposed bill the books go direct from the document room to the train, and we can not make it more direct than that. It would be impossible to do so.

Mr. BRISTOW. What accounting would there be between the orders from the Senators and the Printing Office, in order to ascertain whether the clerks in the Printing Office sent those documents as ordered?

Mr. SMOOT. A system of checking in the document room will be provided, no doubt.

Mr. BRISTOW. That would, it seems to me, be necessary. Otherwise we would simply transfer the opportunity from the Senator's office or the Senate employee to the employee of the Government Printing Office, and unless there is a check the opportunity for fraud exists. While we can not legislate to make men honest, we can perfect a system by which dishonesty may be detected.

Mr. SMOOT. Very few public documents are sent from a Senator's office. Most of them are sent direct from the folding room or the document room, and under this system I suppose the great bulk of them would go direct from the document room.

As the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and the Agricultural Yearbooks constitute the bulk of each Member's quota at present, let me submit some figures showing the value of these and other publications allotted to Senators and Members based upon the prices that the superintendent of documents used in estimating the valuation credits:

Value of Congressional Record, Agricultural Yearbook, and all other publications allotted to Senators and Members based on charges by the superintendent of documents.

CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

Fiscal year:	Total value.

Mr. NELSON. Who is to fix the valuation?

Mr. SMOOT. The valuation is fixed by the Public Printer at actual cost, with 10 per cent added. The law so provides.

The following figures, taken from the reports of the Public Printer, show that three-fourths of each Senator's quota of 88 CONGRESSIONAL RECORDS and each Member's quota of 60 CONGRESSIONAL RECORDS are distributed in unbound daily form:

Congressional Record distribution.

(Senator's quota, 88; Member's quota, 60.)

Fiscal year.	Unbound (daily).	Bound (session).	Total.
1903	11,141	18,135	29,276
1904	18,779	12,208	30,987
1905	19,746	11,241	30,987
1906	22,652	8,335	30,987
1907	22,841	8,687	31,528
1909	24,585	7,479	32,064
1910	25,200	6,864	32,064
1911	24,986	7,078	32,064
Total, 8 years	169,930	80,027	249,957

In ascertaining the value of the present quotas of the RECORD, bound and unbound, the commission found the average price of the bound RECORD for each long session of Congress to be $16.80, and for each short session $8.17. The present law and the proposed bill fixes the price of the daily RECORD at $8 for the long session and $4 for the short session, which prices are approximately their present cost. The value of the bound RECORD for the last five sessions of Congress, as based upon the prices charged by the superintendent of documents, is as follows:

Price of bound Record.

Congress.	Long session	Short session.
Fifty-seventh	$13.50	$5.50
Fifty-eighth	10.50	7.00
Fifty-ninth	23.00	10.00
Sixtieth	20.50	8.75
Sixty-first	16.50	9.60
Total	84.00	40.85
Average	16.80	8.17

Based upon the fact that three-fourths of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORDS are distributed in daily, unbound form, and that during a fiscal year a Senator or Member distributes either (a) the daily RECORD for a long session of Congress and the bound RECORD for a short session, or (b) the daily RECORD for a short session and the bound RECORD for a long session, the commission prepared the following estimate showing the average annual value of the RECORD quota for a Senator to be $660 and for a Member $450:

VALUE OF PRESENT QUOTA OF RECORDS.

For a Senator.

(a) Daily long and bound short session:
66 daily, at $8	$528
22 bound, at $8	176
Total	704
or
(b) Daily short and bound long session:
66 daily, at $4	264
22 bound, at $16	352
Total	616
Average per fiscal year	660

For a Member.

(a) Daily long and bound short session:
45 daily, at $8	360
15 bound, at $8	120
Total	480
or
(b) Daily short and bound long session:
45 daily, at $4	180
15 bound, at $16	240
Total	420
Average per fiscal year	450

The following table shows the annual value of Congressional Records and Agricultural Yearbooks to the credit of each Senator and Member, based on their present quotas and the amount that would be available for other publications under the proposed valuation plan if a Senator or Member concluded to use his full quota of Records and Yearbooks:

Value of Records and Yearbooks to credit of each Senator or Member based on present annual quota.

For a Senator:
Average value Records	$660.00
Average value Yearbooks (1,152 at 95 cents)	1,094.40
	1,754.40
Available for other publications	745.60
Annual valuation credit	2,500.00
For a Member:
Average value Records	450.00
Average value Yearbooks (897 at 95 cents)	852.15
	1,302.15
Available for other publications	497.85
Annual valuation credit	1,800.00

Under the present quota system the increased membership of the Senate this session and of the House in the next Congress will decrease the allotment of publications to Senators and Members. For example, the allotment of Agricultural Yearbooks at present is as follows: Each Senator, 1,152; each Member, 897.

The increase of membership will reduce the allotment of Yearbooks as follows: Each Senator, 1,111 or 46 less than at present; each Representative, 818 or 79 less than at present. A proportionate reduction will result in the allotment of every publication unless Congress authorizes an increase in the editions to be printed to correspond with the larger membership of Congress. This of itself would necessitate an almost complete revision of the printing laws.

In 1895, when the number of copies to be printed of the Yearbooks and many other publications allotted to Members was fixed by law, the quota of Yearbooks for each Senator was 1,208 copies as compared with 1,152 copies at present, and 1,111 copies when the membership of the Senate is increased. In 1895 the quota of Yearbooks for each Member of the House was 991 copies. At present the House quota is 897, and under the new apportionment it will be 818. This automatic reduction of the document quota of each Senator and Member, despite the fact that the population of the country has increased from 69,471,144 in 1895 to 91,972,266 in 1911, shows the inequality of the present quota system and its failure to readily adjust itself to the increasing needs of the country. In 1895 the 500,000 Yearbooks published by the Government provided one copy for every 1,390 persons. The same number of Yearbooks in 1911 provided one copy for every 1,840 persons, an increase of nearly one-third in the population without any increase whatever in the number of Yearbooks printed.

In contrast with this rigid quota system, which can not adjust itself to the needs of the country, the valuation plan is flexible and can readily respond to the increased population as indicated by congressional reapportionments.

The saving that would be effected by consolidating the work of the folding rooms under the superintendent of documents is shown by the following table:

COST OF FOLDING ROOMS AND SAVING IN DISTRIBUTION BY SUPERINTENDENT OF DOCUMENTS.

Fiscal year 1912.

Total cost Senate folding room	$36,846.82
Less folding speeches and material	7,046.82
Net cost, Senate		$29,800.00
Total cost House folding room	$53,140.75
Less folding speeches and material	7,000.00
Net cost, House		46,140.75
Total, net cost folding rooms		75,940.75
Additional cost, superintendent of documents		19,965.60
Net saving		55,975.15

Number of employees.

Senate folding room	28
House folding room	47
Total	75
Increase, superintendent of documents	26
Net decrease	49

If Congress so desired it could continue a small force of folders for the folding of speeches, which work is not included in the estimates by the superintendent of documents in regard to the valuation plan. Congress has heretofore made specific appropriations for the folding of speeches. It would be inadvisable, also, to immediately transfer all the documents in the folding rooms back to the Government Printing Office, and a considerable force would be required for some time here at the Capitol until the publications now in storage in the folding rooms could be distributed.

I believe the removal of the folding rooms to the Government Printing Office and the placing of these employees under the civil service will be to the best interest of the Government and to the advantage of every man employed in this work. I realize that this will eventually cause a reduction in the number of employees of Congress and thus somewhat curtail the patronage of Senators and Members, but I firmly believe, in view of the large economy that can be effected thereby, we owe this to the country. It is not fair or right that political patronage should stand in the way of such economy or better service for the people. I am sure the public will heartily commend Congress for putting the distribution of its documents on a modern business basis and for voluntarily taking this work out of the field of politics. From every point of view the valuation plan is for the best interest of the Government, Congress, and the people. It therefore comes before the Senate with the indorsement of the Printing Commission, which has made an exhaustive investigation of the subject, and the Senate Committee on Printing. I submit the plan for your earnest consideration.

As the section relating to the use of power presses for the printing of bonds, notes, and checks at the Bureau of Engraving and Printing has been stricken from the pending bill, I shall not discuss that subject at this time. I want to say, however, that I am heartily in favor of the agreement entered into by the Director of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing and the representatives of the Plate Printers' Union which the Senate Committee on Printing has recommended for the consideration of Congress in connection with the sundry civil appropriation bill. At the proper time I hope to submit some remarks in connection with that proposed amendment.

SERVICE PENSIONS.

Mr. McCUMBER. I ask that the unfinished business be laid before the Senate.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 1) granting a service pension to certain defined veterans of the Civil War and the War with Mexico.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, it has been suggested to me by those who oppose what they call excessive pension appropriations that the United States pays more than five times as much as any other country in the world to pension its soldiers and sailors. This is undoubtedly true. I believe France pays the next greatest amount, somewhere in the neighborhood of thirty-two or thirty-three millions. In the consideration of this general pension legislation it is probably proper that I should first state some reasons why we are not only justified in paying what some may call extremely liberal pensions but that it is our duty to do so.

It is true that we pay five times as much in pensions as any other single country in the world. It is equally true, in my opinion, that our reason for paying these pensions is five times greater than that of any other country for paying their pensioners.

The Civil War may clearly be distinguished from any other great war in the world. Its requirements demanded a depth of patriotism, a sense of duty, a devotion to principle which no other war in this country has demanded.

Mr. President, deep must be the sense of duty which impels a judge to pronounce the solemn sentence of the law when such sentence does violence to every impulse of his heart toward mercy and forgiveness.

Deeper and stronger still must be the sense of duty when it forces him to pronounce that sentence against a brother, a loved companion who has shared with him the vicissitudes of life, its struggles, its anxieties, the sting of its failures or the glory of its achievements.

And yet a thousand times more devoted to the sanctity of that law must be he who must not only overcome these impulses of his nature in passing that sentence, but whose own hand must strike the blow that executes it and whose own life and the happiness of those dependent upon him must be offered a sacrifice to uphold it.

And this, Mr. President, was the position occupied by every man who armed himself for the preservation of the Union and this the devotion which sustained him in all those long years of slaughter.

By his enlistment he pronounced against the constitutional right of any State or States to break the solidarity of the Union. By that enlistment he bound himself, not to battle against a foreign foe, but against his own people, his own blood, his own brothers, against those who had shared a common history, who had warred together for a common interest under a single flag. And in his devotion to that cause he offered his own life and his fortune. And as this war called for greater devotion to country than any other, it also calls for greater gratitude on the part of the people of that country. As the war preserved a country, greatest in the world, the most wealthy country in the world, that gratitude for this devotion may well be expressed in expenditures which shall mean that no man who served his country in that time of peril, that no man who suffered the severity of that war, in his declining years shall ever know the pangs of want or destitution.

I repeat that no other war in the history of the country has ever called for the same devotion to meet its demands as the war for the preservation of the Union. For 100 years prior to the Revolution we had been practically a distinct country with our own laws and our own questions to settle. The interrelation of the Colonies was very much closer than the relation between any colony and the mother country. Without those means of rapid intercommunication which to-day make peoples of all lands neighbors, there was little sentiment for the mother land. And so the Revolutionary soldier when he answered the summons to war felt himself not called upon to battle against his own people but against a foreign enemy, whose country not only denied that liberty claimed as a common heritage but whose armies were invading his own home.

The War of 1812 appealed to our national pride, and showed that we were ready to battle for that respect which was due to our country and the rights which we claimed for our citizens.

The War with Mexico demonstrated our military spirit and the willingness of our people to follow our flag even though it was pushed into a conquest for additional territory.

Our skirmish with Spain stands a record of national sympathy and demonstrates that a war may be maintained for humanity alone. Its continuance in the Philippines against the bolo men of those islands gives us assurance that, no matter what the cost, the young manhood of the country stands ready at all times to answer the demand for troops for any war which Congress may see fit to declare.

But in what other respect do we assume a greater degree of patriotism on the part of the soldiers of the Civil War?

Mr. President, I have often heard it said that after the first shot at Sumter the whole North arose as one man. I remember only the close of the Civil War, and at that time had not reached an age to comprehend either its cause or the sentiment of the average citizen concerning it. But from the sentiment which I knew of at the close of the war and that which my own investigations of the conditions during its progress have since brought to me I know that the North did not so arise. It is stated that 7 out of every 15 able-bodied men in the North were at some time in the service of the country. What were the other 8 doing? I know what a great many were doing—declaring the war a failure, demanding peace, and sympathizing with the Confederacy.

When Lincoln took the oath of office the Treasury had been looted, the troops were garrisoned in fortresses in the enemy's country, seemingly in anticipation of a possible war; officers educated by the Government to protect it in time of need deserted and used their expert knowledge, for which the Government had paid, and the sword which the Government had placed in their hands for her defense to destroy that Government. The President of the United States found himself with a formidable enemy before him and surrounded by enemies in high places around him. Copperheadism was rampant throughout the country. Riots followed drafts. Our soldiers were publicly stoned, not in the enemy's country but in the cities of the North. Along and through the border States it was more popular to favor disunion than to sympathize with the Union side.

These were the conditions that surrounded the Northern soldier, and it required great devotion to his country for him to overcome these influences and to place his life at the disposal of his country for its maintenance.

Unlike the soldiers of any other war, the soldier of the Civil War was compelled to battle against his own people—his own blood and kinsmen. He knew when he answered the summons that he must be the aggressor all along the line, and that aggressive warfare meant multiplied and disproportionate dangers. He knew that the forts and the arsenals were in the hands of the enemy; that the best-trained officers were mostly on their side; that the climatic conditions were favorable to them and unfavorable to him; that they would be battling in sight of their own firesides, in the sight of wives and daughters and mothers. He knew the sentiment of the world and that a certain degree of stigma always attaches to the invader and a corresponding degree of righteousness to the cause of the defender. He knew that many an army in maintaining an aggressive warfare in the enemy's country, however overwhelming in numbers, had gone down to defeat, while a much smaller portion of the same army in its own country in defense of its own home had achieved signal victory over overwhelming odds of the enemy.

Well might he have said, "Let them go; they are of our own blood, our own people; we will not invade their lands to force them to continue a political relation with us which they desire to annul."

But when he looked upon that flag, whose every fold told of a mighty battle fought, of a mighty struggle endured that this Nation might come into the world of nations; when he thought of the destiny of that Nation, the advance guard in the great march of human civilization; when he saw in his vision the object of his patriotic devotion crumbling like an ancient ruin, its prophecy unfulfilled, its glorious destiny checked and destroyed; when he thought of a single star being torn from that field of blue, a single stripe being dragged in the dust of humiliation, I think I can comprehend to some extent the depth of his devotion when he swore that despite all of the influences which surrounded him, despite his inclination to avoid a war, he would maintain that standard, he would make the prophecy of his Nation a reality.

And this is why I honor and revere the old soldier of the Civil War with an honor and reverence far greater than that which I feel for the soldiers of any other war. This is why I declare that it called for a devotion to principle, a stronger love of country than any other war, and this is why I say that our gratitude toward those defenders might well be expressed in the appropriation of such sums of money as will assure that so long as a single one of those patriots lives he shall never know want or destitution.

As I have differentiated the soldier of the Civil War from those of all other wars, at least from every war other than the Revolution, I would make a distinction in the matter of pensions. In these other ordinary skirmishes I am inclined to agree with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] that I would grant no purely service pension; that each soldier who should seek pension should be able to show that his disability occurred in line of service.

When I come to the regular establishment I am perfectly willing to say that I am not very favorably impressed with the law which grants any pension whatever. There is no law which compels anyone to enlist in times of peace, either in the Army or in the Navy. There is no law which compels the young man to apply for and receive an education at the expense of the Government, either at Annapolis or West Point. The man who serves as a soldier or an officer in time of peace has chosen a vocation because it better pleases him to follow that vocation. He does so out of no sense of duty which he owes to the Government, or because he feels that the Government especially needs his services. Every officer knows that there are a thousand young men who would be glad to take his place as a student at either of our academies. There is nothing in the service which appeals to me as a particular basis for expressing any gratitude on the part of the Government; and I know of no reason why the soldier or the officer should be pensioned for injury or loss of health in that very easy occupation which he has chosen any more than the same should be granted to people of every other occupation in life.

But I can see and I can feel very weighty reasons why this country with its enormous wealth might sustain in their declining years every veteran who in the days of his young manhood against all obstacles and overcoming all influences saved the life of this Nation.

Mr. President, what I personally want is legislation and legislation at this particular term. I would rather support a bill that will carry a reasonable amount and which would be a good and substantial increase and be able to pay that amount out of the income of the Government without the issuance of bonds for that purpose, keeping clearly, if possible, within our means this year. Then next year, if we fell that we can and ought to further increase pensions, I believe that we should return to our senses, conform our tariffs and internal revenues to the requirements of the country, increase the revenues, and pay the increased pensions out of that revenue.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. POMERENE in the chair). Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield, Mr. President.

Mr. BROWN. Does not the Senator believe that the better course to follow would be to pass a pension bill this year and at this session that is just, whether the estimated revenues give us any assurance that we exceed that appropriation or not, rather than to make the increases, which the Senator I knew believes ought to be made, piecemeal a year at a time? Why should not the subject be disposed of now for all time; that is to say, by passing a bill at this session which will cover the needs and requirements and the justice of the situation?

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I believe in granting to-day a sufficient amount to reach every case of destitution. With our private pension system I believe we are attending to every case of destitution. With nearly 400 Members of Congress, each in a separate district, each personally acquainted with almost every ex-soldier in his district, I believe that there is coming to us in private pension bills practically every case of destitution, and that we are reaching those cases and reaching them without the issuance of bonds. However, I further believe that the time is coming, and coming rapidly, when destitution will grow greater and greater, and therefore I believe that we should pass general legislation granting a rate that will be sufficient to prevent any case of destitution from arising rather than by meeting them by special legislation.

Mr. BROWN rose.

Mr. McCUMBER. My answer is not complete, if the Senator will give me a few moments more.

What I say is that I do not believe, as a friend of the veteran, that it is the part of wisdom to-day, under the present fiscal conditions of the country, to advance our pension legislation so rapidly and by such enormous leaps and bounds that we are liable to create an issue, engender and invite contention and criticism on the part of any of the people of the United States.

I do not wish, Mr. President, to place pension legislation in the position where it will even improperly invite criticism. I believe that the great rank and file of the soldiers to-day, remembering the spirit of generosity that has always actuated the Government in its dealing with pension legislation, will place a higher value upon the retention of that universal national gratitude than they would upon an increase of a few dollars per month at this particular time.

I believe, further, Mr. President, that they will, as a body, be satisfied if we increase the pensions so much that a year from now we will be paying out $33,000,000 in addition to what we are paying out to-day, and there would then probably be no necessity for any bond issue.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the junior Senator from Iowa?

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly.

Mr. KENYON. I would simply like to inquire of the Senator from North Dakota if the amount he suggests is the estimate which he makes of the increased cost under this bill?

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes; it is the increased cost. The average will be something like $20,000,000 a year for five years over the present cost of the pension legislation. The second year there will be about $33,000,000 additional cost. The first year it will be about $14,000,000. The Senator probably understands the reason for that discrepancy between the first and second year.

Mr. KENYON. Yes; and you have considered the death rate?

Mr. McCUMBER. Everything is taken into consideration. Certainly, any statement as to the future cost would be inaccurate unless it did take into consideration the death rate.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield further to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly.

Mr. BROWN. I am in full accord with the Senator in desiring to avoid a bond issue, but I am at a loss to understand why that bond scarecrow need be introduced into the consideration of this bill when there are bills carrying very much more money pending and will be pending in this body where a bond issue is not mentioned.

I call the Senator's attention to this consideration. Whether or not a bond issue becomes necessary depends not altogether on the estimated revenue that may be next year in excess of the expenditures, based on those of the current year, but it depends also on that other very great factor, what the appropriations of Congress may include on other subjects than pensions. So we may be able to avoid a bond issue by curtailing other expenditures than this one.

In this connection, further, permit me to suggest to the Senator that there can be no doubt about the old soldier prizing the sentiment of love and appreciation which his country bears for him, but from our standpoint to-day we are legislating not with regard to that sentiment but with regard to the situation of the old veteran himself. If his needs and his deserts are such as to make it a just thing for the Government to give him in this bill $80,000,000 per year, does not the Senator think we ought to vote that amount; in other words, that the merits of the measure shall determine? If the measure is just we ought to pass it, no matter how much it costs, and if it is unjust we ought not to pass it, no matter how little it costs. So, it seems to me, the standard to guide us is the situation to-day of the old soldier, his deserts, and our obligations to him.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, personally, I think the time is very near at hand when every old soldier who has reached the age of 70 years and has had a service, say, of six months, should be granted $30 per month. I believe we will reach that condition in a short time; but I do believe, Mr. President, that a bill which a year from to-day requires $87,000,000 more for pensions than at the present time, without any steps being taken or anything being done to increase the revenues of the country to meet that, and for which a bond issue would without any question have to be made, would create a sentiment of antagonism and would insure to some extent more or less criticism, and might make the question of pension legislation an issue.

I would not, Mr. President, shirk a duty in any way because I felt that we should be required to issue bonds, but, as I have stated, I believe we can meet every case of destitution by our private pension legislation until we can increase our revenue to meet a still further increase. The Senator has indicated that we might economize in some way and yet not be compelled to issue the bonds. Mr. President, I have taken that into consideration in assuming that we could vote the $33,000,000 a year at the present time. We would then even be compelled to eliminate many items in our appropriation bills to bring our expenses within our income. The estimated income has been falling off very rapidly in the last six months. It is not measuring up to the estimate that was made a few months ago, and with the present bills that are coming over from the other House, which indicate a purpose to decrease rather than increase our national income, it is hardly probable that we shall be able to increase the revenues of the country to any appreciable extent, and to keep within our income we shall undoubtedly be compelled to dispense with all of our extravagances and appropriate for nothing but the bare necessities of the Government.

Mr. President, every pension law that has ever been passed has come into existence as a glad refrain from the great national heart. And if I know the veterans of the Civil War aright I am certain that they, above all other people in this country, desire that any extension of pension legislation to meet the necessities of advancing years shall come in the future, as it has in the past, from the deepest wellsprings of national gratitude. And I know that nothing could pain them more than to feel that the pension system, emanating from the noblest and highest impulses, should at any time be made the subject for sensational journalism or that any portion of this Republic for which they offered their lives and fortunes should entertain a spirit of hostility against it.

I am certain that above all other things they would deprecate the idea that this generous system should ever be made a partisan football in any national political game.

I believe I correctly measure the sentiment of the veterans when I say that whatever they ask in the shape of recognition for the services of their fellow veterans, they want it to represent a genuine tribute to and a loving recognition of that service.

Now, Mr. President, I want to say one word as to the public feeling concerning pension legislation. I have read with interest the many resolutions that have come from the several States, and those resolutions mean that the love of the people of the State is yet strong for the old defenders.

I am well aware that it is difficult to always arrive at real public sentiment on all occasions, especially when that sentiment if expressed might be construed into something unpatriotic; but I do believe that if all of the American people to-day were to cast a deciding vote as between two propositions, "Shall we grant $33,000,000 this year, or the highest in this bill, and keep within our income, and then provide another year for a greater income to increase it another $30,000,000, or shall we increase it $60,000,000 by the issue of bonds this year," I believe the great majority would vote—and I think the great majority would include the majority of the members of the Grand Army of the Republic and the soldiers themselves—to keep within the income this year. "We battled for this country in its time of need when we were receiving but $13 a month in depreciated currency; we have never yet asked the country to issue bonds to meet its pension appropriations; and we will not to-day ask the country to go beyond its income or ability under an economic administration." I believe that to be the general sentiment of the soldiers as expressed by the representatives of the Grand Army of the Republic before the committee.

Mr. President, I desire to take up the two bills and explain them somewhat in detail. By the two bills I have reference to House bill No. 1 as it passed by the House and came to the committee, and also the substitute that was agreed upon by the majority of the Senate Committee on Pensions. But I understand that the Senator from New York [Mr. ROOT] has a matter in charge that he feels ought to have immediate consideration, and as this consideration of the two bills will take some time, I would rather close the discussion for to-night with the notice that on Friday, immediately after the completion of the morning business, I shall ask the Senate to proceed with the consideration of this particular bill that I may finish my remarks and that the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] may also make the address of which he has already given notice.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. POMERENE in the chair). In the absence of objection, the unfinished business will be temporarily laid aside.

Mr. ROOT obtained the floor.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I wish to ask the Senator from North Dakota a question or two, if he is inclined to answer.

Mr. McCUMBER. I am ready to answer the Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. ROOT. I do.

Mr. NEWLANDS. If it inconveniences the Senator from New York, who, as I understand, has a matter that he wishes especially to bring up——

Mr. ROOT. I have a matter which I think calls for the attention of the Senate this afternoon.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Then I will postpone my questions until the bill in charge of the Senator from North Dakota is again under consideration.

Mr. McCUMBER. I will state that I expect to renew the discussion on Friday.

EXPORT OF ARMS AND MUNITIONS OF WAR.

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution introduced by me this morning, and which has now been printed. It is Senate joint resolution No. 89.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 89) to amend the joint resolution to prohibit the export of coal or other material used in war from any seaport of the United States. It proposes to amend the joint resolution to prohibit the export of coal or other material used in war from any seaport of the United States, approved April 22, 1898, so as to read as follows:

That whenever the President shall find that in any American country conditions of domestic violence exist which are promoted by the use of arms or munitions of war procured from the United States, the President is hereby authorized, in his discretion, and with such limitations and exceptions as shall seem to him expedient, to prohibit the export of arms or munitions of war from any place in the United States to such country until otherwise ordered by the President or by Congress.

SEC. 2. That the shipment of any material prohibited by such a proclamation shall be punishable by fine not exceeding $10,000, or imprisonment not exceeding two years, or both.

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President, I will explain that the joint resolution is the outcome of a conference called by the President this morning with such members of the Texas delegation in the Senate and the House of Representatives and such members of the Committee on Foreign Relations of the Senate and the Committee on Foreign Affairs of the House of Representatives as he could conveniently reach, for the purpose of securing the extension of his power to prevent the wholesale passing of arms and munitions of war across the Texas frontier into Mexico. At that conference, in which quite a large number of gentlemen participated, there was a general expression of opinion that we ought to take up and amend our very antiquated neutrality laws; but the suggestion was made and met with general approval, although without any formal action, that that was a very large subject which would require long-continued consideration and discussion, affecting, as it must, all time, all countries in the world, and all possible contingencies. It was thought, however, that the immediate situation, which is now very pressing, indeed, could be dealt with by a slight extension of the power already conferred upon the President by an existing joint resolution passed on the 22d of April, 1898. That joint resolution is as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the President is hereby authorized, in his discretion, and with such limitations and exceptions as shall seem to him expedient, to prohibit the export of coal or other material used in war from any seaport of the United States until otherwise ordered by the President or by Congress.

The idea was to extend that joint resolution so that it would apply not only to seaports, but to exports from inland places across the border line.

The joint resolution was taken up by the Committee on Foreign Relations, was carefully considered, and, with many suggestions from different members of the committee, was perfected in such form that the Committee on Foreign Relations by unanimous vote authorized me to introduce the joint resolution in the Senate and to ask for its present consideration, with the statement that it has the approval of that commitee.

The situation in Texas is such that it does not admit of delay for the purpose of the general reform of our neutrality laws, and the people of Texas are deeply interested in having this extension of power to the President made immediately.

With the extension of the application of the joint resolution from seaports to all places in the United States, the committee thought it was advisable to put some limitations upon the power which is included in the existing law, and so the power of the President to forbid the exportation of arms and munitions has been limited to countries in which he finds that domestic violence is being promoted by the procurement of arms and munitions of war from the United States. At the same time a penalty is affixed for the violation of the prohibition.

The conditions are such that thousands of Americans in Mexico are now fleeing from their homes there and are abandoning their occupations, their mines, their manufactories, and their business because it is necessary to do so to prevent their lives from being destroyed by arms and munitions which are being sold and transported across the border from the United States. I hope that the joint resolution may be promptly passed.

Mr. CHILTON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from West Virginia?

Mr. ROOT. May I add one further word? The joint resolution has been submitted to the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON], who was present at that conference, and it meets with his approval.

Mr. CHILTON. I merely want to ask the Senator a question.

Mr. ROOT. Certainly.

Mr. CHILTON. As the subject is entirely new to me, I desire to ask what would be the status of a citizen of this country who had a coal contract, for instance, or any other kind of a contract, with some one in Mexico?

Mr. ROOT. This joint resolution eliminates coal. It does not apply to anything except arms and munitions of war.

Mr. SHIVELY. It really narrows the joint resolution that is the existing law.

Mr. LODGE. The existing law is broader than the joint resolution under consideration. The existing law covers coal specifically.

Mr. CHILTON. That is why I asked the question.

Mr. ROOT. The existing law is narrowed in every respect but one; and that is, it is applied not only to exportations from seaports, but from inland places.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, my attention was diverted and I do not know that the Senator from New York alluded to the feature of the case that I now mention—the importance for this kind of legislation, because of the situation that now exists on our Mexican border, where there is not such a war as would justify a proclamation of neutrality——

Mr. ROOT. Precisely.

Mr. BACON. Under which our interests could be guarded, but where the situation is of sufficient importance to require that some action short of that should be taken by the Government.

Mr. ROOT. Precisely.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from New York in charge of the joint resolution, if he does not think it would be well to insert the words "by proclamation," in line 12, on the first page, after the word "prohibit"? Section 2 reads:

That the shipment of any material prohibited by such a proclamation—

And so forth; but the first section merely says:

The President is hereby authorized, in his discretion—

And so forth—

To prohibit——

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President, the joint resolution follows the language of the existing law; but I think the suggestion of the Senator from Mississippi is an improvement, and I feel justified in accepting it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS], which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 1, line 12, after the word "prohibit," it is proposed to insert the words "by proclamation."

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PENSIONS AND INCREASE OF PENSIONS.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, when we adjourned on Monday last we were considering the bill (S. 4623) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors. I had an idea that the discussion upon that bill was closed, but we reached the hour of 4 o'clock before we came to a vote. If no Senator desires to speak further on that particular bill, as it has now been perfected, I should be glad to have it voted upon to-day so that it may go over to the other House.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. There are a few words which I wish to say in regard to that bill.

Mr. McCUMBER. On account of the confusion in the Chamber I did not hear the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I stated that I desired to occupy the Senate only a very brief time in reference to that bill, but I do wish to say something in addition to what I have already said.

Mr. McCUMBER. On Senate bill 4623?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. McCUMBER. Very well; if that is so, I will not press consideration of the bill to-day.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I will take but a very few moments, I will say to the Senator.

COST OF LIVING IN EUROPEAN COUNTRIES (H. DOC. NO. 617).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a letter from the Acting Secretary of State with accompanying data on cooperation and the cost of living in certain foreign countries.

The popular demand for information of this character apparently was based on the belief that some remedy or partial relief might be found for the growing burdens of the high cost of living. The immediate result of the inquiries instituted by the Department of State through the consular officers was to accentuate the fact that the increase in the prices of the common necessities of life is world-wide and that it is an absorbing question with the cooperative associations as well as with the mass of consumers as individuals. Multiplied evidences of the universal restlessness under this condition are given. Intelligence gathered and presented by the cooperative societies shows that even where there has been an advance in wages the percentage has not kept pace with the rise in the cost of food supplies. This disproportion in many cases is so marked as to be startling.

The information collected and collated by the Department of State is comprehensive and is a permanent contribution to the history of the efforts of producers and consumers, but more especially of consumers, to solve for themselves the economic problems of production, distribution, and consumption. If the cooperative associations which have been in existence for half a century and more have not been able to determine the fundamental causes of the increased cost of living or to retard the advance, the student of social progress at least may derive instruction from the account of the associations and their influence on the well-being of their members.

How far the system of cooperative organization which flourishes in various European countries may be adapted to our highly organized and individualistic social organization may perhaps only be determined by experiment, and in any case the experiment must be of a voluntary character. The practical information contained in the reports of the consular officers undoubtedly will be of much value to those who are seeking to work out this problem for themselves by means of similar associations.

In my message of February 2 I recommended an international commission to look into the cause for the high prices of the necessities of life and the possible remedies. Should such a commission be authorized by Congress, the relation of the cooperative societies to this subject would be of great interest and the reports of the consular officers would have additional utility.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, March 13, 1912.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father in heaven illumine our minds and make clean our hearts that we may be susceptible to the holy influences ever going out from Thee unto Thy children; that we may reflect Thy glory in thought, word, and deed; that no regrets may follow in the wake of this day, for Thine is the kingdom and the power and the glory forever. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent leave of absence was granted to Mr. SULZER, until Tuesday next, on account of a death in his family.

LEAVE TO WITHDRAW PAPERS—SIMON NAGER.

By unanimous consent, at the request of Mr. WILSON of New York, leave was granted to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, the papers in the case of Simon Nager (H. R. 24976), Sixty-first Congress, second session, no adverse report having been made thereon.

HYDRO-ELECTRIC CO. OF CALIFORNIA.

The SPEAKER. This is Calendar Wednesday, and the call rests on the Committee on the Public Lands.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, pending the automatic going into Committee of the Whole on the bill H. R. 12572, the Hydro-Electric Co. bill, which was under consideration on last Calendar Wednesday, I should like to see if we can arrange for time. I will ask the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] if he does not think we can complete the debate on this bill in two hours, dividing the time equally between those who are in favor of the bill and those who are opposed to it.

Mr. MANN. There are several gentlemen who have indicated a desire to speak upon this bill at some length, as it involves a very considerable proposition.

Mr. PICKETT. Mr. Speaker, I should like to hear the request made by my colleague on the committee.

Mr. FERRIS. I ask unanimous consent that the time for general debate on this bill be fixed at two hours.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman will realize that his side has already occupied something over an hour and a half.

Mr. FERRIS. I thought only one hour had been consumed on this side.

Mr. MANN. The time of the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] was extended, and ran half an hour longer than that, I think.

Mr. FERRIS. How much time does the gentleman think we ought to consume on a right of way across 160 acres of land?

Mr. MANN. I do not think we ought to consume any time at all. I do not think the bill ought to be here; but it involves so much more than that that gentlemen desire to be heard. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER] desires some time. My colleague from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] desires some time. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] desires some time. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. PICKETT], a member of the Committee on the Public Lands, desires some time, and if the Lord is willing, I should like to have two or three minutes myself.

Mr. FERRIS. What time does the gentleman suggest? Would three hours be agreeable to the gentleman? The calendar is loaded down with other bills, and I take it we do not want to consume time on this bill unnecessarily. I will ask the gentleman if three hours will be sufficient?

Mr. MANN. I do not think so.

Mr. LENROOT. Inasmuch as the other side have consumed an hour and a half, does not the gentleman think it would be fair to let the debate run on for an hour or two before any attempt is made to reach an agreement?

Mr. FERRIS. The gentleman is aware of the fact that we can not fix the time in the committee otherwise than by unanimous consent. I was hoping that we might fix a time, and not consume all of Calendar Wednesday with this bill.

Mr. LENROOT. The gentleman must realize that this is probably one of the most important bills before this Congress.

Mr. FERRIS. The gentleman and I are in wide disagreement about that.

Mr. MANN. I think we may be able to agree upon three hours on the part of those opposed to the bill and an hour and a half additional to those who are in favor of the bill, they having already consumed an hour and a half.

Mr. FERRIS. That would take the entire day.

Mr. MANN. I imagine the bill will take the entire day anyhow, although as far as I am concerned I am quite willing that at the end of the consideration of this bill the gentleman shall have an opportunity to call up another bill.

Mr. BARTLETT. I should like to know when any other bill is going to get a chance.

Mr. FERRIS. Is the gentleman willing to agree to an hour and a half additional for those who are in favor of the bill and two hours and a half for those who are opposed to the bill?

Mr. MANN. Why should gentlemen who favor the bill have more time than those who are opposed to the bill?

Mr. FERRIS. The author of the bill has consumed, perhaps, more time than he was strictly entitled to, no time having been fixed.

Mr. MANN. Oh, no.

Mr. FERRIS. I do not know that we will use all the time.

Mr. MANN. Give us three hours and take an hour and a half. That will give the gentleman an opportunity to call up another bill, and that is all he can do.

Mr. FERRIS. An hour and a half for us and three hours for those opposed to the bill?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

The SPEAKER. What is the request of the gentleman?

Mr. FERRIS. I ask unanimous consent that the time be divided between the gentleman from Illinois and myself, one hour and a half to be controlled by myself and three hours by the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. PICKETT. I desire to enter an objection.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is about to put the request.

Mr. MANN. I hope the gentleman from Iowa will not object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS] asks unanimous consent that the general debate on this bill be limited to four hours and a half, one hour and a half to be controlled by himself and three hours by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN]. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The House automatically resolves itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 12572) for the relief of the Hydro-Electric Co. of California, and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUSSELL] will take the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state for the information of the House that general debate has been limited to four hours and a half, three hours to be controlled by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] and one hour and a half by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS].

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] consume some of his time now?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER].

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, the bill under consideration provides relief for the Hydro-Electric Co. of California. On its face it is innocent in size, in appearance, and in the report furnished by the Committee on the Public Lands to the House, and yet it is a bill which involves a great national policy. Its very innocence is its greatest danger.

In my experience in this House I have learned that ordinarily it is a good policy for a Member to follow the lead of the committee reporting a bill. That idea has been very much more impressed upon me since this side has come to be the majority of the House. All of us understand that no man, however active and energetic or bright and intelligent, can so inform himself on all bills as to vote intelligently upon all of them. It is necessary that committee reports in a measure bind Members, and as far as I am concerned I have tried to follow the action of the committees to which matters have been referred under the rules, except when I have had information which I believe to be sufficient to warrant me in making up my mind to the contrary. In this case I do not hesitate to act in the face of the committee reporting the bill, for the facts against their action are convincing. This is a bill containing a number of whereases, and in five lines the proposed legislation is set out. It is usual that a committee reporting a bill involving so much as does this should furnish the House some reason for its action, some facts or reasons upon which its conclusions are based. I call the attention of the House to this fact, that here is a report of the Committee on the Public Lands—and I do not criticize that committee for it, for likely it has overlooked the big issues involved—which sets out the reason for the action of that committee in less than a dozen lines. Let me read the report of the committee on this bill:

Your committee unanimously recommend that the amendment be adopted and that the bill as amended do pass.

This bill (H. R. 12572) was the subject of a full and careful hearing before the committee on August 4, 1911. The facts set forth in the recitals of the bill were fully established, as shown by the printed report of the hearing. The reports and testimony of the departmental officers of the Government show that no detriment to any of the interests of the Government will result from the passage of the bill.

And so in this report of less than a dozen lines upon a bill involving the future policy of the Government with respect to the use of the national forests we have its illuminating reasons—so illuminating, so exhaustive, so thorough, so complete that it is carried in less than a dozen lines. It is filled with information, we are bound to admit, because if it were not filled with information it would likely cover a little more space.

What are the facts in this case? The Hydro-Electric Co. is a corporation organized under the laws of California, a power-development company. Its purpose is to furnish power to a number of cities in that locality. They own a lot of land adjacent to forest reserves. They build a pipe line up to the forest reserves, and the forester officer, performing his duty, notified the company that it was necessary for it to get a permit from the Government to build its pipe line across the national forest. The distance is inconsiderable, 3,800 feet, I believe. The company refused to listen to the agent of the department, and there was a threat of arrest by the local forester. That threat was withdrawn by direction of the Forest Service in Washington. The case was submitted to a court in chancery. The facts were argued, the law was argued, with the result that a restraining order or injunction was issued against the company proceeding further in the matter without a permit, as is required by law of all such users of the public domain.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEVER. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. The gentleman does not undertake to tell the committee that this case was heard by a court in chancery?

Mr. LEVER. It was heard by a master in chancery.

Mr. RAKER. Oh, that is a different thing.

Mr. LEVER. It is a distinction without a difference.

Mr. RAKER. Let me assure the gentleman it is not.

Mr. LEVER. The action of the Forestry Service, the conclusions of that service, were absolutely upheld by the master in chancery; and if I had the time I should read into the RECORD now the findings of the master in chancery, which, in effect, hold that the claims of this company are fraudulent and without legal or equitable standing. The case went on and the statement has been made on the floor of the House that the development work of this company has been stopped absolutely by the action of the Forest Service. I stand here to deny that proposition. The development work of the company has not been stopped. Their works across the forest lands have been completed under an agreement between the company and the Department of Justice. The proposition has been advanced that this company desired to use the water for irrigation purposes. I wish to call the attention of the committee to the fact that if this company desired to develop itself for irrigation purposes, it has a right under the law to do that, and there can be no necessity for its coming here to-day and asking this special legislation for that purpose.

Mr. NORRIS. And nobody has tried to prevent it from doing that.

Mr. LEVER. There has not been a single effort on the part of the Forestry Service or upon the part of any agency of this Government to prevent this company from developing into an irrigation proposition—not in the least. Why does the company, if it is an irrigation proposition, come to Congress for relief? They have all the law necessary to permit the construction of its conduit pipes under the law, and I believe that is a proposition which the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] will not deny.

Another proposition has been made, and that is that this company now possesses an easement over this national forest. It is true and it is not true. The company does possess an easement over this land under an act of Congress which permits a company to have such an easement over public lands for the sole purpose of developing mining concerns, but this company does not propose to do that. It is the purpose of this company to furnish power to a lot of cities—light, water, and the like of that—to cities in the immediate vicinity of this company.

Mr. ROBERTS of Nevada. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEVER. Yes.

Mr. ROBERTS of Nevada. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman if it is not a fact that the primary purpose for which this company was formed was the development of mining property adjacent to the power plant and within 160 miles in the State of Nevada?

Mr. LEVER. That is not my understanding of the purpose of this company.

Mr. ROBERTS of Nevada. Then the gentleman does not understand the purpose for which the company is formed, and why it is contending at the present time for its right.

Mr. LEVER. But the gentleman will admit that this company in its operations, in its statements to the committee, does not carry out the idea which the gentleman has in mind.

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEVER. Yes.

Mr. HAYES. Does not the gentleman know that this company is the owner of two or three groups of mines that have been in operation in the past for many years, and that have produced many millions of dollars, and that the sole purpose or the chief purpose of its developing this water power is to furnish power to operate its mines?

Mr. LEVER. I do not think that I can agree with all of the proposition of the gentleman from California. This company perhaps does own some mines, but my understanding is—and I get it from sources which I think are reliable—that the purpose of its development in this instance is to furnish light, water, and the like of that, for some cities in the vicinity.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEVER. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman tell the House from whom he received such information, when, as a matter of fact, we have the testimony and the entire record here with the affidavits that show to the contrary, that the disposition of electric power is an incident to the furnishing of power for their own plant?

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I will say to my friend from California that I have read the record, and that I believe I am almost—I would not say entirely, because I have too much respect for the gentleman's good judgment—as able to make up my mind as to what this company is going to do as is the gentleman from California, and I believe that this company does not intend this development for the purpose of developing its mines, but does intend to develop it for other purposes, and I get my information from the reading of the record.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEVER. Yes.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Mr. Chairman, I am not familiar with the merits of this controversy. Is it the information of the gentleman from South Carolina that this company has it in mind to engage in any unlawful purpose in the development of this power?

Mr. LEVER. Oh, I do not think there is any intention on the part of this company to engage in any unlawful purpose, but the gentleman from Missouri must remember this, that there is a law which was passed by this Congress which requires the payment of a fee and the issuance of a permit for the use of the national forest by these water-power development companies.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEVER. Just one minute. There is not a single reason which has been placed before Congress which would permit us to reach a conclusion that there ought to be an exception made in this case from the general law.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. In that connection I will ask if this company has not already a right of way? Is it not the fact that this company has already a right of way across that forest reserve for the conveyance of this water?

Mr. LEVER. This company has a right of way across this national forest for mining purposes only under the act of Congress passed some years ago. I do not have that act right here, but I could insert it or read it if necessary.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Is it limited in its purposes to using that water for mining purposes?

Mr. LEVER. We do not understand that the use of this water is to be for mining purposes. That may be an incident to it, but the principal use of this water is for other purposes.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. The gentleman does not understand me. In the original right granted to this company across the forest reserve with this water, was the company limited to using the water for mining purposes?

Mr. LEVER. Absolutely, in my understanding.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman a question, and I shall read the act, or a portion of it, Fourteenth Statutes at Large, page 253. That statute, in part, reads as follows:

Whenever by priority of possession rights to the use of water for mining, agricultural, manufacturing, or other purposes, etc.

There is absolutely no restriction upon the words "or other purposes."

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I can not yield further to the gentleman. My time is limited, and the citation does not reach this case anyway.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Mr. Chairman, I will ask the gentleman if that does not contradict what the gentleman said awhile ago, in the company being limited in its purposes?

Mr. LEVER. Contradict me or the gentleman from California?

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. The gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. LEVER. The statement of the gentleman from California is not in accord with my conception of the law, which permits a company an easement over public lands for purposes of mining only.

Mr. RAKER. But I have read the statute to the gentleman.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEVER. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. When I was interrogating the gentleman from South Carolina just now another gentleman, occupying a seat on the other side of the aisle, who, I think, was the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], stated that the gentleman from South Carolina should require me to speak in my time.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is mistaken. I had no reference to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SHACKLEFORD] at all.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Very well. I heard the statement.

Mr. MANN. But it had no reference to the gentleman from Missouri at all.

Mr. LEVER. Let me say this on the very point which the gentleman from Missouri raises, that if this company were a mining company, if they had no other purpose than to develop their mines, there would be absolutely no necessity for their coming here with this special bill. They have the right under the law now to easement over public property if the use of that easement is to be in the development of mining property. The truth is that this company desires to get something for nothing. The fact is that it desires the use of the public domain without paying the ordinary fees paid by other companies. The fact is that this company has come to Congress to make itself a special favorite of this body, while other companies are taking out their permits, paying the fees, and doing the things required by law in order for them to get the use of the national forests.

We have a great area out there in the West. These gentlemen from the Pacific coast have an idea that the national forests belong to them, and to them entirely. That is absolutely untrue. Every citizen of this country has an interest in the national forest. We are spending over $5,000,000 a year to protect it. My experience in the past 10 years has been that these gentlemen from the West who protest against the regulations of the use of the forests encourage the Congress to appropriate for the protection of the forests. [Applause.]

Mr. TURNBULL. If this company had yielded to the demands of the Forest Service and obtained the permit, what would have been the fee charged?

Mr. LEVER. I understand that the stipulation entered into by the Department of Justice and the company required a conditional fee of $75 a year. I understand, and I get my information from the testimony of the company itself, that in the final fee the charge would not be over $200 or $300 a year when complete development is had.

Now, gentlemen, in that connection I want to call your attention to this fact. You look upon this as a small proposition of $75 or $200 or $300. It is small. The fee is nothing to a corporation that is going to do millions of dollars of business. It is not the fee, but the precedent over which this fight is waged.

Mr. COX of Ohio. What, in your judgment, in the way of fee should this company pay the Government?

Mr. LEVER. I think that is a matter to be regulated by the department, which the law provides shall regulate all these fees.

Mr. COX of Ohio. What is your individual judgment? You seem to know a good deal about this.

Mr. LEVER. I do not know what should be charged this company, but I take it the Department of Agriculture, through the Forestry Bureau, is going to charge this company exactly the rate which it charges other companies, namely, 10 cents per horsepower for the first year and an increasing amount of 10 cents per year for 10 years, until the total charge is $1 per horsepower, based upon the output of the company.

Mr. COX of Ohio. About what would be the fee in this case upon that base?

Mr. LEVER. I have not figured it out, I will say to my friend very candidly, but the company itself has figured it out, and the company says in no case will it amount to more than $200 or $300 a year.

Mr. LAFFERTY. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from South Carolina yield to the gentleman from Oregon?

Mr. LEVER. Yes; I yield.

Mr. LAFFERTY. I desire to say that I am not hostile in my questioning, but I want to know this point. Is it the object of the Forest Service in this case to demand that this permit be taken out in order that the Government may get $75 a year, or is the main object the reserving of the right in the Government to regulate charges for the commodity to be furnished the public? Which is the principal object?

Mr. LEVER. The main purpose in the attitude of the Government in this case is to protect public property against exploitation and to maintain the principle that the Government has a right to regulate and protect public property.

Mr. HAYES. Will the gentleman advise us what public property he refers to?

Mr. LEVER. The public domain—the national forests.

Mr. HAYES. What in this case?

Mr. LEVER. Three thousand eight hundred feet.

Mr. HAYES. I beg your pardon. It is all on private property except a right of way of 80 acres.

Mr. LEVER. I do not know about that.

Mr. HAYES. I do.

Mr. LEVER. And I do not admit it, because the testimony shows that this pipe line will run across 3,800 feet of Government property.

Mr. HAYES. Oh, that is true.

Mr. LEVER. But admitting the gentleman's statement to be true—and I do not care if it is 100 feet, or 200 feet, or 200 miles, it is Government property—this company has no right to come to Congress and ask for special privileges which we refuse to give other companies. [Applause.]

Mr. COOPER. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. LEVER. I will.

Mr. COOPER. This bill would grant a right of way forever, would it not, to this company, without any rental at all, any charges to the Government, or anything to indicate that the Government would control, and could not that company then combine with any other company beyond the power of the Government to interfere at all?

Mr. LEVER. Let me say to my good friend from Wisconsin that if this bill passes, it means that we have set the precedent which turns over to the water-development companies of this country the entire use of the national forests without regulation by the Federal Government and without the payment of the fees for the use of the national forests.

Mr. COOPER. The gentleman has anticipated by his statement the exact question I was going to ask, and now I want to ask one other thing. Is it not a fact that the development of hydroelectric power and the possible combination of hydroelectric powers under one management is a matter of only the last six or eight years?

Mr. LEVER. That is true.

Mr. COOPER. It is a new proposition, and it threatens to be the greatest combination in the control of power that the United States has ever known. Is not that true?

Mr. LEVER. That is true. Let me say to my friend from Wisconsin this—and it is a significant fact—that somehow or other the impression has gone abroad in the country that the "gentleman from South Carolina" is opposed to this bill. I have been deluged absolutely with letters, telegrams, and statements from my own district and State beseeching and begging me to withdraw my opposition to this bill. I hold in my hand now a telegram from South Carolina, 3,500 miles away from where this company is to operate—a telegram of 800 words, at a cost of 50 cents for 10 words, which makes it cost $40.

Mr. COOPER. Who paid for it?

Mr. LEVER. Who paid for it is the important problem, but here it is. I do not desire to put it into the RECORD.

Mr. KOPP. Who is it from?

Mr. LEVER. It is from a gentleman not in my district, but a gentleman in my State, 3,500 miles away from the State of California, and it cost him $40 to send it here. There it is [exhibiting telegram].

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. It is a good deal of money to spend on a little project that does not amount to much.

Mr. LEVER. You know, it made me feel that there must be something more back of this bill than the $75 asked to be paid by the Forestry Bureau, or even $200 as a maximum, estimated by this company as the fee.

Mr. RAKER. Will you give us the names of the men who sent the telegram?

Mr. LEVER. I do not hesitate to do it. The "gentleman from South Carolina" is never afraid to do what he thinks is right.

Mr. RAKER. I am fully satisfied of that.

Mr. LEVER. This was sent to me by F. W. Wagener & Co., of Charleston, S. C., among the biggest wholesale dealers in groceries, and so forth, in the State of South Carolina, and they are as good men as there can be found in the State. My father in his active life did much business with them.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman permit a further question?

Mr. LEVER. I will.

Mr. RAKER. Why has there been over 5,000,000 copies of the statement against this bill sent out, and who has paid for that, and what is the object of it?

Mr. LEVER. In the first place, the "gentleman from South Carolina" does not know that is a fact, and in the second place, if he did know that was a fact he would hardly have information as to who paid for it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER] has expired.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I move that the time of the gentleman be extended 15 minutes.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I yield two minutes more to the gentleman.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. LEVER. I am sorry I can not.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I would just like to know why the gentleman thinks that is inspired.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina is recognized for two minutes more.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I am sorry that I have not had more time in which to go into the details of this proposition. I have permitted gentlemen to take up my time. But I want to close with this statement: That Secretary Wilson, of the Department of Agriculture, on March 5 of this year, writing to the Senate committee in reference to this very bill, protests against its passage. It reads as follows:

MARCH 5, 1912.

The Committee on Public Lands, United States Senate:

GENTLEMEN: Reference is made to Senate bill 5571 for the relief of the Hydro-Electric Co. of California, which you have referred to me for information as to the law and facts in relation thereto and for such suggestions as I desire to offer.

The purpose of this bill is to make the Hydro-Electric Co. an unconditional grant of a right of way over lands of the United States for a pipe line which it desires to use in connection with hydroelectric-power development. The right to occupy the land could be secured under the act of February 15, 1901 (31 Stat., 790), which is the general statute under which rights of way of this nature can be secured. The company, doubtless, does not wish to avail itself of the benefits of the general law, because that merely authorizes a permit in the nature of a license, while the company is seeking by this bill an unconditional easement.

The Department of Agriculture has had considerable difficulty with this company, the nature of which I shall briefly relate.

About two years ago the company commenced the construction of a hydroelectric-power plant on lands adjacent to the Mono National Forest in California. The power house was on private land, but a part of the conduit was to be on land of the United States. Some time before the construction of the conduit reached the boundaries of the Mono National Forest the company was informed by the local forest officers that it would be necessary to secure a permit for the conduit under the act of Congress providing for rights of way over public lands and reservations—that is, the act of February 15, 1901 (31 Stat., 790).

The company took no steps toward obtaining a permit, but it purchased several mining locations for about $10 each which had been made in such a manner as to cover the land upon which the conduit was to be constructed. It also petitioned the board of supervisors of Mono County, Cal., to declare as a public highway a certain road which the company proposed to construct, the location of which was shown on a map filed with the board of supervisors. The location of the proposed road is identical with the location of the proposed conduit.

Notwithstanding the protest of local forest officers, the company proceeded, without permit, to construct the conduit. Upon the matter being reported to the solicitor for this department it was brought to the attention of the United States attorney for the northern district of California. On his request the United States Circuit Court issued a restraining order preventing further construction and referred the matter to the master in chancery for the court. After a full hearing at which the company was represented by counsel and submitted testimony in its behalf, the master reported and recommended that a temporary injunction should be granted. With reference to the mining locations he said:

"On the question of good faith of these mining locations, I have given the evidence and arguments of counsel the most careful consideration. * * * I am entirely convinced that the great preponderance of evidence shows that they are nothing but paper claims, made with a view of obtaining a right of way for their pipe line across the forest reserve. * * * In my opinon, the seven claims mentioned are not valid mining locations at all."

As to the proposed county road he says:

"It will strike anyone as strange that a county road should be laid exactly following a power pipe line. Among other inconsistencies will be noted that in following that part of the line noted on the map as the pressure pipe line the highway would go straight up a hill at an elevation of approximately 700 feet in about one-half mile. * * * As a matter of common sense it is impossible to conclude that it is, or ever was, intended to build a highway for the county or that the proceedings taken were other than an attempt to gain the right of way against the will of the Government."

A temporary injunction was issued, restraining the company from building or operating the conduit until it had obtained a permit from the Department of Agriculture. The company then applied for a temporary permit, which was granted by me in order that it might not be prevented from completing construction of its plant pending the final adjudication of its case by the court. By its unlawful acts the company is responsible for any delay it incurred in the construction of its conduit. The company was restrained from construction only when it became evident that it intended to construct in defiance of the law. When an application for a permit was finally made one was granted by wire. It was clearly understood that the granting of the permit was contingent on the execution by the company of the usual stipulations required by this department in such cases. These were forwarded for execution. After unreasonable delay trivial objections were made to the execution of the stipulations, and finally the company refused to execute them. Thereupon the temporary permit was revoked. Before this action was taken, however, the conduit had been completed and was in operation.

Subsequent to this time a bill (H. R. 12572), which is identical with S. 5571, was introduced in the House of Representatives. On August 11, 1911, representatives of the company requested me to enter into a stipulation with the company which would allow it to proceed with the operation of its plant pending the determination of its case in the United States court. I referred them to the Attorney General, and understand that such a stipulation was entered into and subsequently filed with the court. The company is now operating its plant under this stipulation.

I think it will be clear from what I have said that the company intended to evade the law, and that when it was prevented by the United States court from doing so it then applied to Congress for relief. This case does not differ in principle from that of any other where a company desires to use the public lands or national forests in the development of hydroelectric power. At the present time there is only one general law—the act of February 15, 1901, heretofore mentioned—under which such a right of way can be acquired, and this law is applicable to the unreserved public lands as well as to national-forest lands. The fact that this conduit is within a national forest does not, therefore, affect the right of the company to obtain a right of way if the way is acquired lawfully.

The Hydro-Electric Co. is endeavoring to secure, by special legislation, a privilege which is not granted to other like users of public lands. It is not a question whether the land over which the conduit passes has any value for forest or other purposes, but whether the Government shall exercise any control over its lands which are valuable for water-power development. The proposed legislation would set a bad precedent, as it would grant, without restriction, the right to use public lands which are valuable for water-power development. In my judgment, this bill is extremely dangerous and should not become a law.

Very respectfully,

JAMES WILSON, Secretary.

I wish to say, further, that the only purpose of this bill is to set a precedent, by which water-power development companies can absolutely override the enactments of Congress—a precedent which will permit the exploitation of public property for private uses. I desire to say that this bill sets a precedent which will break down absolutely the conservation policy of the country; that this bill sets a precedent which would make it impossible for the Federal Government to deal with its own property, except by the way of private bills.

It is apparently a little proposition, involving only $75 or $100. It looks small. But I stand here to tell you, gentlemen, that it is one of the biggest propositions that is before the House. If you desire to turn over to the exploitation of the trusts and water-power developing companies and monopolies this great national domain of 300,000,000 acres, which is the property of the people and the heritage of the future, pass this bill, and you will do it. If you want to preserve this domain for posterity, vote down this bill and say to these companies, "You must conform to the law as everybody else is made to conform to it." [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. HAYES].

Mr. HAYES. Can not the gentleman give me more than that? I can not say anything satisfactorily in 10 minutes.

Mr. FERRIS. I will give the gentleman 15 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California [Mr. HAYES] is recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Chairman, I am as firm a believer in conservation of a reasonable and a proper kind as any man on this floor, and if this were a proposition where a power company or an irrigation company or a mining company were asking to take possession of any considerable portion of the public domain for water-power sites, for reservoir sites, or even for a right of way for a ditch, as a new proposition, I would not be here advocating the passage of this bill.

But that is not the proposition. This proposition is this: This company and their predecessors have owned that reservoir site that is indicated on the map; they have owned the power site in fee indicated on the map; they have owned the entire ditch line in fee, indicated on the map, for over 20 or, perhaps, 30 years, excepting that 80-acre piece of land, and over that they have a right of way—the gentleman from South Carolina says only for mining purposes.

There are three statutes of the United States that cover every phase of water-power or irrigation companies, and there is no question but that this company has a right of way over that 80-acre tract of land for the water and the right to use it not only for mining purposes, but for irrigation purposes and for power purposes or for any other "beneficial use," in the language of the statutes. The law of 1891 supplements that of 1866, which the gentleman cites, and the law of 1905 supplements them both. There is no question about that.

Now, a great deal has been brought into this discussion that does not belong in it. It does not matter what the stipulations of this company and the Government have been, so far as they affect the litigation. That litigation will go on probably to a conclusion. The question of importance here is this: Shall a water-power company, or shall individuals who have in good faith gone in and purchased a reservoir site and paid their money for it and purchased a power site 30 years or more ago and paid their money for it, and purchased a right of way over a tract of land and paid their money for it—shall they be compelled under the arbitrary rulings of the Forest Service, and, as I believe, contrary to the spirit, if not to the letter, of the statutes which Congress has passed, to yield up that property, which has cost them, as I am advised in this case, in the neighborhood of $350,000, and take a revocable permit from the Forest Service, which means that the property will be valueless?

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from California yield to the gentleman from South Carolina?

Mr. HAYES. I yield.

Mr. LEVER. Is not the gentleman willing to admit that all the companies which use the national forests under the law are required to pay for the use of the national forests?

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Chairman, I would say, in answer to the gentleman, that if they were using the national forests, if the reservoir site were on a national forest or on Government land, and if the power site were on Government land, and if the right of way for 5 or 6 miles were on Government land, I would say yes. But that is not the case here. These people did not buy from the Government itself. If they had done so, the situation might be somewhat different. They are the owners of their property through several conveyances. They bought their property in good faith, just as a man buys a promissory note in good faith and puts his money in the note. The law protects the innocent purchaser in good faith. That is substantially this case, and the equities which the gentleman referred to do not apply in this case.

Mr. LEVER. Did not this company know at the time they planned their operations that there were laws which compelled them to get a permit and pay a fee for the use of the national forest?

Mr. HAYES. No. I will say to the gentleman that they did not understand it.

Mr. LEVER. Well, they claim to be wide-awake business men.

Mr. HAYES. Yes. I am a business man, and I do not understand it so. Does the gentleman want to say to me that he is in favor of this proposition; that where men have bought land innocently from other men, just as I have bought land from others that in the first instance came from the Government, they must give up their land and get a revocable lease from the Government?

Mr. LEVER. The gentleman from California is aware of the old rule of law that ignorance of the law excuses nobody; and especially is that true when you deal with great big business men. [Applause.]

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Chairman, I yielded to the gentleman for a question. I have not time to yield to him for a speech.

The property of this company is just as much private property as my farm is, and if that 80-acre tract were owned by a private individual the company could, under the laws of the State or under the laws of Congress, get authority to condemn that land and take it, because without that condemnation this very meritorious public improvement could not be carried on. There is no such law as the gentleman refers to that applies to this. If his contention is correct, the owner of the ditch company could not so much as take out a shovelful of dirt and put it up on the bank outside of the ditch without a permit from the Forest Service, and the present policy is that they would not give that permit unless these men in effect yielded up their property and agreed to take a revokable permit from the Government of the United States, just as though they had received their power site and their reservoir site and their right of way through the Forest Service on Government land. That is not the case here at all. This is not that kind of a case. That is why I wish gentlemen may discriminate between the cases the gentleman is talking about and this case.

Mr. CALLAWAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from California yield to the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. HAYES. Yes.

Mr. CALLAWAY. The gentleman's objection to the enactment of present law as it is is that they hold only a revokable permit?

Mr. HAYES. No; that is what the forest officers want them to take out.

Mr. CALLAWAY. You want an irrevokable permit?

Mr. HAYES. No; I want the men who in good faith have gone on——

Mr. CALLAWAY. In this particular case they have a permit from the Government now, and they can get that under the law?

Mr. HAYES. They have a right of way for their ditch line under the law.

Mr. CALLAWAY. Now what you want is an irrevocable permit.

Mr. HAYES. No; I do not care——

Mr. LEVER. What do you want?

Mr. HAYES. I want the law as it is written in the statute books to apply to this case, and not the arbitrary, unreasonable regulations of the Forest Department, never contemplated by the law, never contemplated by the Congress of the United States when they passed it. I want men who put their money in good faith into irrigation projects, into mining projects, into projects where water is used for power—or anything else that is owned wholly or almost wholly in private right—to have the right to use that property for the beneficial use of the people of the surrounding country.

Mr. COX of Ohio. What is the difference between the law and the department regulations?

Mr. HAYES. The difference is that the law contemplates that this right of way shall be given for the purposes indicated, but the department has gone beyond the law, as I think, and has said that everybody who has a private interest in water-power sites or in rights of way or in reservoir sites like this shall be obliged to give up those rights——

Mr. COX of Ohio. Then have they not recourse to the courts? The departmental reservation can not contravene the law.

Mr. HAYES. I do not know what the court will hold, but it will probably take 10 years for this case to be decided by the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. LEVER. This case is pending in court now, I will say to my friend from Ohio.

Mr. HAYES. But the fact that they are fighting this in the court does not preclude them from coming to Congress for relief. This seems to be a small proposition, as the gentleman says, the $75, but that is not the question at all. The question is whether these men shall be compelled to give up their property, for which they have paid their money, and take a revocable permit from the Government for running their water across the valueless 80 acres of land, for that is all that is involved.

Mr. COX of Ohio. Does not the gentleman think the Government can be trusted to treat them fairly?

Mr. HAYES. Frankly, I will say no, not under present conditions. No Government official that was reasonable would ever exact what they try to exact for the right to cross that land. Every statute of the United States that has ever been passed unquestionably intended to give, and does give, them the right to cross this land.

Mr. LEVER. Will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from California yield to the gentleman from South Carolina?

Mr. HAYES. For a question; not for a speech.

Mr. LEVER. Is it a fact that the company is not concerned with the $75 fee involved in this case, but that the company desires to get an irrevocable permit contrary to law, as a special favor?

Mr. HAYES. I deny the gentleman's statement. Their desire is not contrary to law at all. It is contrary to nothing except injustice.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAYES. Yes.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Is there anythiqng inequitable in their getting an irrevocable permit?

Mr. HAYES. The permit will be under the general law, and the law of course may be repealed. There might be a question whether the repeal of the laws would revoke the permit; there might be some question whether vested rights would not come in.

Mr. ALEXANDER. As I understand, this is simply to give them the right to run their pipe line across this property?

Mr. HAYES. Yes.

Mr. ALEXANDER. That right makes their present plant valuable to them?

Mr. HAYES. And without it it is worthless.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Hence they do not want a permit which may be revoked at any time by the whim of the department?

Mr. HAYES. That is it exactly. That is all there is in this.

Mr. LEVER. Not by the whim of the department, but by the regulations.

Mr. ALEXANDER. No; by the whim.

Mr. HAYES. That is the correct word to describe it.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAYES. Yes.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. What is the issue involved in the court proceedings?

Mr. HAYES. The issue is whether these people have the right to replace their open ditch line across this particular 80 acres of land under the law, without any stipulation or permit, with a covered pipe line. They have, in fact, crossed it. Their pipe line is there and in operation, and the plant is in operation. The question is whether they shall have a right under the law to improve their property by substituting a covered pipe line for the open ditch across there and to operate it, or must they yield up all the rights that they have paid for and take in return a revocable permit from the Forest Service.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. What is the nature of that proceeding?

Mr. HAYES. It is an action for a permanent injunction.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAYES. Yes.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Was this 80 acres of land within the forest reservation at the time this pipe line was put across it?

Mr. HAYES. It was at the time this pipe line was put across it, yes; but not when the ditch was put across it. It has been recently taken into the forest reserve, and I will state to the gentleman from South Dakota that excepting some sagebrush there is not a tree within 10 miles of that 80 acres of land, and never can be. It is simply desert land.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HAYES. Yes.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Is this company developing energy now by the use of an open ditch?

Mr. HAYES. They have been doing it until recently. They replaced the open ditch with a covered pipe line.

Mr. SAUNDERS. The covered pipe line simply renders their property more valuable than the open ditch did.

Mr. HAYES. Yes; and it enables them to meet more fully the demands of the people of that section for water and water power for various uses.

Mr. SAUNDERS. In order to make their property more valuable they must get this concession from the United States?

Mr. HAYES. Perhaps it will not make it much more valuable, but it will make it more largely useful.

Mr. SAUNDERS. I asked the question whether it would make their property more valuable, and I understood the gentleman to say that it would.

Mr. HAYES. It will certainly be more valuable in this, that the water will not break out of the ditch in going around that particular point.

Mr. SAUNDERS. So that this concession which they desire from the United States is something of substantial value?

Mr. HAYES. As far as paying whatever price the United States fixes for crossing that 80 acres of land, there is no question about that.

Mr. SAUNDERS. The question I asked is whether the right which is sought from the United States Government, to carry the pipe line across Government land, will be something of substantial value to this company?

Mr. HAYES. It will be of more value than the open ditch which they paid for.

Mr. SAUNDERS. I see in these hearings certain stipulations that were submitted to this company. Will the gentleman tell the committee in the course of his remarks what objection there is to these stipulations? They seem to me to be essentially reasonable.

Mr. HAYES. There is no objection to them, but they are not involved in this proposition at all. Anybody who brings them here does it for the purpose of prejudicing the case, because they are not involved.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Why? I see that they were submitted to the company.

Mr. LENROOT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAYES. Yes.

Mr. LENROOT. Does the gentleman contend that this company has ever operated that open ditch?

Mr. HAYES. I contend that it has been operated for many, many years.

Mr. LENROOT. By this company?

Mr. HAYES. Perhaps not by this company, but by its predecessors.

Mr. LENROOT. Does not the gentleman know that it was abandoned for 10 years before this company began to operate it?

Mr. HAYES. It was used for irrigation only. But the company bought the ditch line; they bought the reservoir site and the power site. I want to say to the gentleman that I know the local situation here and the men who have put their money into this project, and there is no possibility of any monopoly or any combination with any other ditch or power company.

Mr. Chairman, I want to reiterate that the only question in this case is this: Whether or not a company or an individual who owns in fee its own power site, its own reservoir site, its own ditch line, with the exception of a very small piece of ground, shall be, under the law or under the regulations of the Department of Agriculture, obliged to give it all up and in lieu of that property for which it has paid its money take out a revocable permit, revocable at any time, at the whim of the forestry official who happens to be in charge of that service? That is the question. I believe thoroughly in conservation but not in confiscation by the Government or anyone else.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 50 minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. PICKETT].

Mr. PICKETT. Mr. Chairman, it is well at the outset to clarify the issue presented by this bill. Those who are opposed to the measure concede that the intrinsic value of the land over which the pipe lines of the Hydro-Electric Co. pass is of little, if any, value. Its value is insignificant as compared to the other issues involved. Briefly stated, the important issue presented is whether the Federal Government shall control the public domain, whether it will carry into effect or repeal the statutes heretofore enacted with the view of controlling and regulating the corporations which have secured or are securing the great water-power privileges of the West, so as to prevent a monopoly as to their use, or turn them over, as in the years past, without any restriction whatever. In brief, whether we shall stand firm upon the ground we have already secured or move backward to where we were a few years ago. There is another issue involved, and that is whether we will approve of defiance of the constituted authorities of our Government. I will undertake to prove to the satisfaction of this House, not by mere verbal assertions, as do my distinguished friends from California, but from the record, that no one can vote for this bill without approving of defiance of the constituted authorities for the enforcement of the laws which Congress has itself enacted.

The gentleman from California [Mr. HAYES], who just took his seat, made a remarkable assertion in response to an interrogatory propounded by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER] when he said that the Hydro-Electric Co. did not understand that it was necessary to secure a permit before crossing the Government land in question. Let me direct your attention to the record on that phase of the question.

In November, 1909, and before the company had reached the Government land, it was notified by the officers of the Government that it would be necessary for the company to secure a permit before entering upon Government land. On May 25, 1910, the company was again notified that it would be necessary to secure a permit. On June 10, 1910—and, mark you, this is before they entered upon the land—they were again notified that it would be necessary to secure a permit. Later on further notices were given the company. In order that there may be no misunderstanding as to the character of the notices or that the company was fully advised of the position taken by the Government, I will quote from one of the written notices served upon the company, as follows:

While it may be possible that the right of way which you desire to follow over this tract is covered by mining claims, you certainly know that such fact would give you no right whatever to use the land for purposes other than that for which it has been located. To be clear, you can not make a mineral location with the intention of using the land in conveying water across it.

In other words, Mr. Chairman, when the gentleman from California [Mr. HAYES] asserted that the company did not understand the law, or they did not understand the rules or the regulations of the department, he was absolutely ignoring the record.

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PICKETT. Certainly.

Mr. HAYES. Does the gentleman know that the question of whether that is the law or not is now in litigation in the courts?

Mr. PICKETT. Yes; but the gentleman stated that the company did not understand it would be necessary to obtain a permit.

Mr. HAYES. I say so now. I do not believe it is.

Mr. PICKETT. They did understand the position which the Government took in the matter.

Mr. HAYES. They did not when they began to lay their pipe line.

Mr. PICKETT. On July 13 they were again served with a written notice, from which I will quote, as follows:

District forester says construction work must not proceed over Government land on your power project without first securing regular permit. Temporary permit can not be issued. These instructions are in effect and must be observed. Am sending you papers preliminary to permit. Please acknowledge receipt of wire.

So that it appears indisputably from the record that repeated notices were given by the Government to the company that it would be necessary to obtain a permit from the Government before entering upon the occupancy of the land in controversy.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PICKETT. Yes.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I understood that the Government had given an easement over this land at some time before the forest reservation was created, and I would like the gentleman to state what the facts are in that regard.

Mr. PICKETT. There was an old ditch that had been there for some 20 years or more, maintained, I am informed, for irrigation purposes. It had, however, been abandoned and not in use for practically 10 years prior to the time in question. I will also say to the gentleman that the representatives of the Hydro-Electric Co. make no claim, or rather did not in the hearings of the committee, to their right to cross the land predicated upon this alleged easement. The whole contention of the Hydro-Electric Co. is based upon their so-called mining claims.

Notwithstanding the repeated notices given by the Government, the Hydro-Electric Co. proceeded in its occupancy of the land. The company did this, as the record discloses, after being fully advised of the position taken by the Government, through the repeated notices stated, and acting upon the advice of its attorneys.

On August 13, 1910, one of the field agents of the Bureau of Forestry discovered that the company had, in defiance of the notices served upon it, entered upon the Government land and had laid a certain amount of its pipe lines across it. This information was conveyed to the department at Washington, and directions given to district attorney in California to apply for a temporary injunction. The temporary injunction was issued on August 10, 1910. On September 12 the defendant appeared in court and filed a motion to modify the injunction. Arguments were submitted, and the motion was overruled by the court. On September 14 the case was argued upon the legal points, and testimony submitted before the master in chancery, to whom it had been referred. The arguments consumed three days. The case was taken under advisement, and on October 14 the master's report was filed. I shall not consume time by reading the entire report, but will quote a paragraph therefrom which contains the gist of the decision, as follows:

On the question of good faith of these mining locations I have given the evidence and the arguments of counsel the most careful consideration. Giving every possible effect to the possibility that the Goleta vein may continue into these claims and with cheap power can be worked to profit, and reasoning therefrom that it may therefore be considered the intention of the respondent to locate and hold these claims as mining claims, I am entirely convinced that the great preponderance of evidence shows that they are nothing but paper locations, made with a view to obtain a right of way for their pipe line across the forest reserve. The matter must be looked at from the standpoint of common sense and by evidence presented by respondents' actions rather than by their words.

I will further state, Mr. Chairman, in corroboration of the decision of the master in chancery, that there is not in the document embodying all the correspondence and other data a single sentence which tends to negative the findings of the master or to show that the company intended to use the land for mining purposes.

If I am incorrect in this statement, I challenge anyone to point it out in the record. I repeat there is no evidence to this effect, and yet gentlemen stand here on the floor of this House and by mere assertion seek to question the findings of the master in chancery.

Mr. LAFFERTY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. PICKETT. Certainly.

Mr. LAFFERTY. As I understand from the gentleman's argument, this Hydro-Electric Co. claimed an easement for an open ditch, and the Hydro-Electric Co. wanted to change the open ditch to a pipe line and fraudulently caused mineral locations to be made. Is that the gentleman's contention?

Mr. PICKETT. It acquired these mineral claims, which the master in chancery found were fraudulent.

Mr. LAFFERTY. I have to vote on this bill, and I want to get some information. The point I want to know is this: Is it conceded by the Forestry Department that the Hydro-Electric Co., by virtue of its purchase, did have an easement for an open ditch before it filed these alleged fraudulent mining claims?

Mr. PICKETT. The attorneys for the company, when they appeared before the committee, based their entire contention upon these mining claims.

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman tell us whether there is any evidence in the record of the fraudulent character of those claims?

Mr. PICKETT. If the gentleman will read the report of the master in chancery——

Mr. HAYES. I am not referring to the report, but to the evidence which was before the master.

Mr. PICKETT. I am referring to the report of the master in chancery—the judicial finding of what the evidence established.

Mr. HAYES. I have the whole record of the evidence.

Mr. PICKETT. Then, why does not the gentleman produce it?

Mr. HAYES. I will say that there was not a particle of evidence submitted to the master upon that subject that could properly be held to show that these claims were fraudulent.

Mr. LEVER. Is it not a fact that these claims were bought for four or five dollars a claim, and is not that one of the reasons they are regarded as fraudulent?

Mr. PICKETT. That is admitted.

Mr. HAYES. Does the gentleman think that the simple fact that two or three claims are taken up, parallel, is evidence of fraud in mining locations?

Mr. PICKETT. I am not telling the gentleman what I think. I am stating the findings of the master in chancery. He found that there was no evidence in the record to show that they had any intention of using the mining claims within the contemplation of the mining laws.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PICKETT. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. If it turns out that these mining claims are valid mining claims, then the Government puts the company to no onerous restriction.

Mr. PICKETT. That is correct.

Mr. MANN. Because they will have acquired title to the property.

Mr. PICKETT. Absolutely.

Mr. MANN. And they will no longer be under stipulation.

Mr. PICKETT. Certainly not.

Mr. MANN. If it turns out that the mining claims are illegal because they are fraudulent, then is the company entitled to any favorable consideration from Congress?

Mr. PICKETT. The company then will be entitled to the consideration which the department gives to every similar company under similar circumstances.

Mr. MANN. I say from Congress.

Mr. PICKETT. No; not from Congress. None whatever.

Mr. MADDEN. Would it be entitled to any consideration from Congress if these claims are fraudulent?

Mr. PICKETT. In my judgment, no.

Mr. LAFFERTY. If the gentleman will permit, it seems that this old open ditch has been used there for 30 years. When were these mineral applications made?

Mr. PICKETT. It had been abandoned for 10 years. These mineral locations were made in 1910.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. If I understand the gentleman correctly, his contention is that before the master they only asserted their rights under these mineral and mining filings?

Mr. PICKETT. That is as I understand it, at least before the committee.

On November 17 the court issued an order continuing the temporary injunction. During all of this time negotiations were being conducted between the representatives of the company and of the Government; and I will further add that the Government has gone to the limit of fairness in dealing with this company.

On November 14 the Washington office wired the district forester in California to prepare a draft of temporary permit between the company and the department and forward to Washington. The telegram further stated, and I quote it for the purpose of showing the fairness of the department:

If you believe the delay of mails will materially prejudice company, send essential parts of draft, including description of land, by night wire. Temporary permit will then be prepared here, and when signed will wire you to let construction proceed.

This certainly shows a spirit of fairness on the part of the department. A tentative draft was prepared, which was signed by the company and forwarded to Washington for approval.

Mr. MADDEN. And, as a matter of fact, it was no agreement until it was approved.

Mr. PICKETT. That is precisely what I am getting at. I have in my hand here a copy thereof, and I call your attention to the clause prepared in blank for the signature of the Agricultural Department, as follows:

Approved this — day of ———, 1910, and permission granted, subject to the conditions hereinbefore named.

———— ————,
Secretary of Agriculture.

It was simply a proposed agreement, not operative until signed by both parties, and therefore no rights were acquired under it. In this connection I will refer to the statement of the company's attorney, Mr. Lane.

But I will pause at this time to make an observation with reference to the statement made by the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER]. It is true that the report from the committee bears on its face the statement that it is a unanimous report, and it may be true that at the time the report was ordered by the committee no one present entered an objection. This, however, does not justify the statement made by the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER]. I quote as follows:

That is the unanimous report handed to me by the clerk of the Committee on the Public Lands, and after that I made out the report, took it back to the committee and read it—read the report that they were going to file in the House and in the committee—and not one living man said or made objection to it.

And I also quote from the opening of his remarks, as follows:

Until the morning of January 5, when this bill was originally called up, there seemed to be no objection whatever to it. Objection was then made to its consideration because it was on the Private Calendar.

We had hearings on this bill in August, 1911, and no one can read the hearings themselves, without any reference to the discussion that took place in the committee after the hearings were concluded, and say that there was no objection to this bill. The examination of the representatives of the company and my expressions on the subject, which appear in connection therewith, disclose my view at that time. Furthermore, after the hearings were concluded and the matter was informally discussed by the committee, I at least had the understanding that the bill would not be further considered.

I have been informed that others of the committee had the same understanding. This is supported by the fact that the committee took the affirmative action of appointing a subcommittee for the purpose of seeing whether a stipulation could be secured so that the matter would remain in status quo pending the litigation.

When I returned to Washington in December I had not fully recovered from a recent illness and was unable to attend one of the meetings of the committee, which happened to be the meeting on December 19 when this bill was reported. However, after the bill was reported and my attention called to it I stated to the committee that I was opposed to the measure and reserved the right to oppose it upon the floor. The gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] was present at the time, and if he had been entirely frank would have stated this fact affirmatively to the House. It recalls to my mind the old adage of Benjamin Franklin that "half the truth is often a great lie."

Now, then, getting back to Mr. Lane.

Mr. KENDALL. Will my colleague yield?

Mr. PICKETT. With pleasure.

Mr. KENDALL. Was there a subcommittee appointed to negotiate the stipulation between the department and the Hydro-Electric Co. by the committee?

Mr. PICKETT. No formal action was taken by the committee. The matter was informally discussed, and three members, as I recall it, were selected to see the department with the view of ascertaining whether an arrangement could be secured whereby, as I have heretofore suggested, the company would not be disturbed in its use of the land pending the final adjudication of the case between the Government and the company.

There was nothing in the original bill which indicated the controversy or litigation between the Government and the company. When these facts developed on the hearings and when Mr. Lane, the attorney for the company, and Judge RAKER, the author of the bill, both stated that all the company desired was not to be disturbed until the case was finally decided in the courts, it was thought that a stipulation of that kind might be secured and a subcommittee was appointed for that purpose.

The gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] had not heard of this stipulation when I questioned him in regard to it during his remarks, but later when extending and revising his remarks in the RECORD stated therein that he had knowledge of it as early as last September, but that the matter had escaped his mind when questioned during the heat of debate.

I will now return to the first alleged permit—the tentative draft submitted to the department for approval, but which was never signed—and also to the statements of Mr. Lane in respect to it. I will quote from the hearings before the committee as follows (Hearings, p. 17):

Mr. PICKETT. After the injunction was granted was any further work done on the part of your company?

Mr. LANE. Yes; but it was done under a temporary arrangement which we made with the Agricultural Department.

Mr. PICKETT. Did you make an arrangement with the Agricultural Department to proceed with the work after the temporary injunction was granted?

Mr. LANE. That is true.

Mr. PICKETT. On what page is that set forth?

Mr. LANE. The arrangement made is set forth on pages 65 and 66.

I call your attention to the direct question I propounded to Mr. Lane.

Did you make an arrangement with the Agricultural Department to proceed with the work after the temporary injunction was granted?

The question could not have been stated more directly, and it was propounded for the very purpose of ascertaining whether any arrangement had been effected between the company and the department after the temporary injunction was granted. And now note the answer which Mr. Lane made to that question, as follows: "That is true."

There is nothing equivocal about this answer. It is a direct and simple statement that an arrangement had been effected under which they could proceed with their work.

It will be observed that he further states that the arrangement which was made is set forth on pages 65 and 66, referring to House Document No. 1425, Sixty-first Congress, third session. This so-called arrangement is the tentative draft of permit to which I have already called attention, and which was not signed by the Secretary of Agriculture and was not and could not be operative until it was so signed. Notwithstanding this, Lane claimed at the outset that an arrangement was made, as his quoted statement clearly shows. In the further examination of Mr. Lane he admitted that the arrangement never became operative. I read as follows from the hearings:

Mr. PICKETT. So that arrangement never became effective?

Mr. LANE. No; it did not become effective, except that they permitted us to go ahead and finish the work.

Mr. PICKETT. Where is the agreement whereby the department consented to that?

Mr. LANE. That was done by telegram.

Mr. PICKETT. Is the correspondence referred to in this document?

Mr. LANE. The correspondence is here; I do not know what the page is.

Mr. PICKETT. What is the substance of it?

Mr. LANE. The substance was that we could go ahead. It is on page 61, at the bottom of page 61 and the top of page 62. It is just a permit to go ahead.

Mr. PICKETT. That gives you a revocable permit?

Mr. LANE. Yes; and which was subsequently revoked after the trouble came up.

Mr. PICKETT. Now, what were the grounds claimed by the Secretary of Agriculture for the subsequent revocation?

Mr. LANE. Because he said that this agreement, shown on pages 65 and 66, which we had executed, was not satisfactory. He prescribed a new agreement, which is shown on pages 59 to 61, inclusive.

Mr. PICKETT. And you did not consent to that proposition?

Mr. LANE. No, sir.

I have set forth this testimony not only for the purpose of showing that Mr. Lane was incorrect in his original statement, but also for its application to the temporary permit to which I will now refer. After refusing to approve of the form of permit submitted to which I have above referred, and still desirous not to interfere with the construction work of the company, the department prepared a new stipulation, which it thought would be satisfactory to the company, while at the same time conforming to the general rules and regulations of the department, wired the district forester that permit had been issued and that stipulation would follow for execution by the company. This was followed with a letter stating as follows:

I inclose for transmission for permittee the temporary permit and the draft of stipulations to be executed by it.

By an oversight the stipulations were not inclosed in the letter of transmittal. However, a copy of the stipulations was given to the attorney of the Hydro-Electric Co. in Washington, Mr. Pierce, who at once transmitted the stipulations to Mr. Lane in San Francisco. I want you to mark this statement that the stipulations were as a matter of fact given, on the same day the letter was sent, to the attorney for the company here in Washingon, who transmitted them to Mr. Lane, the attorney for the company, in San Francisco.

Mr. Lane has been here advocating this bill before the committee, and those who are supporting it are asking for what they term equitable relief on the part of Congress. Ordinarily he who seeks equity should, under the old familiar rule, come into court with clean hands. And now I direct your attention to the statement of Mr. Lane. [Quoting from page 23 of hearings:]

Having signed this permit shown at the bottom of page 61, and they having telegraphed us to that effect, in the course of the mail—in fact, it was 30 days later—they came to us with this stipulation, or rather this stipulation you see there—this elaborate one which we objected to—was sent to us for us to sign.

You will notice that he here states that it was 30 days after the permit was received before the receipt of the stipulations, when, as I have stated, a copy of the stipulations was delivered to Mr. Pierce, the company's attorney in Washington, at the time the letter of transmission was sent, and that he [Mr. Pierce] promptly transmitted the stipulations to Mr. Lane in San Francisco, so that the company, through its attorney, had the stipulations in its possession with the knowledge that it would not execute them and proceeded with its construction work.

There is another important fact right in this connection. The restraining order which was issued by the court was conditioned upon the failure of the company to secure a permit from the Government. They took the permit and the stipulations, which, they state, they could not approve, and proceeded with the construction work across the Government property.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. In violation of the injunction?

Mr. PICKETT. Certainly it was in violation of the injunction. That is the very point in the matter, for, knowing they could not approve of the stipulations, it was their duty to return them to the department and acting in good faith with the department and in compliance with the order of the court, cease construction work until they had reached an agreement.

It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that this is a good time to establish a precedent that those who come here seeking relief from Congress must have a record of good faith behind them. [Applause.]

I now pass to another branch of the case. When the facts were disclosed at the hearings with reference to the long-pending controversy between the Hydro-Electric Co. and the Department of Agriculture, and also the litigation in the courts, which had then been pending for practically a year, it certainly seemed quite remarkable that they should ask Congress for relief, in brief, to pass a law taking the matter out of the hands of the department and settling the litigation pending in the courts. During the hearings Mr. Lane stated that they based their rights on their so-called mining claims, and that they were willing to stand upon the validity of the mining claims as determined by the court. It was further stated that all they desired was that the company be not disturbed pending the litigation. I quote from Mr. Lane as follows (Hearings, p. 12):

This bill grants a permanent right of way as long as the beneficial use of it is made; but the main thing is merely this: The company wants to know, because it has capital invested—wants to make sure that it will run until the law is decided, because when the law is decided we certainly intend to obey.

And again he says (Hearings, p. 9):

Now, then, what we are asking is this: We do not want to be given any legal right any more than is absolutely necessary to keep this project running, but we don't want to shut down our project on a temporary injunction. We are perfectly willing to do everything that is there, and we don't care how the court finally decides the case, just so as we can keep going until the court does decide (if it reaches that conclusion) that we have no legal right, and we are willing to give bond pending that decision.

The gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER], the author of this bill, expressed the same view. I quote from the hearings:

The CHAIRMAN. Why would not the issue of a permit pending this litigation be satisfactory?
Mr. RAKER. It would.

So that, I repeat, all they asked at the conclusion of the hearings was that some arrangement could be effected whereby the company would not be disturbed until the court had finally decided the case, and now, after securing such stipulation, they are here pressing this bill.

Our friends from California and the West have a very peculiar view of the relation of the Government to its public domain. Here is a statement by my good and genial friend from California, Judge RAKER, and I quote it simply for the purpose of showing the general attitude of the West upon these matters:

Mr. RAKER. And we concede and assume, so far as this committee is concerned, that irrespective of the title to the land, and irrespective of the holding of the court conceding they have got the property in violation of the mining law—conceding they have got the property in violation of the mining law, that we are not now criticizing the department and these people, but we simply want the right to run a pipe line across this 3,800 feet of desert land.

Mark the words—

The CHAIRMAN. Even though the courts may find that the claim is fraudulent?
Mr. RAKER. Exactly.
The CHAIRMAN. Conceding that it is fraudulent, you think this legislation ought to be enacted, and a right of way granted?
Mr. RAKER. That is our position.

Gentlemen, I was astounded that a member of the committee, a Member of this high legislative body, would say that notwithstanding this company had fraudulently attempted to enter upon the public domain, notwithstanding it had defied the authority of the Government, nevertheless he would urge the passage of this legislation.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield right there?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Iowa yield to the gentleman from California?

Mr. PICKETT. Certainly; with pleasure.

Mr. RAKER. I am sure the gentleman does not want to misrepresent the facts. He does not want to put false words in my mouth, does he?

Mr. PICKETT. No; I am reading from the Hearings, page 14.

Mr. RAKER. Is it not a fact that the record shows that the corporation bought their property from three individuals, and before any notice or litigation was involved in this matter, and that my statement was in relation to the mining claims; that if the court should hold that the original locaters had violated the law, which I do not concede to-day, notwithstanding that they would deprive the company of their rights? That is, this company had the right of way for its ditch across the mining land, and any subsequent title would not affect it, and whatever the title to the mining claims might be, its title to a right of way across this particular tract of land was held under the act of 1866 and subsequent acts of Congress for over 30 years, and any subsequent owner of this land would take it subject to its prior right; the Government would be in the same position, for it made the grant over its land by the acts of Congress. I simply made it as a supposition.

The master held they were "paper claims," but this does not settle the question by any means. The record clearly shows that the mining claims are valid. But this validity or nonvalidity would not affect the company's prior right of way for its water ditch across this particular tract covered by their mining claims marked in blue on the map now before the House. They want to change from an open ditch to a closed pipe line.

This litigation now pending in the United States Circuit Court of California and the delay incident thereto brought them to Congress asking for a grant of an easement. This would settle the matter. Will the gentleman read my statement again?

Mr. PICKETT. I will read it over again for the gentleman's satisfaction:

Mr. RAKER. And we concede and assume, so far as this committee is concerned, that irrespective of the title to the land, and irrespective of the holding of the court—conceding they have got the property in violation of the mining law—that we are not now criticizing the department and these people, but we simply want the right to run a pipe line across this 880 feet of desert land.

Mr. RAKER. Right there, Mr. Chairman——

Mr. PICKETT. Let me finish reading the gentleman's statement. It goes on:

The CHAIRMAN. Even though the court may find that the claim is fraudulent?
Mr. RAKER. Exactly.
The CHAIRMAN. Conceding that it is fraudulent, you think this legislation ought to be enacted, and a right of way granted?
Mr. RAKER. That is our position.

Mr. Chairman, I am simply using the words that the gentleman from California used, as the record states them. It may be that the reporter did not take them down correctly. I hope he did not take them correctly. I am not putting into the gentleman's mouth any words that the record shows he did not say. I am simply quoting the words shown in the record.

I repeat that is a most remarkable statement, that even if the court should hold the claims were fraudulent and in violation of the law, the gentleman would still stand before the committee and the House and urge this legislation. If the gentleman can take any consolation out of that, he is welcome to it.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Iowa yield to the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. PICKETT. I do.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I would like to ask the gentleman if he believes, when a man concedes for the purpose of argument that a point is well made, that he should be held to that concession?

Mr. PICKETT. This was not an argument. It was a statement before the committee of those responsible for the measure. It was a hearing on the bill introduced by the gentleman himself.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Iowa yield again to the gentleman from California?

Mr. PICKETT. Certainly.

Mr. RAKER. The gentleman has stated what occurred before the committee, and he has stated his position. Is it not a fact that all that occurred was in what the gentleman read to-day? Was it not taken down by the reporter in the first hearing?

Mr. PICKETT. All that occurred during the examination before the committee.

Mr. RAKER. Has the gentleman read all that occurred before the committee?

Mr. PICKETT. After the hearing was completed, and after Mr. Lane left the room, we then took up informally the question of what disposition would be made of the bill, and that of course would not appear in the printed proceedings.

Mr. RAKER. Is it not a fact that nothing was discussed as to the final disposition of the bill until after an objection was made and an article—a circular—was sent to each Member of Congress? And did not I come before the committee when the gentleman from Iowa was present at the next meeting and demand that the committee bring every man who had any knowledge before the committee and reopen the hearings, and have a full and complete hearing? And did not the gentleman say it was not necessary?

Mr. PICKETT. Certainly it was unnecessary. As far as I am concerned, we have had hearings enough. I am willing to submit the case upon the hearings we have had. I am confining myself entirely to the record or hearings.

Mr. RAKER. So am I; but I do not want the gentleman, when we had the hearings before the committee, to have made no objection and then, when some outsider makes objection, come upon the floor of the House and say he did not have an opportunity to register his objection.

Mr. PICKETT. I want to say to the gentleman that he is not stating the facts.

Mr. RAKER. I am stating the facts, and the gentleman knows that the proceedings in regard to the matter are of record.

Mr. PICKETT. I am willing for the Members of this House to read the hearings. Some of them have already called attention to the fact of my opposition as disclosed by the hearings. You can not read the examination of Mr. Lane and the questions I propounded to him—any fair-minded man can not read it without discovering that I was opposed to the bill last summer. I will submit that question to the Members who have read the hearings. And, furthermore, the gentleman knows what I stated when he came to me. I said to him, "I do not care to have the matter opened up again for further hearings. We have had hearings enough. All I desire is to reserve the right to oppose the measure on the floor."

Mr. RAKER. The only thing I am asking is this: I want the gentleman to be as frank before this committee as he was before the Committee on the Public Lands, and I do not want him to try to accuse some member of the committee in regard to the matter when a full opportunity was given for hearing; that is all.

Mr. PICKETT. There is no complaint about not having ample hearings. I do not think if we had hearings for weeks it would disclose any more material facts than were developed in these hearings. There is no doubt about that. We have sufficient facts before us.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. The question of the unanimity of this committee seems to be at issue. Will the gentleman state whether or not there are any other members of the committee who are either objecting or reserving the right to object to the passage of this bill?

Mr. PICKETT. I have heard some of them state that they would not vote for it.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Then the gentleman does question the unanimity of this report—that is, so far as representing the individual opinions of the members of the committee?

Mr. PICKETT. I simply state what some of the Members have said to me, whether they were present at the time the bill was reported I would not say, but I will add that I make no suggestion that the bill was called up on the theory that certain Members were absent at the time. I raise no question that the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] acted in good faith, so far as calling up the bill was concerned.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PICKETT. Certainly.

Mr. RAKER. Is it not a fact that the gentleman from California did not call up the bill at all, but that it was called up by the chairman of the committee?

Mr. PICKETT. I do not know, and it is wholly immaterial.

Mr. RAKER. Is it not a fact that a motion was made by another Member, not myself, and seconded by another Member? I hold in my hand the original bill, with the original annotations by the clerk of the Committee on Public Lands, which says that it was unanimously adopted, and that I was then ordered to prepare the report.

Mr. PICKETT. I have raised no question about that.

Mr. RAKER. That is shown in the handwriting of the clerk.

Mr. PICKETT. The record states it was unanimously adopted by those who were present at the time. Nobody disputes that.

This will be a good place to quote again from the record, this time with the view of more fully disclosing the attitude of the Hydro-Electric Co., and incidentally to show my attitude at the time of the hearings last summer:

Mr. PICKETT. Now, then, you commenced the construction, and commenced to lay your pipes across this 160 acres?
Mr. LANE. Across the mining claim; yes.
Mr. PICKETT. And after you had proceeded some 400 feet or 800 feet——
Mr. LANE. I don't remember now.
Mr. PICKETT. After you had proceeded a short distance——
Mr. LANE. I think they had the pipe laid for 100 feet.
Mr. PICKETT (continuing). The representative of the Government notified you not to proceed any farther until you had complied with the rules and regulations of the department?
Mr. LANE. He came out and stopped the work and threatened to arrest the men.
Mr. PICKETT. You had advised your client to proceed in any event?
Mr. LANE. I advised them to submit to arrest, and as fast as these men were bailed out to put them back to work and go on.
Mr. PICKETT. In other words, you asserted your rights in opposition to the claim of the representative of the Government?
Mr. LANE. We asked this——
Mr. RAKER. Just answer the question.
Mr. LANE. That is true, but——
Mr. PICKETT. Wait a minute. So that, as I say, after the Government had notified you not to proceed, and what they claimed to be the law, and without obtaining a permit in pursuance of the rules and regulations of the department for crossing Government lands within a forest reserve, you advised your client to proceed?
Mr. LANE. I did.

It is here seen that notwithstanding the repeated notices served upon the company by the Government that the company was determined to enter upon the land in question in defiance of the Government authority, and even to the point of giving directions to put the men back to work as fast as they were bailed out if arrested.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Who was Mr. Lane?

Mr. PICKETT. He was the attorney of the company.

Briefly summarizing this branch of the case, I assert that the following facts are clearly established; the land in question was within a national forest reserve over which the Department of Agriculture had jurisdiction; that after the company had commenced the construction of its pipe lines and before it reached the Government land it was notified by the Government that it would be necessary to obtain a permit before entering thereon. I refer to the notice in November, 1909. That after the company acquired the mining claims further notices were served by the Government questioning the validity of the mining claims and forbidding the company to enter upon the public domain. That after the temporary injunction had been granted, conditioned upon receiving a permit, the company proceeded with its construction work without a valid stipulation, doing so, as the company's attorney stated, under the proposed draft which was never signed by the Secretary. That when the department issued a temporary permit, accompanying the same with stipulations to be signed by the company, they held the stipulations, knowing at the time they would not sign them and proceeded with the work. The findings of the master in chancery that these mining claims are fraudulent at least should raise a presumption as to their fraudulent character so far as Congress is concerned.

And now after being in open controversy with the executive branch of the Government, and with litigation pending in the judicial branch of the Government, they come before the legislative branch on the specious pretext of equitable relief. Great heavens, I would like to know where they find their definition of "equitable relief." [Applause and laughter.]

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PICKETT. Yes.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. This matter has been in litigation for 19 months?

Mr. PICKETT. Yes.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. The last affirmative action taken by the court was on November 17, at which time the injunction was made permanent.

Mr. PICKETT. The injunction was applied for in August, a temporary order granted August 10, and it was continued on November 17.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. With the one qualification——

Mr. PICKETT. Depending, of course, on a permit from the Government.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. What has taken place since then?

Mr. PICKETT. As far as the litigation is concerned?

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. PICKETT. Nothing has taken place since then except the stipulation which was entered into between the Department of Justice and the company, providing for leaving matters in statu quo, pendente lite. That stipulation was inserted in the RECORD by the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER]. They are occupying the land. Their pipes are across it. They are now in the courts upon their rights, as they insist, under these mining claims. They will not be disturbed until the court decides that case. If the court decides their way, there is no necessity for this legislation. If the court decides that the mining claims are fraudulent, they will then be required to agree upon terms of a permit with the Agricultural Department under the law which Congress has passed, and under the rules and regulations of the Department applicable to such cases.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield for a question right there?

Mr. PICKETT. I yield first to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. In the light of ordinary procedure, how soon would the gentleman regard it as possible for a decision to be reached?

Mr. PICKETT. I do not know. The Department of Justice informally informed me that it would be reached this spring. The gentleman understands the uncertainties of litigation.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. I assume that this legislation is somewhat of an emergency character.

Mr. PICKETT. There is no emergency character about it. The company is not suffering. Its pipes are there. The plant is in operation. The attorney for the company stated in the hearings that all they asked was to have the case tried in the courts, and in the meantime matters remain in statu quo.

Mr. Chairman, I stated in the beginning that the value of the land in controversy was of no importance as compared to the other issues involved. I have already discussed the record, showing the controversy that has been in existence between the company and the Agricultural Department and also the litigation pending in the courts. It is immaterial whether the mining claims are fraudulent or not, so far as we are now concerned. The department charged with the duty under legislative act of protecting the national domain asserts that the claims are fraudulent, and the court has thus far held that the claims are fraudulent, and I urge that it is not proper for Congress to be asked to step in at this time and settle the same through legislative enactment.

But beyond all this there rises before us the important question of Government control over the great water-power rights incident to the use of our national domain.

The control of the use of Government land for hydroelectric development was one of the reasons for the act of February 15, 1901 (31 Stat., 790). It was the very purpose of the act not to permit the acquirement of vested rights in violation of the public interest or the policy of the Government in respect to such uses. The Department of Agriculture in its dealings with the Hydro-Electric Co. has simply been obeying the clearly expressed purpose of that act. One of the means of avoiding the effect of that act on the part of hydroelectric companies is through the mining law. It is well illustrated in the case before us. The conservation of our natural resources is one of the big questions in this country. It may be true that the Government has waited longer than it should, but the fact that it has in the past permitted its valuable resources to pass into the hands of private interests or monopoly does not justify a continuance of that policy in the future. The department has simply asked the Hydro-Electric Co. in this case to accept stipulations which the department requires under its general rules and regulations of other companies under similar circumstances. I will not pause to consider in detail the provisions of the stipulation, but will call attention to one single paragraph, as follows:

That the works to be constructed and (or) maintained under said permit will not be owned, leased, trusteed, possessed, or controlled by any device permanently, temporarily, directly, indirectly, tacitly, or in any manner whatsoever so that they form part of, or in any way affect, any combination or are in anywise controlled by any combination, in the form of an unlawful trust, or form the subject of any contract or conspiracy to limit the output of electric energy, or in restraint of trade with foreign nations or between two or more States or Territories or within any one State or Territory in the generation, sale, or distribution of electric energy.

It is under this clause that the Government is seeking to prevent the use of its public domain in the interest of monopoly. The bill before us gives to the company the right to the land during the term of its beneficial use, which means perpetuity, and would take away any control whatever on the part of the Government. It would be contrary to the policy of the Government as expressed in its statutes and administered by its executive department.

Upon what theory can Congress be asked to make this exception? Why should this company be singled out for a special privilege? Is it to reward it for its defiance of the officers of the Government whom we have charged with the duty of protecting our public domain? Is it to rebuke the court for its decision thus far rendered in the case? Has not the company elected its remedy? Why should it not pursue it to a finality? If this bill passes, on what ground can Congress refuse to pass similar bills in the future? And if we adopt the legislative policy of granting these special privileges or exemptions, why not repeal the law we have and reverse the policy of our Government, that has found frequent expression during the past few years, that our public domain and its resources belong to the people?

Mr. Chairman, much has been said about the high character of the gentlemen who are connected with this company as stockholders or officers. I do not know them personally. I have received numerous letters and telegrams from friends who do know them and who bear witness to their standing and character, and I have heard nothing to the contrary and gladly accede thereto.

But the discharge of the high responsibility resting on a Member of this body can not be governed by friendship; it must rest on principle. We must act on measures according to their merits, irrespective of who favors or who opposes them.

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, I submit, looking at this measure from every angle, the record before us, the controversy between the department and the company, the litigation pending in the courts, the laws upon our statute books, the policy of the Government, and mindful of the interest of the people and of our high responsibility as legislators, that this bill in good conscience should not pass. [Applause.]

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Nevada [Mr. ROBERTS].

Mr. ROBERTS of Nevada. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I am a new Member and have seldom addressed this House, but I want to say at this time, after having listened to the very eloquent speech of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. PICKETT], that 20 minutes is too short a time within which to get together the mass of records that are necessary in order to answer the various questions that he has raised. But I do want to say that not all of the honest men in the United States live in Iowa any more than they live in any other one section. Not all of the men in this House are to be classed as monopolists simply because they favor this measure. As far as I am concerned, I want it distinctly understood from the outset that I am not representing any corporation in any particular, manner, or form, but I am appearing here in behalf of the great agricultural and mining interests of the State of Nevada. I live very close to this power line—only a short distance from it—and I do know this, that those western people who have gone in there and put in hundreds of thousands of dollars, and who are trying to develop that country, were willing to go in there and put up that money and take a gamble long before many of those gentlemen who are opposing them here to-day were born. What is it that has materially assisted in building up New York, laid your ocean cables, built up San Francisco and a hundred other cities? It was the gold and silver produced from the great mines in Nevada. What is it we want to do to-day with this power? Is it that we want to disregard the regulations of any department of the Government? I say to you no.

We are law-abiding citizens, but we want the Government to deal with us equitably. We do not want these mining properties to stand idle, as they have stood idle for the last 40 or 50 years, depending upon this power. I know many of the men who went in there, I know them personally—the men that are interested in this concern and properties surrounding it. They went in and invested their money. They own this water power. They own it all. The Government does not own a drop of it. They own the stream that runs down here into Mono Lake, a saline lake. The Government does not own any of that. Who owns it? The company owns it. Who owns the power plant down below here? Does the Government own it? No. Who owns it, and who owns the mining properties below that power plant, only awaiting the action of electricity before they start in to produce more money to put into circulation? Who is it? The men in the West who are willing to go out there and take a gambler's chance and try to do something. Yet, if the contention of some of the gentlemen here is correct, then the Government ought to hold this up. How long will it hold it up? Nobody in God's world would ever have undertaken the storage of that water power and built that dam and built that pipe line and conveyed that power down to its plant for the purpose of using it for mining and agricultural purposes, except the people who had their money in those mines and who had to get it out. Would you do it? Would the great Government of the United States do it? Would Mr. Pinchot do it? No. Who did it? Those men whom I have known for many years, some of whom crossed the plains in 1849 and 1850—and now some of you people here in the East and South, who have no public lands and who are crowded out, want to go out there and say to us how we shall manage that which is rightfully ours.

If the Government owned this water power, if it owned this water and owned this land I would say that it was a different question, but it does not. If the Government owned the property below it, I would say that a different question was presented, but the Government does not own it. Where in the name of common sense have you ever seen a question of equity more clear than the question that is presented to this House in this matter? If it is not a question of equity, then I do not know what equity is.

Mr. COLLIER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROBERTS of Nevada. Certainly.

Mr. COLLIER. I want to know how much of the Government land this pipe line goes over?

Mr. ROBERTS of Nevada. It goes over 3,800 feet of it.

Mr. COLLIER. And how long is the pipe line supposed to be, from one end to the other, going over lands owned by individuals?

Mr. ROBERTS of Nevada. I am quite certain that it does not cross any lands owned by individuals. The lands which the pipe line crosses are owned wholly by the company.

Mr. COLLIER. How long is that line? That is what I mean.

Mr. ROBERTS of Nevada. I think it is 5 miles. I will ask the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER].

Mr. RAKER. I forget how many miles it is.

Mr. COLLIER. And what you want is the right to go over the Government land?

Mr. ROBERTS of Nevada. All we want is this right to go over 3,800 feet of Government land. The Government has the right, the absolute control of the public domain. It can withdraw to-morrow if it wants to from the Forest Service any portion of the lands embraced therein. It has absolute control of the public domain.

Then why should it not in a case of this kind, where there are great interests at stake, grant us this right? Why should not every case rest upon its own merits? If another company comes in here and wants something, and it can put up as good a case as this, I do not care whether Rockefeller or Morgan or anybody else is behind it, I will vote for it. We want to progress; we want to develop; we want to go ahead. We do not want to be held back by some of you people because some man who believes in extreme conservation has said this thing is in the interest of a water-grabbing monopoly.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROBERTS of Nevada. Certainly.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Do I understand the gentleman to say that all the company wants is permission to cross this tract?

Mr. ROBERTS of Nevada. The company does not want to submit to a revocable permit, which may be changed at the whim of every man who comes into the department. As the gentleman from California said the other day, just before Mr. Garfield went out of office as Secretary of the Interior—and I have no fault to find with him or any other official—by virtue of a change in his ideas and policies concerning those matters, with one swipe of the pen he destroyed interests amounting to $50,000,000, and the water supply of San Francisco, for which something like half a million dollars had been expended, was absolutely made insecure. That was done just before he went out of office.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. COLLIER] asked the gentleman how long that ditch is. I find that it is between 3 and 4 miles.

Mr. ROBERTS of Nevada. I thought it was 5 miles to the power house.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield for a further question?

Mr. ROBERTS of Nevada. I can not now. Would any of you as business men invest your money in any proposition where you have precedents like Mr. Garfield's action staring you in the face? Just before he went out of office he went to work and canceled 35 or more of those permits. Would you want to invest your money in a proposition where that was apt to occur? Let me tell you this: Those mining companies out there are obliged to have electricity. The rich ores on the top have been worked out. They were worked out in the early days. The town of Aurora, the town of Rawhide, the town of Lucky Boy, the town of Fairview, the town of Wonder in my own State, 100 miles away from this place, are now receiving this power. They have to enter into contracts, stock has to be sold to put into those companies, and you have to put up a pretty good business proposition nowadays before men will consent to invest their money. They want to know whether the present head of the Forestry Service or his successor will revoke the permit they have to cross these plains, and whether or not they will lose the money they have invested in it, and they have a right to inquire. You can argue all you want about the hearing before the committee and what took place there. I was present at some of those hearings myself, and with all due respect to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. PICKETT], for whom I have the highest personal regard, I will say that I did not hear him, while the attorney for that company was present, raise any serious objection to the attorney's actions in this matter so that the attorney might answer him. Yet upon the floor of this House he will attack this company and its attorneys and those who favor this bill. These men are all reasonable men and good men, and only want to be let alone. They want to go ahead and build up the West.

The West would never be built up according to these policies. How long would it be before anybody else would go in there and put up the money? A private individual would not, because he has not the mines and interests. These people have their money invested there and they have to get it out. How long would it be before the Government of the United States would go in there and start to develop those mining properties, I ask you?

Can any of you answer? Where is the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. PICKETT]? Let him answer me where there is another company in the United States that would put up $250,000 to develop those mining properties in Nevada and California. It means, in addition to that, the turning of the water on to perhaps two or three thousand acres of land after they have used it for power and electricity, and it means the making of homes for people from your congested eastern centers. And yet some of you say that we should not go ahead with it.

Some time ago there was a circular letter sent out by the Hon. Gifford Pinchot, to which I wish to call your attention. I want to show you that he says in the very circular letter which he sent out that the permits are objectionable, and he does not blame the company for objecting to them. He says in his circular letter that the company rightfully objects to those permits, but at the same time he says that this bill is indefensible at all points. If it is indefensible at all points, I can not see why he should use the language which he did, namely, "that the company has rightfully objected to them."

Now, I want to answer one or two questions here. In Public Document No. 1424 of the Sixty-first Congress, third session, you will find all of the official correspondence bearing on the case prior to March 4, 1911. There has been a good deal said of that. It appears to me that the company has shown a willingness to have its rights adjudicated in court and to avoid any conflict with the forestry officials.

You will note on page 3 of the document a telegram of August 4, 1910, showing that some construction work had already been done upon this disputed strip of land at the time the trouble arose, and on page 5 of the same document you will see another Forest Service telegram, bearing date of August 11, 1910, showing that the company's attorney desired at that time to enter into any reasonable stipulation which would protect the interests of both parties and try the case on its merits, and, furthermore, he expressed the willingness to waive any advantage that might have accrued to the company from the fact that some construction work had already been done.

On page 26 of the public document you will find a proposition made by the company's attorney, Mr. E. A. Lane, wherein he agrees to enter into a stipulation to try the case on its merits. Is not that fair? And yet he is abused on this floor. The forest official rejected this offer, however, and rushed into court, inflicting severe financial loss upon the company and unnecessarily, it appears to me, delaying the completion of the project by a temporary restraining order secured from the court, without any opportunity for the company to be heard, as I have before stated.

That is only one of the things this company has been up against. Only a year or so ago, while I was at home, a telegram came over the wire that snowslides were coming down the high Sierras and were wiping out all the towns along the road. The power house of this plant was destroyed, and that old ditch, of which so much has been said, has been washed out by snow-slides time and time again, and one of the reasons that old open ditch was not used continuously, and one of the very reasons that we are now asking to use this pipe line instead, was the washouts which are always occurring on those sliding mountains.

As to that little bare tract of land, I want to tell you it would not keep a grasshopper alive for six days. There is not any vegetation upon it. It is fit for nothing but horned toads, rattlesnakes, and lizards. And yet they say valuable Government property is being destroyed. I have heard these ultraconservationists stand up here and almost with tears in their eyes say that valuable Government property was being destroyed. If it were an individual's property, they would condemn it. You would go across it in a minute, but, unfortunately, you can not condemn anything that belongs to Uncle Sam.

And they say that the mining locations are valueless and throw them out of the way. That was what this master found. With respect to this master, who is he? He is a college graduate. Of course that is in his favor. I am not. But what did he find? He found certain things about which he knew nothing, except the principles of law. He did not know how to apply them to the mining conditions that exist in the West. I venture to say he did not know how to locate a mining claim to save his life; and I dare say, with due respect to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. PICKETT], he could not tell the difference between a quartz mining claim and a placer claim. Those things are misunderstood.

But was that matter ever approved by the court based on the hearing that was taken before this master? Was there any action taken by the court to which he reported? I want to say no. His report stands, and nothing has been done with it whatever. The court never sustained his findings. They are simply as they were at the time, matters of record.

Now, in conclusion, gentlemen, let me state that there is more involved and a greater degree of public concern in this than merely the protection of this company and the men who have invested their money in it. It involves the future of thousands of acres of arid lands and the opening up of many rich mining districts in my own State.

My pockets are filled with telegrams at the present time from very prominent mining men in the western portion of my State asking that I support this measure, and I want to tell you that they are not from dishonest men, either. They believe that the passage of this bill means cheap power for the development of those properties and that the country will be benefited by it. [Applause.]

Our State is doubtless more deeply interested and concerned in the outcome of this matter than any other State in the Union. At the present time power is being supplied to the mining towns of Luckyboy, Fairview, and Wonder, and in a short time will be supplying the camps of Aurora and Rawhide, all of which are situated far remote from the source of this power and miles and miles distant from any growth of tree life that could properly be classed as a forest. These towns that I have just mentioned, and which are proven mining camps, producing thousands upon thousands of dollars to be added to the Nation's wealth, are wholly dependent upon the power that is supplied by the Hydro Electric Co. of California. Besides these mining camps and others within the State of California, there are thousands of acres of land only awaiting the proper installation of electricity from this plant to become productive homes, and without the encouragement of the enterprise of this company they will remain as they are at the present time—barren arid wastes. It would seem strange to me if this Congress should decide that a few barren acres of land embraced within a forest reserve, which never was properly intended to be such, should stand between the great undeveloped natural resources I have just mentioned and their future development.

It must be remembered and taken into the consideration of this measure that the West, and particularly the section of which I speak, is only partially developed and needs the encouragement of the Government rather than the discouragement of any particular department thereof. We have no fight with the officials of the Bureau of Forestry. They are entitled to their views and have the right to express them; but we do contend that this Congress has the absolute right, by the enactment of law, to encourage and protect the rights of this company, regardless of any order which may have been issued by any official in the Forest Service. This company owns its water rights and has a title to them which has been in existence for more than 20 years. It owns its dam and pipe lines, its power plant, and the grounds upon which the same are located in fee simple. There is a little strip of ground across which this company wants the right to convey its water power, only 3,800 feet in length, about which there is some controversy at the present time. This small tract of ground about which the controversy ranges is a barren, arid, rocky slide, upon which there is no growth of vegetation, never was, and never will be; and yet, forsooth, due to the overzealous efforts of some of those who favored the extreme conservation of our natural resurces this tract of land, 10 miles distant from anything that resembles a forest, was embraced in the reserve. Many of the people behind this enterprise and deeply interested in it are known to me personally. They are pioneers and the sons of pioneers who crossed the plains in 1849 and 1850 by ox teams and have owned valuable property in that vicinity, the development of which could only be brought about by the successful installation of electric power. In order to develop these properties they invested their money in this enterprise, and I am told that their investment amounts to upward of $200,000; and yet by the simple ruling of one of the departments of the Government this great enterprise is to be practically confiscated.

In order to develop such sections of country it requires daring business enterprise, and men of means who believe in the future of such sections should certainly have the protection of the Government. Would you as business men invest your money in uncertainties? Do you believe that it is the proper policy of this Government to foster and encourage the development of our mineral and agricultural areas, or do you believe that it is the proper thing to place stumbling blocks in the way of those who are willing to take chances on their development? Capital as a general thing is cautious concerning investments, and men who are willing to invest great sums of money in such undertakings which, at most, must be considered as uncertain investments, are certainly the ones who have built up our western frontier. It was such men as these who opened up and developed the great Comstock mines in the early days, and later Goldfield, Tonopah, and other great gold and silver producers. I am not one of those opposed to reasonable conservation which redounds to the benefit of the people who now live or the generations yet to come, nor do I desire to be understood as criticizing the motives of those men in the employ of the Government who have been connected with this case, but I do now condemn the policy of the measures in this case which stand between the development of our natural resources on one hand and the undevelopment of the same resources on the other. Why, gentlemen, this power plant is at least 60 miles distant from a railroad, and in a country that would never be developed and brought into usefulness without the investment of vast sums of money by those progressive westerners who were willing to take a legitimate "gamble." It is a shame to stand for one moment for the policy of any man, or set of men, in a case of this kind, simply because the Government has entered upon a policy of conservation.

I believe in the protection of water power, and I believe in the protection of our forests, but I am in favor of voting for any measure which will tend to the further development of our country. This small strip of pipe line, which is the controversy in this case, crosses five mining claims, which it is claimed by the owners were duly and legally located by the locators and subsequently purchased by this company, and, as I have said before in my remarks, they constitute a tract of land worthless except for mining purposes, and even for that purpose they may prove to be utterly worthless. No one can tell until they have been thoroughly prospected and developed. I have seen many such locations, just as barren, apparently just as worthless, just as devoid of vegetation, become producers of great wealth. My contention is that the company is entitled to equitable relief at the hands of Congress. For years, operating under a construction of the State and United States laws, this company and its grantors have owned and operated an open ditch for precisely the same purposes it now asks this House the privilege of maintaining and operating the pipe line in question. For more than 20 years these operations were being conducted, before ever any departmental official dreamed of bringing the land which it crosses within the limits of a forest reserve. I further understand that the Forestry Department itself has admitted the right of the company to own and conduct the open ditch which I have just referred to, but in order to conduct the water more directly, more economically, and more efficiently across these lands the company did, as you or any other business man would have done, changed the course of the ditch and constructed a closed pipe line instead. The trench has been dug, the pipe laid, and the power necessary for the operation of the properties dependent upon it is being generated and used. Camps that have been lying dormant within the State of Nevada since the days when Mark Twain was writing humor and scratching for gold in the sands of the desert are now active and producing camps, and to revert unnecessarily, perhaps, but interestingly I hope, I wish to state that the camp of Aurora, in which Mark Twain's cabin now stands, and the camp in which he tried to make his fortune long before electric power was dreamed of, is one of the camps dependent upon this act of Congress.

This company not only wants but should be granted a clear title, so that all legal doubt as to its operations may be set at rest and that no uncertainties may exist as to the status of the questions involved. No one will be harmed by the passage of the bill at this time, nor will any precedent be established inimical to the interests of the Forest Bureau. The introducer of this bill, the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER], has specifically pointed out in a written statement which he furnished to various Members of this House, that under an act of Congress approved February 1, 1905, which grants rights of way across forest reserves for mining and municipal purposes that the company claims not only a right of way, but a vested easement for its pipe line. I believe that the laws governing the mineral lands and locations will be found upon examination to be liberal enough to warrant any person who believes in the development of such property to go ahead with his enterprise. I can not believe that Congress will seriously consider the Hon. Mr. Pinchot's argument in connection with this case. I believe that if he were as familiar with the conditions that exist in that section of the country as those of us whose good fortune it is to live there, that he would, notwithstanding his zeal concerning conservation, withdraw his objections to the passage of this bill and apologize to those pioneer business men who have devoted their entire lives to western development, for the statement which he has circulated among the Members of this House. I will not be as unkind to Mr. Pinchot as he was to the owners of this company in the criticism of their motives, nor do I for a moment impute to him any ulterior motive in his objections to this legislation, but I truly do disagree with him concerning the propriety of this legislation and concerning the propriety of the statements which reflect upon men whose lives and characters are beyond reproach and who were working for the upbuilding and development of the natural resources of this country before he was born. To develop great properties requires capital, and that capital must be guided and protected along the lines of its legitimate investments. This company, in order to proceed with its work, must have the support of the various mining and agricultural enterprises to which it intends to supply its power.

Mining and agricultural companies, as well as individuals, who look forward to the development of their properties, must have some assurance that the rights of the company with which they enter into contracts for electric power will be protected in their rights, and that those rights will not be subject to the whim of every man who might be selected to pass upon the questions involved in the maintenance of a forest reserve. Yet those who oppose this measure would give to this company, which has invested so many thousands of dollars and which is doing so much for the upbuilding of our country, a revocable permit, if you please, for the conduct of its business. If such a policy should be carried out, there would never be any material progress or advancement in the West. Would the Government, whose only claim is a disputed right in these apparently worthless acres of shale rock, undertake the development of any of these resources? No. Why, then, should a "dog in the manger" policy be pursued and those who are willing to proceed in the opening up of those great enterprises be retarded and discouraged in their undertaking? It must be remembered and seriously considered that this company early in the summer of 1910 constructed a dam upon its own land at Lake Bundy, for the purpose of storing the storm and flood waters, which would otherwise run to waste, and utilizing such waters for the generation of a small amount of electric power—approximately 1,000 horsepower—to be used in its own mine operations and for sale to other mine owners, and for other purposes; that not a foot of Government land was to be or is covered by the dam or flooded by the waters of the reservoir; that the Government does not own the land where the operations begin nor where they end.

The questions involved in this case are in a class entirely different from those in any other case to which my attention has been called. The Hon. Mr. Pinchot claims that the question at issue is a small one and that the value of the land for national forest purposes will not be seriously reduced by the construction of the pipe line. He claims, however, that the importance of the precedent involved is as great as the actual issue is small, and that the essential facts of the situation are that the company is attempting through congressional legislation to establish the right of water-power companies to take and use for their own purposes whatever national forest lands they please in spite of the Government and the courts. He claims that the bill is indefensible at all points, and yet he admits in his circular letter of January 6, 1912, that power companies very properly object to the law under which revocable permits are at present given. My understanding of the question is that Congress has the right at any time to withdraw from forest reservation any lands that it may see fit. It has absolute control of the public domain. Can it be argued that the officials of the Forest Reserve or of any of the departments of Government have more power than Congress itself? If Congress should, as I firmly believe it will, after going thoroughly into the merits of this case, in its discretion grant the relief prayed for in this bill, no harm could possibly result from it, for each case that may hereafter be presented would have to stand upon its own merits. Mr. Pinchot further contends that this bill does not make possible any development that would be impossible without it. In reply to that, I desire to state that it is improbable that any man or set of men, who were not interested in large undeveloped properties, both mining and agricultural, wholly dependent upon this project, would ever have undertaken the enterprise. These properties would remain undeveloped perhaps forever. He further states in his letter that the department is now, and has constantly, been ready to grant under the proper and customary safeguards the right which this bill proposes to grant without any safeguard at all.

My study of this case leads me to the conclusion that this statement is inconsistent with the statement previously made by the gentleman, wherein he says that the companies properly objected to the permits under the present law governing national forests. He further states, in terse language, that this bill should be killed promptly, because it "would make it harder to control monopoly and impair or destroy the right of the people to handle their own property in their own interests." In this connection I desire to state that that is the very object for which this bill is introduced, namely, to allow the company which owns this property to manage it, not only in its own interests but for the public welfare. I am just as much opposed to illegal monopolies as any man, and am opposed to impairing or destroying the rights of the people, but I am also opposed to any policy of government which stands in the way of legitimate development and progress. Furthermore, the contention of Mr. Pinchot that this bill is in the interest of "water-power grabbers" and favors monopoly, I must say that he disagrees with the local forest officers who testified before the Public Lands Committee, as will be shown in question and answer 11, on page 5, of the hearing before said committee. This question was asked, "Will the desired special use involve monopoly?" Answer, "No." On page 41 of the hearing before the committee, Mr. Williams, the Assistant Solicitor of the Department of Agriculture, testified as follows:

Mr. VOLSTEAD. But is the Government going to suffer any damage in any way that would be irreparable?

Mr. WILLIAMS. No; no individual in the United States will suffer one penny.

Now, the records show that the Hydro-Electric Co. first commenced its work in the early summer of 1910, and there was no trouble with any of the forestry officials until the latter part of July, 1910, when in the construction of its pipe line it became necessary to cross this barren tract of land, which is the source of all this trouble. In crossing this land the forest officials attempted to prevent the construction work by threatening to arrest the men in the company's employ. The officials of the forest reserve demanded that the company surrender all its property rights and its legal claim of rights under the mining laws to cross this small barren tract of land, and take out a revocable permit, containing the same terms and conditions as though it were operating exclusively on Government land instead of upon its own land held in private ownership. Shortly after the threat of arrest was made, a suit for injunction was instituted and obtained, ex parte, without any opportunity to the company for a hearing, a temporary restraining order. By virtue of this order the company's work was tied up for more than three months.

In the meantime the local master in chancery had heard evidence on the question of the issuance of the injunction pendente lite and had reported recommending the issuance of such injunction. It might be well to state, however, that this report was never confirmed by the court, and therefore no injunction pendente lite was ever issued upon the report.

Some time later, after considerable negotiation between the company and the Government officials, the Government officials granted the company a temporary permit and authorized construction to proceed, with the understanding that the company would be allowed to operate continuously, pending a final judgment by the court upon its merits. It was mutually agreed that any injunction pendente lite which should issue should contemplate this temporary permit and should not prohibit continued operation under such permit.

The company had been moved to open negotiations with the Government officials on account of the great financial loss caused by the prolonged tie-up of its construction work under the ex parte temporary restraining order. Therefore the company, in consideration of the understanding just described and of the issuance of the temporary permit which allowed construction and operation to proceed, agreed on its part to the issuance of the formal order for injunction pendente lite. This agreement the company carried out in open court.

It was not long thereafter until the officials of the Government submitted to the company for execution, and demanded that it sign, the same form of permit which it had refused to sign from the first. The company offered to sign any temporary agreement, reasonable in its terms, which would be binding pending litigation only and which would not jeopardize the company's legal claim, but would allow it to proceed in court. However, the officials representing the Government insisted that the company should sign the objectionable permit, which they proposed without modification in any word, syllable, or letter. The company refused to sign any such agreement, and thereupon the Government officials revoked the permit which they had previously granted and upon which the company had acted in good faith, and attempted to close down the company's plant and to force it to tear up its pipe line by invoking against the company the formal order of court for an injunction pendente lite, which had been issued by the consent of the parties.

During this time, however, the company had expended several thousand dollars and had completed its pipe line and constructed its power house and transmission lines, and was furnishing electricity for its own operations and for the operations of other miners.

During the time the construction work had been prevented the forestry officials instructed the local forest officers to grant a temporary permit to the company, provided it would make the same agreement which it had offered to make in the beginning, with the further proviso, however, that the company should in open court consent to the issuance of a temporary injunction.

The company had already been long delayed in this work, and had suffered a heavy financial loss, and winter was fast approaching. This meant another year's delay, and the company finally consented to the terms proposed, in fact, after preliminary consultation with the local officers, the company had made the offer which appears on page 69 of the document.

I will quote from that page:

Mr. Lane, attorney for the Hydro-Electric Co., has agreed that if the department will issue a temporary permit he, on behalf of the company, will go into court and state that no objection will be offered to the issuance of a temporary injunction and to the amendment of the order to include a prohibition against maintenance and operation of a pipe line or any other water conduit across all or any part of the lands in question. He will stipulate, if such temporary permit is issued, to apply for and execute a final permit in the form presented by the department whenever the company fails in its litigation. He wishes, however, to have this temporary permit run until the close of any litigation the company may care to institute—which might mean until a decision was rendered on final appeal to the Supreme Court. He is willing—in fact, prefers—that the temporary permit shall carry such charges as a final permit would; but to avoid any difficulties in making refunds if the company should be successful, that all checks shall be deposited in escrow until the completion of the litigation. In case the company is defeated the final permit would date from the beginning of the litigation.

The offer which I have just quoted was communicated to the Forester by letter and also by telegram, which you will notice at the top of page 68 of the document. The telegram is addressed to the Forester, at Washington, and was sent from San Francisco on the night of the 12th of November, 1910. The Forester's reply was sent from Washington to San Francisco on the night of November 14, 1910, with direction to the local forester at San Francisco to prepare such temporary permit embodying proposed agreement to be drawn up by Mr. Lane, representing the company, and by Mr. Merrill, chief engineer of the Forest Service, the United States district attorney at San Francisco, and the local solicitor of the Department of Agriculture at San Francisco, representing the Government. The telegram just referred to will be found at the bottom of page 67 of the public document.

Acting upon, and in accordance with, these telegraphic instructions the company and the representatives of the Government drew up a temporary agreement, which is printed on pages 65, 66, and 67 of the document.

You will notice that this agreement was submitted to the forestry officials by the company after it had been executed, acknowledged, and regularly approved by the board of directors of the company. With your permission, I will read the agreement.

Now, this agreement provides for a temporary permit to be effective during the litigation, provides for payments of $75 each year to be placed in escrow by the company to await the judgment of the court, and provides also that the company will, if defeated in court, execute and abide by whatever agreement and permit might thereafter be prescribed by the Secretary of Agriculture.

After this agreement, which was drawn in accordance with the express telegraphic instructions of the officials of the Government as per telegrams which I have just cited, the Forest Service purely and simply abrogated the same without any fault on the part of the company or without any act or neglect being charged against it.

The reasons given for the refusal of the Forest Service officials to live up to their agreement are set forth in the Forester's letter to the district forester, dated November 26, 1910, and printed on pages 57, 58, and 59 of the document, which I have. I quote from the Forester's letter:

The main reason, however, for the disapproval of the proposed agreement is that the solicitor holds that power permits hereafter shall not take the form of an agreement at all and shall not contain stipulations or conditions tending, even by implication, to bind or control the discretion given by the statute to the Secretary to revoke such permits. The new form of permit and stipulations and the power part of the new code are being shaped up to carry out this idea.

After this agreement was abrogated the company was notified by the department that it must accept and agree to a new stipulation drawn by the forestry officials, and which is printed on pages 59, 60, and 61 of this document.

One peculiar thing about this agreement is that it is practically the same form of water-power permit stipulation as is required of large water-power companies which are utilizing valuable water-power sites belonging to the Government and reservoirs and pipe lines located entirely upon Government land. The only difference is in paragraph No. 1, which provides for a fixed charge of $75 per year instead of the usual graduated kilowatt hour or horsepower charge.

The company refused to sign such an agreement, upon the ground that it would involve an admission against itself of the very points at issue in the pending litigation. The company's letter, in which are its objections and requested nullifications, is printed on pages 56 and 57 of the document.

The forestry officials refused to consider the company's request, telling the company that it could "fish, cut bait, or swim ashore." These words will be found at the top of page 48 of the document. It also appears from the records, on page 47 of the same document, that the company appealed to the Secretary of Agriculture, and that the Secretary of Agriculture denied the appeal and ordered the revocation of the permit under which the company had already completely constructed and installed its ditch line and power plant.

The company can not be said to be operating on Government land, nor is it using or utilizing any water-power site belonging to the Government. It owns not only the water, but its power sites, by long-vested and unquestioned title. It also owns by unquestioned title at the present time, and has owned through itself and its predecessors for more than 20 years, an open ditch and a right of way for this open ditch across the same parcel of land that is described in the bill.

If this company were using and utilizing valuable Government lands and power sites, the case might be looked at differently, but as it is it appears to me to be clearly a case where Congress should grant relief.

Some of you may ask, and rightfully so, the necessity of granting relief. In the first place, all of the company's water rights, its reservoir site, its dam, its pipe lines, its power house, its transmission lines, and its mining properties would be rendered practically valueless, for the reason that there is positively no security of title and nothing to guarantee an investment under such a license or revocable permit as the Forest Service proposed.

Forest Service permits are issued under the act of February 15, 1901 (31 Stat. L., 790), which expressly provides. I quote from the act:

And provided further, That any permission given by the Secretary of the Interior under the provisions of this act may be revoked by him or his successor, in his discretion, or interest in, to, or over any public land, reservation, or park.

It will thus be seen that under this act the power of arbitrary revocation is supreme and that the company would be without any security whatever. No one would invest money in such an enterprise, and Mr. Pinchot himself, in his letter, as I have before stated, acknowledges that such permits are objectionable. In fact, these permits have actually kept capital from developing many valuable properties throughout the country. A permit was first granted to this company and afterwards revoked. It was revoked after it had been regularly agreed to and without notice or reason given therefor.

The company had invested considerable capital under the permit agreement and had completely constructed its plant. Then all at once, by reason of a change in policy, their investment was made insecure. Nor was the action of the Government officials in this case the only arbitrary action taken by them. I am informed that many other instances might be cited wherein valuable properties have been practically rendered valueless by revocations made subsequent to vast expenditures of capital in good faith. I believe that the water supply for the city of San Francisco has been cited here as one of the examples of change of front, on the part of departmental officials. I mention these facts to show how uncertain such permits render great and meritorious undertakings.

These wholesale revocations were based upon ex post facto department regulations which required a new form of agreement and required additional and more onerous agreements on the part of the permittees.

The reason assigned in all of these cases was substantially the same as that given in the present case, which I have already quoted. I quote it again in part from House Document 1424:

> The main reason, however, for the disapproval of the proposed agreement is that the solicitor holds that power permits hereafter shall not take the form of an agrement at all, etc. * * * The new form of permit and stipulations and the power part of the new code are being shaped up to carry out this idea.

As I understand the term conservation, it means the act of preserving from decay, loss, or injury. If that be the meaning, then this company, which is characterized as a "water-grabbing monopoly" by the opposition to this bill, is engaged in carrying out the principles of conservation in the highest degree. It is engaged in preserving from loss and putting to a beneficial use vast volumes of water which have for ages gone to waste; it is saving from decay the natural resources of a rich, undeveloped country. It is providing homes for the homeseekers, opening up mines, and providing some of the necessary and useful comforts for the people in those isolated sections. If it be against the policy of this Government to encourage such enterprises, then I do not understand the principles of a progressive Government.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, I hope that the members of the committee distinctly heard the last statement made by the gentleman from Nevada [Mr. ROBERTS], wherein he said that at the present moment his pockets were full of telegrams from the mine owners of Nevada asking him to aid in the passage of this bill. And here, Mr. Chairman, is the real secret of the strenuous efforts that are being made to pass this bill. It is not this little 3,800 feet across the barren waste that is involved in this bill, but there is involved in it the entire question of the regulation of water powers in all of the national forests in this country and over our public domain. The purpose of this bill, Mr. Chairman, is to create an opening wedge, and if this bill is passed, making this grant to this company that has attempted to perpetrate a fraud upon the United States, then I say that this Congress can not in equity and good conscience refuse to grant to the other 250 water-power companies now holding revocable permits the same kind of legislation. Mr. Chairman, those who favor this bill have attempted to belittle its importance. They have shown to us that here is only a strip of 3,800 feet of barren land that is involved. If that were so, then, why should this bill receive attention from lobbyists who have come from across the continent to the city of Washington, lobbying for this 3,800 feet of right of way? If that is all that is involved, why have I, like the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER], received a telegram, containing 800 words, asking for my support on the bill? Why was there an attorney sent here to Washington from my own State of Wisconsin, a friend of mine, who stated to me that he represented a certain lumber company in the city of Chicago, and asked me to support this bill, if all that was involved was a little 3,800-foot strip across a piece of barren land?

Mr. Chairman, every Member should consider these things in reference to this bill. So long as I have been a Member of this House it has been my endeavor always to study bills coming before this House impartially and, so far as in me lies, come to a just and proper conclusion with reference to them. And with reference to this bill I say—and I measure my words—that no more unjust bill has been presented to this Congress since I have been a Member of it.

The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. PICKETT] has gone over the history of it and I shall only touch upon two or three points in connection with it. And, first, let me say that it has been contended by the gentleman from California [Mr. HAYES] to-day that this company had been operating an open ditch, and all they desired to do was to change it into a pipe line. Why, Mr. Chairman, the record shows that this company never ran a drop of water through that open ditch. The record further shows that that open ditch has never had a drop of water run through it since the year 1902—10 years ago. It was further stated by the gentleman from California that all that they desired with reference to this bill was to have the law applied to this case. Mr. Chairman, before I get through I think I will be able to convince the committee that it is not the law they want applied to this case, but they are afraid of the law being applied to it. [Applause.] And that is why they are here seeking this legislation now.

Now, Mr. Chairman, to begin with, we have the views of the Secretary of Agriculture, Mr. Wilson, in a letter to President Taft, wherein he says of this company and this proceeding:

> This company has shown a disposition throughout this whole matter to set at defiance my authority in the administration of the national forests, so far as affected by the act of February 15, 1901.

The Solicitor of the Department of Agriculture has said:

> The report of the master in chancery is exhaustive and clearly presents the issues in the case, and this report can not be read without the conviction that this company had knowingly and intentionally set out to construct its pipe line across the lands of the United States in the Mono National Forest without a permit and in conspicuous defiance of the law and the regulations of this department.

Now, much has been said about the Government proceeding against the company arbitrarily and securing a temporary injunction against it. I want to read from the testimony of Mr. Lane, one of the company's attorneys, who has spent days and months here, and who is here to-day, as I understand, lobbying for this bill. In the hearings before the committee this was Mr. Lane's testimony:

> Mr. PICKETT. The representative of the Government notified you not to proceed any further until you had complied with the rules and regulations of the department?
> Mr. LANE. He came out and stopped the work, and threatened to arrest the men.
> Mr. PICKETT. You had advised your plant to proceed in any event?
> Mr. LANE. I advised them to submit to arrest, and as fast as these men were bailed out to put them back to work and go on.

That is the character of defiance of law that we are asked to reward by the passage of this bill. But that is not all. Shortly before this work was commenced this company secured, at a cost of $10 apiece, seven mining locations, and the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] contends that these mining locations were valid. He said that the master in chancery held that because they did not find lumps of gold as big as your fist on each one of these mining claims that therefore they were fraudulent and not a valid discovery.

Now, the gentleman from California must know that of these seven mining claims there is only one as to which there is any claim that there was ever a discovery of a grain of mineral on it, the one claim known as the High-grade claim. As to the other six, the master in chancery finds that they were fraudulent, not because they were bought for $10 apiece only, but because there is not a scintilla of testimony that as to six of these claims there was any discovery of mineral whatever.

And I want to read what the master in chancery found in reference to that. After describing the claims and finding that there was a claim of discovery on only one of the seven, the High Grade claim, the master says:

> On the question of the good faith of these mining locations I have given the evidence and the arguments of counsel a most careful consideration, giving every possible effect to the possibility that the Goleta vein may continue into these claims, and that cheap ore may be worked with profit thereupon. * * * I am entirely convinced that the great preponderance of evidence shows that they are nothing but paper locations, made with a view to obtaining a right of way for their pipe line across the forest reserve.

That is the finding of the master in chancery, and no one can read the record without being absolutely convinced that that finding is abundantly sustained.

The gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] last Wednesday read a decision of the Supreme Court of California in a case in which he himself as judge had rendered the decision in the lower court, and I want to say, in reference to that decision, that we may well concede that that decision states the law absolutely as it is, and yet, under that decision, any court in the United States would be compelled to find as the master in chancery found in this case, that these mining claims were fraudulent.

But that is not the only fraud that has been perpetrated by this Hydro-Electric Co. upon the Government. When the Government officials were insisting upon compliance with the law, as it was the duty of the Government officials to do, and knowing, of course, that those mining claims were acquired by or for the purpose of perpetrating a fraud upon the Government, what did this company do—this company that is now before this Congress seeking equitable relief? They went to the county board of Mono County and there secured the passage of an ordinance laying out a highway along this entire pipe line, and agreed to construct that highway at their own expense.

Now, as the master in chancery has found, and as the fact is, there was no occasion for the laying out of any highway in

Mono County along these lands, except this 3,800 feet in controversy, for as to the balance of the lands the Hydro-Electric Co. owned them, and therefore there was no occasion for any highway being laid out over them. And the master in chancery found, in reference to this highway, that, too, was an attempt to secure a right of way across this national forest by fraudulent means, and this is what the master in chancery said:

It will strike anyone as strange that a county road should be laid exactly following the power pipe line. Among other inconsistencies will be noted the fact that following that part of the pipe line noted on the map, Exhibit 31, as the pressure pipe line, the highway would go straight up a hill, an elevation of 700 feet, and in about half a mile.

Think of it! Laying out a highway across this pipe line with an elevation of 700 feet in a half a mile! But, as can be seen from that diagram before us, there is a highway now existing just a few hundred feet below.

Mr. Chairman, is it possible that any member of this committee, in the light of these facts, can favor this bill? I understand, Mr. Chairman, and I am in sympathy with the desire for general legislation that will do away with revocable permits and authorize the Secretary of Agriculture or the Secretary of the Interior to give a permit with a fixed tenure and under reasonable regulations. But, Mr. Chairman, that is not the case here, and if the gentleman from Nevada [Mr. ROBERTS] and the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] would devote themselves to secure such legislation, applying to all alike, seeking to use our national forests instead of seeking to bolster up these fraudulent claims in that part of the country, they would carry more weight in the views they undertake to express before this Congress.

Now, Mr. Charman, there was some controversy here last Wednesday as to whether or not a stipulation had been entered into between the Government and this Hydro-Electric Co., permitting them to use and operate this pipe line until a final conclusion should be had of the litigation pending in the Federal courts in the State of California; and I want to take just a few moments in referring to what occurred last Wednesday during the speech of the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER]. He was asked by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. PICKETT] concerning this stipulation—a stipulation which, by the way, the gentleman, in inserting his remarks—put in the RECORD, and it may be found at the conclusion of his speech. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. PICKETT] asked him if, in fact, a stipulation had not been entered into permitting this company to use this right of way until the final conclusion of the litigation. Mr. RAKER replied:

Just a moment. Let me finish. I can not tell it all in one breath. They then told me they had no power or jurisdiction over this case. I then went to the Attorney General's office, and what has been actually done since I am not able to state, as to the present condition.

And a little later on the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] asked Mr. RAKER these questions:

If this bill is enacted into law, it will set the injunction aside?
Mr. RAKER. Absolutely.
Mr. MADDEN. Does the gentleman think that is good legislation?
Mr. RAKER. Absolutely.
Mr. MADDEN. Is there not a prospect that the company could get a temporary permit pending the legislation?
Mr. RAKER. I do not know.

And then Mr. HAYES, the gentleman from California, interrupts and asks if Mr. RAKER will not yield to him, and he does. The gentleman from California [Mr. HAYES] said:

I will say that no such permit is possible unless this company give up all their rights. Permits have been refused.

And a little later he said:

As I understand that stipulation, they are obliged to give up their rights to that property and take it as though it was a part of the public domain.

Now, with all due respect to both of the gentlemen from California, they being the leading sponsors for this bill on the floor, I submit that they ought to have had better knowledge of the facts concerning this matter than they seemed to have had last Wednesday. For, after that debate was over, and the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] last Monday extended his remarks, you will find that later on in his speech he inserted an admission that there was a stipulation, that he knew of it last September, and he put that stipulation in the record, which shows that under that stipulation this Hydro-Electric Co. now has all that the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] was seeking to get before the Committee on the Public Lands when it had the hearing at the special session of Congress last summer. Having that, what can the gentleman say now in defense of his action? And this is the position in which the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] now is. The company can go on to the final conclusion of the litigation without being disturbed by the Government, but the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] asks this Congress to say by the passage of this bill that if the court should find that the Hydro-Electric Co. has perpetrated a fraud upon the United States, has secured fraudulent mining claims, has attempted to secure a right of way by means of a fraudulent highway, notwithstanding that, they want this Congress to give this company doing these things rights that we will not give to any other company in the land, no matter how innocent it may be.

And let me say that the recollection of the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] was not very clear when he issued his statement that he printed in the RECORD, and earlier in this session distributed to all of the Members, because in that statement he said:

The granting of the relief provided in this bill is necessary because, as I have before stated, the officers of the Forestry Bureau have considered it to be their duty under the law to compel the company to waive its legal claims and accept the same form of revocable permit as it would be required to accept if it were operating, not upon its own lands, but entirely upon forest-reserve lands belonging to the Government.

And this statement, made by the gentleman from California, is dated January 9, 1912. When the gentleman made this statement did he not know that there was no effort to make this company waive its legal claims and that in truth and in fact a stipulation had been entered into on the 20th day of October last year giving to this company, without waiving any rights, the full right to continue to operate its pipe line until a final decree had been entered in the litigation now pending?

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. LENROOT. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. Is it not a fact that the Secretary of Agriculture, in his letter to Senator BURTON, which appears in the RECORD, states that if the contention of the company is right, his contention is that it would in effect waive the rights of the company to the mining claims?

Mr. LENROOT. I did no quite get the purport of the gentleman's question.

Mr. RAKER. I say, is it not a fact that in the letter from the Secretary of Agriculture, Mr. Wilson, to Senator BURTON, which appears in this document, he states that if the company's position is correct, their admitting that the Government owns the land would thereby waive their right to the mining claim?

Mr. LENROOT. I understand the question now. I will say that I have not noticed that in the letter, but if the Secretary said that, I answer the Secretary of Agriculture is not a lawyer, and it was contended by all the attorneys for the Government, as the gentleman must know from the record, that there was no waiver and no waiver desired. And, further than that, let me say to the gentleman that the record itself shows that the claim that there was a waiver was not made in good faith by the Hydro-Electric Co., because the clause that they claim was a waiver was a recital that this pipe line "being upon lands of the United States" a permit shall be granted, and so forth, while the fact is, and the record shows, that that Hydro-Electric Co. did sign a stipulation with that very language in it originally and made no objection to the clause "lands of the United States."

They did object to paying the munificent sum of $75 a year rental, when they have spent that many thousands of dollars—or somebody has—in attempting to secure the passage of this bill. [Applause.] They did object to a provision in the permit with reference to the building of weirs and gauges, and it was stated, I think, by the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] that this would cost several thousand dollars. Am I correct?

Mr. RAKER. I did not get the question.

Mr. LENROOT. Anyway, it was stated by the representatives of the company in the hearings that that would cost several thousand dollars.

Mr. RAKER. That is, for the weirs?

Mr. LENROOT. The weirs.

Mr. RAKER. So I have understood.

Mr. LENROOT. While in the hearings the engineer for the Forest Department—any gentleman can read it—stated that the cost of construction of weirs required under this permit would not exceed $450. The gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] must be aware of this fact, Mr. Chairman: No one can read this record from beginning to end, and read the objections that have been made by the Hydro-Electric Co. to this permit, without being convinced that the Hydro-Electric Co. at no time wanted a permit upon this land at all; that they were seeking by force and fraud to get across that forest reserve. Failing in that, and now convinced that the Government officials, doing their duty to sustain the law passed by the Congress of the United States, insist that the Hydro-Electric Co., as well as other water-power companies, shall observe the law, they now come to Congress and ask as a reward for their fraudulent practices the granting of an irrevocable permit without conditions, something that Congress refuses to grant to anyone else

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr, LENROOT. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. The gentleman uses the words "fraudulent practices."

Mr. COOPER. That is what they are—nothing else.

Mr. RAKER. Is it not a fact that those who made these mining claims were miners and ranchers who had lived in that country and had been familiar with it for years, and they made their filings and sold to this company before the department ever asked them to obtain a permit?

Mr. LENROOT. It does not appear in this record whether the men who made these original locations were employees of the Hydro-Electric Co. or not, but from all the evidence in the case it is a fair inference that they were.

Mr. RAKER. I understood the gentleman to say that he had read the record.

Mr. LENROOT. I have read it.

Mr. RAKER. Does the gentleman know that these men testified that they were not employees of that company and that they made affidavits that they were not? And does the gentleman know that I have here a copy of the testimony and the record which shows that they filed on these claims because they believed they were valuable? They made affidavits before the court, and the department should have that testimony and should have given it to the gentleman before he made his statement upon the floor of the House.

Mr. LENROOT. If the gentleman states that to be true, I will accept it.

Mr. RAKER. I have the affidavits here.

Mr. LENROOT. I will accept the gentleman's statement if he makes it.

Mr. RAKER. Yes; I make it.

Mr. LENROOT. That they were not employees of the company; but, Mr. Chairman, I can not be unmindful of the fact that these claims could not have been considered very valuable by these gentlemen when they sold them to the Hydro-Electric Co. for $10 apiece, or a net price of $4 each, for it cost them $6 apiece to record them. [Applause.] Neither can I be unmindful of the fact that the record shows that up to the time——

Mr. RAKER. Just one moment.

Mr. LENROOT. Let me finish this statement, and then I will yield. Up to the time of the hearings on this bill last summer not one dollar's worth of development work had been done by the Hydro-Electric Co. upon these claims.

Mr. RAKER. I want to state to the gentleman that I am informed, and I think he will find, that they have performed their development work upon all these claims.

Mr. LENROOT. They may have done so since that time.

Mr. RAKER. Does the gentleman appreciate the fact that many of the valuable lands in the West have been bought for very small sums?

Mr. LENROOT. Oh, yes.

Mr. RAKER. Does the gentleman remember the fact that we purchased from the Indians for a few beads the land where the city of New York now is?

Mr. LENROOT. I can not yield for that.

Mr. RAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin also appreciates the fact that if the Hydro-Electric Co. attempted or desired to perpetrate a fraud——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I yield two minutes more to the gentleman.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, if the company desired to perpetrate a fraud upon the United States, and clearly they did in the case of the highway, I know of no other way they would go about it to do it than to buy these mining claims for $10 apiece and then make the claims they are making here to-day. [Applause.]

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. McLAUGHLIN].

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Mr. Chairman, the gentlemen who have preceded me, speaking in opposition to this bill, have shown conclusively, it seems to me, from the record that the measure ought not to pass. I shall not take time to speak from the record or to refer at length to the testimony as it there appears. I want to submit a few general observations. I am opposed to the measure, because I look upon it as an entering wedge, as an attempt upon the part of those who are seeking the enactment of this legislation to do away with the control of the national forests in the manner in which the Forest Service is now controlling them. The demand made by the Forest Service upon the company that is seeking this right is very moderate indeed, and it is clear that the company is seeking the passage of this bill not for the purpose of avoiding the payment of the money, but for the purpose of breaking down the policy of the Forest Service in its very efficient control of the forests for the good of the people of the entire country. A good deal has been said about unfair regulations imposed by the Forest Service upon settlers, upon individuals and companies who seek to use the land embraced within the forest limits and to make use of the timber growing there. I shall not undertake to defend those regulations, but simply to say that it is a relief, it is gratifying, to us to know that the forests are so carefully guarded, and that at last some plans have been devised for the protection of the public domain. Gentlemen who are opposing the Forest Service are heard every time an appropriation bill from the Committee on Agriculture is presented, and they talk of unfair regulations, of hardships imposed upon settlers; but it seems to me they are pleading for those who would despoil the forests, who would take, as they have taken so many times and to such great extent in the past, the public lands for their own benefit. It is true that within the national forests there are large sections of land not suitable for forestry and not covered with timber, but there are suitable regulations for withdrawing that land, and during the last five years more than 6,000,000 acres have been withdrawn and devoted to agriculture and to other purposes. There has been some delay in examining and investigating applications that have been made for the withdrawal of land under these circumstances, but it indicates clearly that careful investigation and inspection have been made and that the public domain included within the national forest limits is carefully safeguarded, and the rights of the people are now protected.

It is urged vehemently that the Forest Service has taken unfair advantage of the company seeking the right to cross Government land, and has imposed unjust burdens upon it; that the company has innocently and in good faith invested a large sum of money in the construction of property in ignorance of, and without due notice of, the demand now made by the Forest Service, and that the company has thereby gained the right to cross the land in question without restriction and without any burden whatever.

This contention on the part of the company is not supported by the facts in the case; and if the facts did not positively contradict the contention it would be idle from a legal or equitable standpoint for the company to make it. The land in question is, and always has been, Government land, and there is not now, nor was there ever, any right in the company or anyone else to use it for any purpose without first obtaining the consent of the proper officers of the Government; and it is clear the company has proceeded thus far in ignorance of its want of right in the premises, in disregard of notice or in open defiance of the assertion of right on the part of the Government.

The advocates of this bill assert the Forest Service is making demand upon the company contrary to law, and it appears that suit in equity has been begun and is now pending to determine the legality of the claim made by the Forest Service. The usual proceeding under such circumstances would be for the company to prosecute its suit and to have a determination by a competent court as to whether or not the demand made by the Forest Service is legal. The pressing of this measure seems to me evidence that the company and its attorneys have no faith in the suit, and that Congress is asked to pass this bill to override the Forest Service and to give the company rights and privileges that the law of the land and the rules and regulations of the service do not permit to be granted without compensation to the Government and without proper restriction for the purpose of enabling the Government to prevent monopoly and otherwise protect the rights and welfare of the people.

A frequent criticism of the Forest Service is that the national forests are expensive to the Government, whereas they ought to be, and the promise has been made that they would be, self-sustaining. When the promise was made by the advocates of a national forest policy, the extent of the forests was small compared with what it is now. When I began my service as a member of the Committee on Agriculture, four years ago, and took part in framing an appropriation bill which included provision for maintenance of the national forests, the total forest area in the control of the service was only 162,000,000 acres. Now more than 200,000,000 acres are included, an increase of 25 per cent in four years. Large appropriation of money is necessary to take care of extensive territory embraced within the limits of the national forests and to undertake and carry on supervision that is proper for the protection and development of the forest. The outside limits of a tract of land set aside as a forest must be surveyed, roads and trails must be laid out, telephone and telegraph lines must be put up, cabins for employees must be built, and before timber can be sold to produce money to meet expenses of the service it is necessary for officers and employees to inspect the timber and have personal knowledge of the amount and value of it. It is true, as charged by those who are opposed to or indulge in criticism of the Forest Service and the policy of forestry undertaken by the Government, that appropriations made to carry on the work are increasing, while receipts of the forests are not growing in the same proportion; but it is not true that the forest policy has been unprofitable. Every acre included within the forests is more valuable to-day than when the land was set aside, and the value is increasing year by year and so rapidly that the Government is reaping large profit by withdrawing the land from sale and devoting it to forest purposes. And there will ultimately, soon I hope, be a direct profit for the forests. When roads and trails have been laid out, when the timber has been estimated, when information has been gained as to the nature and extent of the timber within the reserves, the plan or policy providing for the large sale of timber will be entered upon and the result will be large profits to the Government.

In some of the countries of the Old World, where a scientific forestry policy is and for many years has been followed, the forests are protected and maintained at an expense as high in some cases as $6 per acre per year, and timber is sold in such quantity and for such price as to yield a net profit of $6 or $7 per year per acre. In our country only 2½ cents per acre per year are spent in protecting our national forests and in the conduct of our policy of forestry. When we realize the value, the absolute importance, of an extensive and scientific forestry policy; when we are willing to devote money in sufficient amount to provide for proper care and protection of our forests; when we have advanced far enough to enable us by proper administration to reap the benefit certain to follow from a proper forestry policy, there will be no complaint of the expense of the service. The people of the country will congratulate themselves that the forest reserves were established, and that Congress has had the wisdom and courage to provide for their proper maintenance.

The claim made by gentlemen from States within which are forest reservations to the effect that timber and the lands upon which it stands belong to the people of the States and ought to be given up to their use and control is not sound, and the claim that the forestry policy of the Government is retarding development of their States by withholding land from settlement is not made in entire good faith. The national forests belong to the people of the entire country, and not to the people of the States in which they are located. The welfare of the people of the country demands that the lands within national forests be retained by the Federal Government; that timber be cultivated and conserved for the present and future needs of the country, and that water and waterways be controlled by the National Government in a manner or to an extent at least necessary to protect the welfare of all the people, and to prevent monopoly of these natural resources.

The gentlemen from States where forest reserves are located point to the fact that timber lands in the States of the East and Middle West were sold by the Government and are now in private ownership. It is true that timber lands in the older States have all been sold, but the wisdom of their sale by the Government, by a policy which permitted the acquisition of them by private individuals and companies, is open to serious question. The standing timber is now in the hands of a very few individuals or companies who are able to control the lumber market, and this policy has resulted in devastating land not suitable for agriculture; and whereas the Government by pursuing a proper policy might have retained large tracts of timber which, by proper administration, would be yielding large revenue and assisting materially in support of the Government, the land is unproductive.

I say the claim of the gentlemen of the West is not well founded, because a very large part of the forest reservations is in a mountainous country and above the altitude where agriculture can be profitably carried on, and because the well-understood policy of the Forest Service permits withdrawal from the reserves of land found to be more suitable for agriculture than for forestry. The law and the rules of the Forest Service permit a settler near a forest reserve to take timber for his own use without cost, and during the year last past more than 120,000,000 feet of timber was so taken. Actual settlers within or near forest reserves are also permitted to graze small flocks or herds free of cost. And the general policy of the service has been to encourage and to give material assistance to actual settlers upon lands near or taken from forest reserves. Actual settlers do not claim and have no reason to complain of the Forest Service. The only complaint is made by men who are prevented from acquiring for their own use and profit immense tracts of timber, or who would use the public domain for their own benefit and without due regard for the rights of the people in their immediate vicinity or for the welfare of the people of the country. As the gentlemen from forest States ask the privilege of despoiling the public domain or permitting its acquisition by men who would monopolize it to their own advantage, we reply that the experience in other parts of the country teaches that the welfare of the entire country justified, even demanded, the establishment of forest reservations and demands the continuance of the forestry policy upon which we have entered.

[Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS].

Mr. SAUNDERS. Mr. Chairman, this seems to be a struggle between a great principle, and a great corporation. I say a "great corporation," for I take it that no corporation can fail to be great which is able to put up so tremendous a fight in behalf of so indefensible a proposition as the one now under consideration.

We are not concerned with what may be called the intrinsic value of this land, or whether, as suggested it can support in a favorable season, one or a dozen grasshoppers. But we are concerned to determine whether, if we enact the legislation asked by this company, such legislation will be an infringement upon the great principle of conservation that we are seeking to establish? The privilege prayed by this company, is either one of great, or of little value to them. If it is of great value why should they object so strenuously to the reasonable restrictions contained in the stipulations submitted to them by the Department of Agriculture as a condition precedent to the use of the Government land sought to be taken.

If it is a trifling thing which they are asking, why is it that they do not abandon this fight, use their open ditch, and cease to harass this body and the departments in their efforts to secure this legislation, or some form of favorable action at the hands of the Congress of the United States? This issue should not be clouded by the declamation of the friends of the pending measure. No one is seeking to hinder the development of the West. No one is seeking to throw any obstacles in the way of the development of this, or of any corporation that seeks to promote in anywise within legitimate lines the great cause of national prosperity. But this is the old cry of every corporation that is opposed to the policy of governmental control, that such control will be a hindrance to the proper development of our material resources.

I fought over this proposition for 20 years in my own State. At one time there were many chartered companies that had irrepealable charters, and when the suggestion was made that a provision for amendment at the legislative will should be inserted in all charters, we were confronted with the same form of opposition now urged upon this body and charged with seeking to stay the development of Virginia, and to hinder the natural evolution of prosperity.

The fight for the right to amend, or repeal the charters of industrial companies, proceeded, until at last we wrote this principle into our latest constitution. Our charters are no longer irrepealable, but are taken subject to the right of the State to amend or repeal them at will. So far from the assertion of this right on the part of the State, proving a hindrance to our material development, or a discouragement to the formation of chartered companies, it has produced quite the opposite effect. Public-service corporations are more numerous with us than ever.

I have sought, and sought in vain to secure from the gentlemen who are advocating this proposition, why it is that they object on behalf of this company to the reasonable restrictions that are sought to be imposed by the stipulations submitted by the Department of Agriculture. They say to us: "You are seeking to destroy a great enterprise." But are we seeking to destroy the enterprise when we ask the company to pay to the Government of the United States $75 a year? Is this company so weak, so puny, that the payment of $75 a year for the privilege that we are asked to give them, will destroy its possibilities of development? What then, is the real objection to these stipulations?

I note that the Government requires four things by its stipulations. First a payment of $75 a year. Second: That the company shall furnish power to the Government at the same rate as such power is furnished to other people. Does the company object to a provision or restriction of this character? If it does, then it comes with poor grace to us to ask favorable legislation at our hands.

Third: The stipulations provide that this company shall never become a part of any great controlling water-power trust.

Is there or should there be any objection to imposing an inhibition of this sort upon any hydro-electric company or other public service company? It is sought further to provide by these stipulations, and here comes, I think, the meat in the coconut, that the books of this company shall be subject to inspection by the proper representatives, or agents of the Federal Government.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield to a question right there?

Mr. SAUNDERS. Certainly.

Mr. RAKER. Do you contend, and are you satisfied, that the Government of the United States would have the power to examine all the books of the men in private business, or associations, or corporations, in the State of Virginia?

Mr. SAUNDERS. I have heard this argument before. It is the same argument that was urged against the principle of publicity for the books of the railroad companies. Every step of the way that we have proceeded in the effort to establish this principle of publicity with respect to the operations of giant corporations has been against arguments of this character, namely, that we were seeking to interfere with, or destroy private rights. All over this land is a rising spirit which says that the public will never adequately come into its own with respect to control of corporations and the restriction of their powers in the public interest, until the accredited representatives of the State and Federal governments shall have the right to inspect their books, and be informed as to their transactions. Why should this House hesitate to impose these reasonable restrictions upon this company, or if it declines to accept our terms, dismiss this bill?

Mr. RAKER. You have not answered my question yet.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Your question has been asked so often, and answered so often, that I did not think that it was hardly necessary to answer it in detail in this body. I do not undertake to say that the time will ever come in this country when with respect to every form of private enterprise the Government, whether State, or Federal, will assert the right to examine the books of merely private concerns.

But I do say this, and I will now answer your question, if you insist upon it, that with respect to all corporations whose transactions are on so large a scale that their operations have become a question of public concern, the principle of publicity will be insisted upon. This principle of publicity is coming in this country as sure as we stand here to-day. [Applause.] The books are certain to be opened.

Mr. RAKER. Does the gentleman realize that in the State of California they have the absolute control to-day that he says they should have?

Mr. SAUNDERS. Then why object to giving the same power to the Federal Government. We insist upon the same right. I am glad the gentleman has made this statement. It destroys the force of his argument. There has not been a moment since this company set out to secure the passage of this act and for some time theretofore, that it could not have secured the right to cross the land in question by agreeing to the reasonable terms imposed by the Government. The amount of money required of the corporation, for the privileges conferred, is a mere trifle. As to the argument advanced, that to require this corporation to submit to the reasonable terms imposed by the department will hinder the proper development of the company, and of the great West, I am almost tempted to say that it is absurd. Who believes that any great department of this Government will ever operate, or administer, those functions which are given to it in the interests of the whole people, in such a way as to retard the development of the country, and destroy legitimate commercial and industrial enterprises? On the part of this body I repudiate, and repel such a suggestion. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to my colleague from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER].

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I am a firm believer in the development of the West, and would not desire to hinder or impede in any way the great development that ought to come to that wonderful country and its enterprising people. And yet I do believe that there are certain restrictions that the National Government has a right to place around the national forests that have been located in different parts of that country. I have taken some little time to look through the correspondence relative to the Hydro-Electric Co. of California, which, I suppose, contains most of the communications between the Government and the attorneys and the parties who own this pipe line or this property reaching from the headwaters down to the power house and into Mono Lake, and I have been unable to discover in all this correspondence any reason why, any good reason why, this company should not have taken out their permit according to the laws and regulations as prescribed by Congress and the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield to the gentleman from California?

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. I will yield in just a moment. I find this: That when this case was investigated by the master in chancery, who took the evidence, it was claimed that the parties who located the mining claims had not acted in good faith, and it is stated that they were nothing but paper claims. I have also observed this: That about the time these paper claims were purchased by the Hydro-Electric Co., they thereby secured for a nominal sum all the rights and titles that these people owned in these mining claims. They were preparing themselves to get just as much as possible of this land, so there would be just as little a strip of forest reserve as possible, just as little public land as possible, in order that they might get down with their pipe line so as to make their connections for their water power and sell it to the people in that vicinity.

Now I will yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. HAYES. I wanted to ask the gentleman a question. He states that he is in favor of the development of this kind of work, and I want to ask him if he knows anybody who has ever invested any money in water-power or irrigation plants that are subject to revocable permits by the Forest Service.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. I do not know——

Mr. HAYES. And nobody else knows——

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. But I know this, that so far as Congress is concerned, and I speak only for myself, I do not propose to vote away any valuable rights that will give a monopoly to people in the State of California, in the State of Nevada, or in any other State in this Union, without some power of control in the interests of the people who must depend upon that power.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield to the gentleman from California?

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. I yield; yes, sir.

Mr. RAKER. Does not the department, according to the report and the sworn evidence before the committee, state that there is no monopoly involved in this company?

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Oh, my friend from California says there is no monopoly there. It may be possible that there is no monopoly there in this particular case at this particular time. But I want to remind the gentleman that many times monopolies spring up just in that way, and many times men and corporations gain control of matters of that kind and in that way, in the course of a little time, one getting control from another of some valuable right, a monopoly is gradually established. Other people will come to Congress and ask that something be given them also, because something was given to this Hydro-Electric Co., if we enact this bill, and gradually those things come along because the people's rights have been taken away from them and they are no longer able to control them.

I want to remind the gentleman from California and others, too, that monopoly in this country did not come with one fell swoop, but gradually by the progressive consolidation of the smaller and single concerns of this country; a little here and a little there, one concern imitating the action of another, following a precedent that had been set, and combining, until finally they formed the great trusts of the country, so that to-day competition in the American markets is throttled by those corporations.

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield to the gentleman from California?

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Certainly.

Mr. HAYES. I just wanted to say that if the gentleman from Illinois can satisfy me that there is anything in this proposition looking to monopoly I will be against it; but I know that this is only a local proposition.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. I want to suggest to the gentleman from California [Mr. HAYES] that it would be very difficult, in my opinion, to convince him in this case from what he now thinks. It is my belief that this is a grant of perpetual right of way across a forest reserve for absolutely nothing and without any restrictions.

Mr. HAYES. I will say to the gentleman that I am in favor of this because I think it is a matter of justice. If a private corporation owned this piece of land, there would be no trouble about getting the right of way by eminent domain.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield to the gentleman from Kentucky?

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. With pleasure.

Mr. JAMES. I want to say to the gentleman from Illinois that if there was no monopoly intended in this proposition, then this company would not be hurt by simply complying with the same regulations that govern everybody else. They ought to be willing to stand by the regulations that everybody else complies with.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Yes; they should comply with the rules and regulations laid down by the department. If they do that and comply with the law, there will be no difficulty in this case.

Mr. COX of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield to the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Yes. I yield to my genial friend from Ohio.

Mr. COX of Ohio. Referring to the suggestion of the gentleman from California, I would like to inquire if it is not true that where there is Federal or local regulation of these public-service corporations those corporations have found that their securities obtain a better sale all over the country?

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. I think that is true.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield again?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield to the gentleman from California?

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. I do, sir.

Mr. RAKER. In this particular matter, is it not conceded by the department and by the officials of the Government and all those interested that there never yet has been another matter of this precise kind presented to the department?

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. The gentleman means a particular case like this?

Mr. RAKER. Yes; a case in which the party that asks for the right of way owns all the water rights and all the water involved in the matter, and owns all the land?

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. I do not know whether that is true or not. I have not examined all those cases. I do not care, however, whether that is true or not. That is not the question involved in this particular case. The question involved here is whether we shall grant to this company a perpetual right of way across a national forest reserve, on public land, and then that we shall take into consideration a lot of mining claims that have been declared by the master in chancery who took evidence in this case to be fraudulent.

Mr. RAKER. No; he did not hold that they were fraudulent.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. They were paper claims. While the fellow did not steal, still he was a pilferer. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. RAKER. Did the gentleman ever know in his life a case where——

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. No work had been done on those claims. There is no evidence, so far as I have been informed, that those claims had been taken with the idea of making them mining claims.

Mr. RAKER. Why, on the contrary, the testimony shows that——

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. I want to say this, that these claims were bought by this company with the idea on the part of the company of getting across that forest reserve, and they wanted to get down there just as quickly as they possibly could. I expect if they could have taken up all these claims they would not be here to-day, because they would have enough paper claims to cover every strip of ground, and it would not be necessary to come here and ask Congress for relief.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. I would like to have five minutes more.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized for five minutes more.

Mr. COX of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. With pleasure.

Mr. COX of Ohio. It is beyond dispute, is it not, that these lands are now used for the purpose for which they were not originally procured?

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. That is a fact.

Mr. COX of Ohio. Is not that the gist of the whole thing?

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Yes; I think it is. These lands were first taken up for mining purposes, and then were sold to this company in order that the company might get its pipe line down.

Mr. RAKER. I know that the gentleman does not intend to be unfair, but here is the testimony before the court, and here are the affidavits of these men who testified that from their own knowledge of mines they took up this land because of the gold in it, and they sold it like other men sell their property.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. I read from the master's report. He says:

> I am entirely convinced that the great preponderance of evidence shows that they are nothing but paper locations, made with a view to obtaining a right of way for their pipe line across the forest reserve.

Why did not the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] make his statement to the master in chancery when he was considering this case? The representatives of this company were there before the master, as well as the representatives of the Government, and yet the master in chancery makes that kind of a statement.

Mr. RAKER. A man stated that in a letter, and the master simply had the affidavit of this man himself before the committee.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Just a moment, please. I will state that the Secretary of Agriculture quotes this very language:

> After a full hearing, at which the company was represented by counsel, and submitted testimony in its behalf, the master recommended that a preliminary injunction be granted.
> With reference to the mining locations, he said:
>
> "On the question of good faith of these mining locations I have given the evidence and arguments of counsel the most careful consideration. I am entirely convinced that the preponderance of evidence shows that they are nothing but paper claims, made with a view of obtaining the right of way for their pipe line across the forest reserve. In my opinion the seven claims mentioned are not valid mining claims at all."

Mr. RAKER. The gentleman is reading the same thing that is in the record here.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Certainly.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. If these were fraudulent claims, and that fact was known to the departmental authorities, why was this first permit granted to invest this money and make this improvement? I have not made up my mind on this bill one way or another, and I should like that information.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. I did not understand the question.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. If these claims on which this whole proposition is based were fraudulent in their character, it is to be presumed, I suppose, that the department had knowledge of that fact. Why, in the face of that, was the permit granted to this company to go ahead and invest its money and make these improvements?

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. I suppose they thought they had secured the title to these mining claims.

Mr. MANN. The permit was granted under the law authorizing such companies to have rights of way through the forest reserves.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. They secured that permit in the ordinary way.

Mr. MANN. They could get that permit if the Government owned the property.

Mr. RAKER. I did not hear what the gentleman said about that.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. There were two permits granted in this case. There is evidently a distinction between the first and second permits. I understand the investment was made while the first permit was in existence, and before the second was asked.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. I think the gentleman is mistaken about that.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Was there no investment made and no improvement during the existence of the first permit?

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. I think not.

Mr. MANN. They laid a pipe line before any permit at all was issued.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Does the gentleman mean the pipe line?

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. They commenced that before they received the permit. They did not ask for it. They thought they could defy the Government and win.

Mr. HAYES. They did not think they needed it.

Mr. MANN. They thought they would absolutely disregard the law.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Exactly; and they have now found themselves in trouble, so they come to Congress for relief.

Mr. HAYES. That statement is unfair.

Mr. RAKER. The gentleman is unfair in that statement. There is no fact in the record which justifies that statement.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] has expired.

Mr. MANN. I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HUMPHREYS].

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, in response to the suggestion of the gentleman from Colorado [Mr.

TAYLOR], that Representatives from the North, the East, and the South are trying to throttle the development of the West, I want to read a part of the report of the Inland Waterways Commission, from which I think it will be apparent that whatever attempt there has been made to throttle the development of the West has been made not by the Representatives of the North, the East, and the South, but by the people of the West themselves.

Referring to this matter of the monopolization of water power, the report says:

A splendid illustration of the extent to which such water-power development is being monopolized is given in California, where, of numerous rights of way granted for ditches, reservoirs, pole lines, and other power purposes in three of the land districts, 65 per cent are controlled by three companies. One of the largest companies in the State is selling power in comparatively large units at 1½ cents per kilowatt hour for 24-hour service, or at about $98 per horsepower per annum. Another consumer of over 1,500 horsepower pays 0.9 cent per kilowatt hour for 24-hour service, or at the rate of $58.83 per horsepower year. So far as known, this is their lowest rate made to a consumer.

On four of the rivers in northern California, where there is a possible development of over 800,000 horsepower, only 20,000 has been actually utilized, while speculative water rights are held on these streams from which over 566,000 horsepower could be developed, or, in other words, 75 per cent of the power possibilities on these streams have been alienated from public ownership and less than 2 per cent utilized for useful purposes.

In view of that statement, I say that if there is any attempt being made to throttle the development of the West that attempt is being made, and successfully made, by gentlemen who are engaged in these enterprises in the West, and particularly in California. [Applause.]

The extent to which the control of such plants is passing into the hands of a few of the larger companies is also well illustrated in California, where four of the largest companies have a combined capital of $55,000,000 and operate 30 hydroelectric plants and 18 steam plants. The largest one of these companies supplies power to 26 individual lighting companies and 12 electric railway companies, in addition to a number of cities and towns where it has its own substations.

North of Bakersfield, Cal., there are now in operation hydroelectric plants with a combined capacity of over 150,000 horsepower, while south of this point there are about 50,000 horsepower more, making a total of over 200,000 horsepower in the State.

And so when the Secretary of the Interior or the Secretary of Agriculture asks that these people, before they be permitted to cross this narrow strip of Government land, subject themselves to reasonable regulation in order that they may not discriminate against individuals, in order that the service and the rates may be reasonable, in order that the waste energy may be developed, in order, in other words, that there may be no throttling of development, this company comes, and it is not the only one that comes, and protests that its rights are being infringed. The gentleman asked a few minutes ago if there was a parallel case. There are many. In the hearings before the National Waterways Commission Secretary Fisher appeared, and this colloquy occurred:

The CHAIRMAN. Complaint was made yesterday of one case where a large water power was developed, but they were unable to take transmission lines over a section of land in the public domain and maintained that it was an unwarrantable hardship.

So that this is not the first time that the complaint has been made to the Secretary of the Interior. This is not the first time that complaint has been made to the officials of this Government that an unwarrantable hardship was being imposed because a company that desired to develop water power wished to cross a section of the public domain and were not permitted to do so unless it would submit to reasonable regulations.

I call attention now to Secretary Fisher's further testimony, which briefly covers this whole question, and, in my opinion, covers it much better, certainly, than I can cover it:

Secretary FISHER. I think those people were talking with me.

This is not this company. This was the Great Falls Power Co. of Montana, and that accounts for the pocketful of telegrams the gentleman had; it accounts for the telegrams the gentleman from South Carolina had and the pocketful of telegrams the gentleman from Wisconsin had, because this is not a unique case. The case here is the case in many instances, and it is the case of the interests that are behind this matter, and which hope by the passage of this bill that they will break down the law. That is the reason so much interest is being manifested here. We all know they do not care about the payment of $75 a year.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. A permit granting these people the right to use the water as provided for in the bill is not a perpetual right, as stated by the gentleman. It goes only so long as it is used for a beneficial purpose, and that only. Would the fact of giving them this right to use this property under the particular circumstances affect any other living human being on earth?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Yes; it will affect all the other living human beings, in my opinion, who come within the range of the operations of this and similar enterprises.

Mr. RAKER. The gentleman does not refer to these people in regard to this project?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. That is what I said, and when I read this case gentlemen will see it is absolutely on all fours with the one before us, and a thousand others. Secretary Fisher said:

The situation is this: Certain individuals at a time when public opinion was not sufficiently aroused and when we were giving away nearly everything we had without regard to immediate development, located certain land at an advantageous situation on a very considerable stream, and they acquired these rights and passed them on through successive grantees, each one adding some substantial profit to it as it went along, and finally the present holders had to buy this private property at a considerable price.

There is no parallel as to price, I think. The testimony here is that these gentlemen got it for $6 and sold it for $10, perhaps.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman is mistaken about that. The testimony shows that they have paid $280,000 already upon this project.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Then it is absolutely parallel to the case that I am reading—that is, "that they had to buy this private property at a considerable price." He continues:

We have no control over it at all; we have reserved no right of regulation; they have kept out of regulation by not occupying any street or highway. They have purchased a private right of way. Apparently, they propose to follow a policy which will free them from all effective regulation. They wanted to get from it what advantage they could, subject to commercial conditions, by their having got into this situation before proper principles regulating this matter had been adopted.

Now, I desire gentlemen to listen to what follows, and see what possible objection can be made to what the Secretary told these people, to what he said to the great Falls Power Co., in Montana, and to what he has said to the Hydro-Electric Co. here and to everybody else. He said:

That is all right; I can not interfere with that. You have certain vested rights, and you are entitled to them, and as long as you stay within them I can not correct the mistakes of the past; but you ask me if I will grant you a permit over the Federal domain, and I say yes, on one condition, that you come under the kind of regulation you should have come under from the beginning.

[Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN].

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, the people of the West have complained and are complaining on account of the conservation policy of this Government. The people who are interested in this particular project and who are seeking the remedial legislation provided in the pending measure have invested their money in good faith. They have the undisputed right to run an open ditch across a portion of this national forest reserve without let or hindrance. That has been repeatedly asserted upon this floor during this discussion. Some of the gentlemen, in opposing the pending bill, have stated that the matter of paying $75 a year is inconsequential, and that the company ought not to hesitate to pay it. I recall a time when a commission representing this Government abroad, proclaimed it to be the policy of our countrymen to refuse to pay a single cent for tribute while they were willing to spend millions for defense.

Mr. MANN. That still holds true.

Mr. KAHN. No doubt the owners of the Hydro-Electric Co. refuse to pay the $75 on the ground that it is equivalent to a demand for tribute. The people who are interested in this matter have been charged with being in the Water Power Trust. I know many of them personally. I know Mr. Metson, who, I believe, is the largest shareholder in the company. He is a self-made man. I shall place in the RECORD a letter which he wrote me in regard to this matter, in which he sets forth in full his connection with the company.

Mr. Chairman, I assert that the conservationists of this country are standing in with the Water Power Trust and the Coal Trust. They are intrenching monopoly in many sections of the country. They are putting obstacles in the way of the legitimate development of enterprises in the West.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. FOWLER). Does the gentleman from California yield to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. KAHN. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MADDEN. I just wanted to ask the gentleman if he is willing to admit that there is litigation pending between the Government of the United States and the Hydro-Electric Co.?

Mr. KAHN. I am not informed upon the subject, I will say to the gentleman.

Mr. MADDEN. Then, the gentleman does not know that there is litigation?

Mr. KAHN. I do not.

Mr. MADDEN. Does the gentleman know that there has been an injunction issued against this company?

Mr. KAHN. I have heard something of that sort, but I have not gone into that fully, and I am simply trying to speak now upon the general subject of conservation.

Mr. MADDEN. Does the gentleman know that the Government of the United States has expressed a willingness to let this company use the right to cross the Government domain pending the settlement of the litigation?

Mr. KAHN. I understand that they want $75 a year for the use of the land.

Mr. MADDEN. That the Government is willing to let them go on and use the right to cross that very piece of land, and will not interfere with their business pending the settlement of the litigation?

Mr. KAHN. I understand that is the case, provided the company pays $75 a year. The Government wants to give them a revocable permit.

Mr. MADDEN. If that is true, and the company is not willing to take its chances on whether what it claims to have is just or unjust by the settlement of the litigation, does the gentleman think that in the face of the offer of the Government of the United States to waive all rights pending the settlement of the litigation, the legislation that is sought to be enacted here ought to be passed?

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I am not fully informed in regard to the litigation. I say that frankly to my friend from Illinois. I want to call the attention of this committee to some facts in connection with the so-called policy of conservation. A power company, for instance, has been organized in the State of California. It has expended millions of dollars in perfecting its plant. Possibly 10 years will go by before a single dividend is paid. Millions of dollars are invested, but the company started and completed its enterprise before this conservation theory had obtained a foothold in the United States. After many difficulties and hardships it is able to deliver power to the cities near the seacoast after transmitting the power upward of 200 miles, the power being developed in the foothills of the Sierra Nevada Mountains. I believe I can say truthfully that California is the pioneer State in the matter of long-distance power transmission.

Mr. COX of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I can not yield at present, as I have not the time. This original company does not have to pay a 5-cent piece other than taxes to any State or county or to the Federal Government. It owns its own power site and its own right of way for transmitting the power to the consumers. It is not regulated by anybody. Say that 100 or 150 miles from this developed power site there is another power site equally capable of being developed. A national forest reserve has been placed around it—a forest reserve or a forest-ranger station—so that you can not deliver your power from that power site without crossing the forest reserve or the forest-ranger station. Under the conservation policy you can not get a perpetual right of way across the Government domain. You can only get a lease for a limited number of years. You must pay tribute to the Government in the shape of an annual rental. The amount of this rental is subject to a raise every time a new lease is entered into. There is no doubt in my mind but that the fixing of the amounts in the years to come will lead to friction and difficulties. What has been the consequence? Nobody has been willing to develop new power sites under such conditions, and the original company, through the misdirected efforts of the conservationists, has obtained an absolute monopoly.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. KAHN. I would like to yield to the gentleman, but I have not the time. There is nobody who will develop a new power site under such conditions. It is the same with your coal lands. Gentlemen who were rabid conservationists at the beginning seem to recognize this fact. Let me read this from Senator LA FOLLETTE'S weekly, recently published:

WISE USE, NOT FOOLISH DISUSE.

True conservation consists not in hoarding our resources, but in using them properly. Our water powers running night and day from year to year without turning a wheel are of no value to the public. To permit the mature trees of our forests to rot in waste is not conservation. To deny to this generation the advantage of the proper development of our coal fields and other mineral wealth is to deny to them participation in the benefits which rightly belong to them. The problem before us is not to hoard our resources, but to develop them in such a way that the benefits flowing from development will inure not to a few men, but to the rightful owners—all the people of the United States.

Mr. Chairman, it is true that there is no sense in hoarding our resources. It is true we ought to use them properly.

I do not subscribe to the doctrine of Government ownership of these utilities, however. I am opposed to that. I believe private capital ought to be allowed to develop them. I hope to see a law enacted by Congress which will allow private capital to develop these water-power sites and the coal fields, upon an express condition that if the company which is given the right shall combine with any other company, either by sale of stock or in any other way, for the purpose of limiting output, controlling prices, or dividing the territory in which the companies are to operate, the right granted by the United States for the development of those resources shall be revoked and all of the property of the company which has taken the grant under those conditions ought to be forfeited to the Government of the United States. I believe such a policy would permit development. I believe such a policy would break up the monopolies. But these power sites and coal fields should not be held up as they are held up to-day. They should be developed for the benefit of the people of the West and the people of the country generally. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I am somewhat amazed at the attitude of a number of my friends from the Middle West upon this policy of conservation. They seem to forget the conditions under which their own States were settled and developed. While the Government has constantly maintained its position of trustee for all the people over the great areas of fertile lands in the Middle Western and Western States, it has welcomed the homesteader and the settler who were willing to acquire 160 acres of Government land at the nominal cost of $1.25 per acre. In that way the great West was developed and populated. In more recent years, when the supply of desirable agricultural lands became limited, Indian lands were acquired by the Government, and they were likewise thrown open to homesteaders upon easy terms. We are all proud of the upbuilding of the magnificent Commonwealths of the Mississippi Valley. We glory in their prosperity. We wish them unmeasured success. They have had a glorious past; we believe they will have a still more glorious future. But suppose, after one-half, or even two-thirds, of the rich agricultural land that is found in each one of those States had been allotted to homesteaders some conservationist crank had held up his hand and in stentorian tones had exclaimed: "Hold on! We must not grant any more of these lands to prospective settlers or homesteaders. The Government must issue no more patents to the land that is still vacant. If any more farmers want to develop this unoccupied land we will lease it in 160-acre tracts, say, for 30 years, and at the end of that period we will enter into new leases with the lessees. The Government must get revenues for these lands for the benefit of all the people of the United States."

Mr. Chairman, does a single Member on this floor believe that the development of the West would have been as rapid or as marvelous as it has been? Does anyone believe that the farmers who would have leased the lands could compete with the farmers who held their land in fee simple? I do not think so.

And yet, in my opinion, the leasing of Government land to homesteaders is exactly analogous to the proposition of leasing power sites or coal fields to prospective developers.

Sir, the owners of the Hydro-Electric Co. ought not to be burdened with unnecessary expenses in the development of their enterprise. They are not identified with any power-site monopoly. They have invested their money in good faith, as I stated at the outset. They have an absolute right of way in an open ditch. Surely the interests of the Government will not be affected adversely if the open ditch give way to a covered pipe line. In conclusion, I desire to offer the following letter from William H. Metson, Esq., who states the position of himself and his colleagues in regard to the pending legislation:

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., January 12, 1912.

Hon. JULIUS KAHN,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I note that the newspapers quote Mr. Gifford Pinchot as saying the Hydro-Electric Co. is dominated by a trust and that House bill No. 12572 is in the interests of the water-power grabbers. Therefore this letter.

I am mainly responsible for the Hydro-Electric Co. and have invested all the money I could raise in it.

In my childhood I spent some years in Esmeralda County, Nev., and Mono County, Cal.; then lived in Gold Hill, Nev., until I graduated from the high school there. In 1880 I went to Senator Patrick Reddy at Bodie, Mono County, Cal. There I became acquainted with a young man named J. S. Cain. Later I came to San Francisco with Senator Reddy, Cain remaining in Bodie.

In the late eighties Cain and I made investments in mining property in Bodie and continuously thereafter extended our investments in mines at Bodie and Aurora, Nev., and also in other properties near there.

Our mines were so low in values that using wood as fuel no profit could be made. Therefore, for more than 20 years these mining properties remained unworked. Interest was eating us up and we had to do something to extract and work the ores. Finally we purchased the Goleta property, near Mono Lake, about 30 miles from Bodie, paying about $40,000 for it.

This Goleta property had been operated in 1879 or 1880 and the years thereafter by water from Lundy Lake and Mill Creek, carried through a ditch, mainly over patented lands owned by the Goleta Co., but partly through the Government domain, through a ditch along a steep hillside. This ditch was constantly breaking and making big cuts and washes down the mountain side at each break.

We changed the plans slightly and shortened the line and inclosed the water in a pipe, which was buried beneath the surface of the soil. This pipe for about 3,800 feet crosses mining locations on public lands which were then and are now owned by the Hydro-Electric Co.

That is the crime (?) for which I understand I have been and am to be denounced by Mr. Pinchot and his friends.

Upon the completion of our plant last year it was, within a few days after commencing operations, completely destroyed by a snowslide, and eight men were killed in the calamity. We pocketed our losses, rebuilt it, and have carried the wires to Bodie, Aurora, Lucky Boy, and other mines in Nevada.

This whole plant has been built on and across a country barren of vegetation and desert in character. With electricity we are getting these mines producing and can and have created taxable property for ourselves, and the surplus power we are trying to sell to other miners who, like us, will be unable to operate except because of our plant, or some similar one.

Nothing was further from our thoughts than to violate any principles of "conservation." Nothing was further from the fact, and you know it, and that I am not or ever have been in any trust, subservient to any trust or anyone else. You have known me since I was a boy and know of the struggles and hardships that I have undergone. You, as well as anyone, know that I never have been afraid or ashamed to look any man in the eye; that I have my own pronounced opinions and that I never have evaded an issue; that I never have been charged with dishonesty, being subservient, or crooked.

I have never run for office, but have for years and am now in an office of honor and trust. I have been appointed by different governors, both Republican and Democratic; by mayors, Republican, Democratic, and union labor, and all without solicitation. Two of the governors, James H. Budd and James N. Gillette, were Members of Congress.

For the other end of this controversy, as I understand it, the law of Congress is that forest reserves may be laid down over timbered land or land covered with undergrowth, or to protect watersheds, and none other. The original forest reserve went to the eastern extremity of the timbered land and the headwaters of streams. Later, for a strip about 150 miles long, extended easterly over the easterly slope of the Sierra Nevada Mountains, over a country that is not timbered, over a country where no protection could be had under the law, but where a force of about 30 forest rangers are drawing their pay from the Government and ruining the sheep, cattle, and mining industries, charging sheep and cattle so much per head and charging miners for the stumps of pinyon trees that were cut in the sixties a dollar and a half per cord. These men are drawing their pay from the Government and imposing upon these industries for part of their pay, the balance coming out of the general fund. What credit is it to an officer of the Government who takes an oath to obey the law to thus violate the law? What credit is it, too, for these men who should be in the timber where there are fires (for the purpose of preventing and putting out fires), instead of building up a bureau to ride people who have been endeavoring to keep within the law, and have been putting their money and talents to create taxable property?

In many counties of this State so much land has been withdrawn under these forest reserves, is now tied up with the Federal Government. Under the new taxation laws in California, God knows how the poor farmer or rancher is going to live.

As for Mono County, isolated as it is from transportation, the farmer subsists, depends upon his sales to mines and those dependent upon the mines, and the mines are taxed harder than is any other property in the State; and yet the Federal Government, playing the dog in the manger, acts in direct violation of the law, and because they have put a forest reserve over that which is not a forest reserve, as a pretense and a sham, are pretending that their principles are being violated. Their principles! God save the mark!

But I have no right to impose thus upon you, and I want to say to you that I am not asking a favor from Mr. Pinchot or anyone with his opinions. I want that which is right, and if I am wrong will take my medicine. I would rather get licked fighting for what I consider is conscientious and proper than to win hiding behind false pretext and shams which are put forward masked as if they were really justice and the law.

Very respectfully, yours, W. C. METSON.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, how much time is there remaining on the two sides?

The CHAIRMAN. There are 27 minutes remaining on the side of the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN. How much on the other side?

The CHAIRMAN. Thirty-four minutes.

Mr. MANN. I hope the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] will use some of his time.

Mr. RAKER. I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL].

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I did not expect to discuss this bill. The time had all been allotted, and I only obtained the opportunity because a gentleman who was to have spoken has not appeared. I hesitate to discuss it for 10 minutes, because it is utterly impossible in that length of time to present the matter before the House as it should be.

The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. GUDGER] just a moment ago asked the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] why these people were asking a special act for a right of way if there is a general act which gave them the right? That question was very pertinent, and upon the answer to that question the entire matter before the House hangs. The fact is that there are four laws on the statute books of the United States under either of which these people may justly claim a right of way. The question has been asked repeatedly why they did not accept the revocable permit. The revocable permit only lays reasonable restraints and conditions upon them, it is said. Why not accept it? The restraints and conditions contained in the revocable permit may not be objectionable from anybody's standpoint if they are required by the proper authority.

Mr. LENROOT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. I am sorry, but I have only 10 minutes. No restraints are placed upon them that are not under the State's statutes. But it is a revocable permit. Any Secretary may at any moment of time—by reason of the fact that the pipe line runs 3,000 feet across an alleged national forest—take away all their rights, paralyze their industry, occupying, as it does, many miles of territory and with great lines reaching 50, 60, and 75 miles in various directions. That is why they do not want to accept a revocable permit.

The question before the House in this case is this: Does the Congress desire that the citizens of the United States shall have the rights which Congress itself has granted them, or does the Congress desire to put itself in the attitude that because a peculiar condition has arisen with regard to an effort to secure the rights which the law grants, whereby people have been denied those rights, the Congress shall place itself in the attitude of aiding and upholding those who have been instrumental in denying the right which the Congress itself has granted? That is the situation. Do you want these people to have the rights which Congress said they should have, and all others like them under similar conditions and circumstances, or do you unite with those who say that a condition having arisen and construction having been given to the statutes under which they may be denied those rights, we shall join in that denial?

The act of 1866 clearly gives these people their right of way, and the predecessors of the present company could at any time have asserted that right prior to the time when the forest reserve was flung across the narrow section of this ditch line. Then there came the act of 1891, which clearly gave these people or their predecessors a right of way beyond a question, but there was a peculiar construction of that law to the effect that if the party asking for the right of way was not a company wholly engaged in irrigation that the right of way might be denied.

The Supreme Court remedied that kind of a decision, and Congress, following the Supreme Court, passed another act intending to give the right to those who might not be wholly engaged in the business of irrigating land. The company may be guilty of laches for not having asserted its rights under these acts, but they felt that the right having been denied others, it was useless for them to attempt to secure it. Then came the law of 1905, the act transferring the forest reserves from the Interior Department to the Agricultural Department, providing for rights of way for those engaged in the mining and milling of ores, but rights under this act are denied because some of the power is to be used for the same purpose by others. And so, first on one pretext and then on another, the will of Congress, as clearly expressed, is from time to time so thwarted by departmental decisions that these people are denied the rights which the Congress intended they should have. And how, finally? By an act which in itself was illegal; for the inclusion within a forest reserve of lands untimbered, unfit for forest growth, not necessary or useful for the conservation of water supply, is an illegal act, and whoever includes such lands within a forest reserve is doing it in violation of law. And yet a limb of this forest reserve was thrown across this barren, untimbered land, just far enough, and not an inch further, to take in the only tract of land along the company's entire line with regard to which there could be any question as to the right of way.

I do not know whether these are bona fide mining claims or not. It is said that they had a road laid out which ran up a hill. That only illustrates the desperation, if it illustrates anything, of men endeavoring to carry out an industry and who find themselves interfered with, their industry halted, by a departmental denial of their rights. If the forest reserve had not been thrown across this section of their ditch line, this case never would have been here. It never ought to have been thrown across their land. It is not properly included in the forest reserve.

There is no question of monopoly involved, much as gentlemen may endeavor to make it appear that there is; no question of proper public control, but just the simple question, Do you propose to give these people the rights they are now entitled to under the law?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I suggest that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] use the rest of his time.

Mr. MANN. I expect there will be only one speech further on this side, and I do not care to have several on the other side follow. The gentleman may proceed.

Mr. FERRIS. Is there any further debate?

Mr. MANN. Yes; there is to be further debate. I have only 20 minutes left. I expect to conclude with one speech.

Mr. FERRIS. I hope the gentleman will make that speech.

Mr. MANN. I do not want two or three people to follow.

Mr. FERRIS. The gentleman has had twice as much time to-day as we have had.

Mr. MANN. We did not have nearly as much last Wednesday as you had.

Mr. FERRIS. That is true.

Mr. MANN. It is customary for the gentleman to proceed at this juncture, and if he has several speakers, to let them in. We are perfectly willing to let the gentleman close the debate.

Mr. FERRIS. I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER].

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, there have been some matters stated here with regard to the position of this company and with regard to the facts that are not borne out by the record. They have been widely stated and seriously stated, and I base that by the record that lies upon the table. Now, it is easy to make statements, but it is not always easy to prove them.

In reference to these men who made the mining claims, I want to call your attention to an affidavit. It is the only evidence with the testimony before the commissioner that would support the commissioner in chancery, and it is the evidence of these men themselves. He only took the evidence of the corporation in this case of the owners, and because, as I have stated, they filed on these mining claims, because they tried to build a public road, ipso facto, and for that reason alone this man who never tried a water case or a mining case, according to the record, in his life, because the Government was pressing the case, decided contrary to every rule of law, contrary to every decision that has ever been rendered, that these men for that reason had lost their rights. We have a right to criticize this ruling, and without any reflection to the honorable gentleman who was the commissioner. This I say in all good faith.

It has been stated here that these men were interlopers there. I hold a copy of the affidavit of Frederick B. Mattly, who has lived in that country for years, who states that he has been familiar with that particular tract of land since 1880; that he has been a practical miner and a farmer, living down on the eastern side of this region; that there are tunnels in this mining land to-day, made by older prospectors; that, by virtue of the conditions that happen in that country, they moved out and moved away. The best mines that exist in the world to-day are those that have been discovered and worked, upon which men have spent fortunes and then left those mines to others who have taken up the work in their places. These men go there and make these filings, and from the affidavit, a copy of which I hold in my hand, Mr. Mattly states that there is a sufficient amount of mineral in place and afloat to justify a reasonable and prudent man in spending his money upon these claims; that they might be developed and made valuable. I ask leave to submit this affidavit as part of my statement at this time—that is, to go into the RECORD and not to be read in my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] asks unanimous consent to insert an affidavit in the RECORD as a part of his remarks. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Following is the affidavit referred to:

IN THE CIRCUIT COURT OF THE UNITED STATES, NINTH CIRCUIT, NORTHERN DISTRICT OF CALIFORNIA.

AFFIDAVIT IN RESPONSE TO ORDER TO SHOW CAUSE.

United States of America, complainant, v. Hydro-Electric Co., a corporation, defendant.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
Northern District of California, County of Mono, ss:

Frederick D. Mattly, being first duly sworn, deposes and says:

Affiant is a resident of Jordan, Mono County, Cal., and not a party to nor interested in the above-entitled suit.

Affiant has been a practical miner in and around Mono County since 1888, and is, and for many years last past has been, thoroughly familiar with the mining industry and mineral deposits and the development thereof in and around Bodie, and Lake Lundy, and Mono Lake, and the territory between those places in Mono County, Cal., and particularly with all the lands described in the bill of complaint in the above-entitled suit; and affiant says that he is thoroughly familiar with said lands and the lands immediately them surrounding, by reason of having many times prospected and examined the same.

Affiant is familiar with the mining tunnels and underground workings upon the Golden Eagle, Apex, Paraclete, and Iron Mountain mining claims, which are now patented and which lie immediately northward of said lands in said bill of complaint described, and affiant says that such tunnels and underground workings have there been opened and operated extensively upon three different levels, and such workings there disclosed valuable deposits of gold, silver, and copper in rock in place.

Affiant says further that he has examined and is familiar with Exhibit A attached to and filed with the above-named defendant's response to the order to show cause in the above-entitled suit, and that on the 1st day of January, 1910, he (affiant) located claims as follows: "Mattly mining claims, Nos. 1 to 10, inclusive, as shown upon said Exhibit A, and upon said day plainly marked the boundaries of each of said claims upon the ground and posted thereon and upon each thereof notices of such location and the description thereof, and within five days thereafter filed for record and caused to be recorded with the county recorder of the county of Mono, State of California, full, true, and accurate copies of each and all said locations.

Affiant says that prior to the making of said locations he prospected and examined all said land, and that said locations were made because of the fact that affiant found and discovered upon such locations float and other evidences of mineral and of valuable deposits of gold in place sufficient to justify a reasonably prudent miner in the expenditure of his time and money thereon in the hope of developing thereon and upon each thereof a paying mine.

And affiant says further that from his training and experience as a practical miner, and from his examination and study and discoveries upon all said mining locations, and by reason of his knowledge and study of the said Golden Eagle, Apex, Paraclete, and Iron Mountain patented claims, and by reason of his prospecting, study, and examination of the Halley, Wolf, Eagle, Lone Pine (also designated and known as Pine Tree), High Grade, Johnnie Con, and Sunlit mining claims as designated upon said Exhibit A, and by reason of his knowledge, study, prospecting, and examination of the formation and mineral evidences and mining operations in and around said territory, affiant is of the opinon that one or more lodes or veins bearing valuable deposits of gold in place passes across, through, and under all said claims; and affiant is further of the opinion that all said claims contain valuable deposits of gold in ample quantities and quality to justify a reasonably prudent miner in the expenditure of his time and money upon each thereof in the hope of developing a paying mine thereon.

Affiant says further that in making each and every of the locations made by him as above set forth he acted upon his own initiative for the reasons above set forth, and not at the request or suggestion of any other person whomsoever.

Affiant says further that he has thoroughly examined the dotted ditch line indicated upon said Exhibit A, and marked and designated "Old Coleta power ditch"; and affiant says that he saw, knew of, and well remembers the construction and use of said ditch; that said ditch was constructed by the Coleta Consolidated Mining Co. about the year 1893 or 1894; that such of the lands crossed by said ditch as are described in the bill of complaint in the above-entitled suit were then, and were for many years thereafter, open, unappropriated, unreserved public lands of the United States; that said ditch was used and utilized for the transmission of water as a canal and ditch almost continuously from about the year 1894 until about the year 1902 or 1903; that during said time said ditch was used continuously and was continuously filled with water, which water was utilized and used for the purpose of irrigation, and for the purpose of generating power (not electrical power), and for mining, milling, and the reduction of ores.

FREDERICK D. MATTLY.

Subscribed and sworn to before me this 31st day of August, 1910.
[SEAL.] W. H. SMITH,
Deputy County Clerk in and for the County of Mono, State of California.

Mr. RAKER. I do not permit any man to stand stronger than I do on the question of conservation, the protection of our natural resources, the protection of the timber that is in the mountains, in order that the property may be used in the interest of the common mass of the people. There is no man who stands any stronger than I do and have done since I have been in public life and in private life as against the corporations controlling this country. It is all right to make a statement and bring facts before the country and make them applicable to cases, and then come upon the floor of this House and upon the public platform and characterize them as buncombe, to try and make the people believe that you are in favor of controlling monopolies, while yet you are in favor of giving them anything they ask. There is no man within the sound of my voice to-day that would vote for a law that would direct or authorize the Federal Government to go into every State and district ad libitum and examine the books and papers of the concerns in control and fix the prices upon utilities. There is no man in this Congress who believes in that.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from California yield to the gentleman from Kentucky?

Mr. RAKER. I do.

Mr. JAMES. In the bill that is now under consideration, which the gentleman introduced, you have no provision to the effect that this land should revert to the Government in case this water-power company should form any unlawful trust or combination.

Mr. RAKER. Yes; absolutely.

Mr. JAMES. Where is it?

Mr. RAKER. Let me have the bill. Here it is. I state this as an attorney who has given this subject his experience, and all that I have had is in mining matters and water rights for over 30 years. It is upon lines 5, 6, and 7, "for its pipe line during the period of its beneficial use only."

Mr. JAMES. What is that? The gentleman does not think that that——

Mr. RAKER. I have not got through. Now, added to that and as a part of this, the State of California passed a constitutional amendment and the legislature passed its bills, by which the State itself makes a physical examination of every corporation's property and regulates the price at which they sell their commodities and determines whether or not they shall issue stock, and that there shall be no monopoly involved in regard to any public-utility matters.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. Chairman, I would like to know if the gentleman seriously contends before this committee that the words that he has just read, "for its pipe line during the period of its beneficial use only," would be construed to prohibit or prevent monopoly or would make this land revert back to the Government when they should create a monopoly? And I confidently assert that there is nothing in the gentleman's bill, either the part that he read or otherwise in the bill, that would make this property revert back to the Government in case a monopoly was established or which prevents a monopoly or trust.

Mr. RAKER. Well, if it is not used for the beneficial use of the public it reverts. Next, the State of California has passed a law, as I stated, that covers the situation. There is no question of doubt on earth about it.

I want the gentleman's answer, before I get through, upon this question: These people own the water right, all of it. These people own all of the land except the 3,800 feet which they desire to cross. Is there any law at any time or under any circumstances that provides that the National Government desires to tax private individuals for using their own water rights and using their own land?

Yet in this case the water has been running to waste. This company desires to utilize it, conserve it, by putting it in a closed pipe and conserving it to the extent of 15 to 25 per cent, then putting it in a power-pressure pipe, in order that they may directly divert it to their mills and return it back for use in their mines. It is held that therefore they must pay a tax for the land that they own, for the water rights that they own, to use the property that they now own, because they desire to run across this land from an open ditch to a closed pipe line sunk into the ground and covered from 1 to 5 feet deep.

Now I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. JAMES. Is there such a water company in the State of California as the General Electric Power Co.?

Mr. RAKER. I do not know.

Mr. JAMES. Is there not a water company of California that is understood to have a monopoly of the water power of all of northern California?

Mr. RAKER. I do not know. This is an independent company. There is no possibility of a monopoly. The Government officials have so reported.

Mr. JAMES. I am asking the gentleman: Is there a company known as the General Electric Power Co.?

Mr. RAKER. I do not know.

Mr. JAMES. Does the gentleman know whether or not the Hydro-Electric Power Co. is owned in any part by this company?

Mr. RAKER. All I know of it is from a telegram and a statement from a party here. I was informed that they were interested and I made inquiry, and I have the answer here that it is absolutely not the fact.

Mr. JAMES. That is merely a telegram that the gentleman has received, but the gentleman can give the committee no statement upon authority such as that of the stockholders?

Mr. RAKER. Yes; I can.

Mr. JAMES. That this company is not part of a monopoly already in existence in California?

Mr. RAKER. Yes; I can answer that by stating the record of the attorneys of the company, that there is no monopoly in it, and that the character of these people is excellent.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, if there is no objection, I wish to yield five minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER].

Mr. FERRIS. I yield first three minutes more to the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] is recognized for three minutes more.

Mr. JAMES. Is it not true that the gentlemen concerned in this bill are asking us to enact a particular law that will give them exemption from the law of the United States that applies to every other power company in this land and are asking us to give to this company a privilege that is denied to every other corporation in the United States?

Mr. RAKER. No. If that were the fact, I would be opposed to the bill. If it gave them any right different from what is given to any other company, I would not be here advocating the enactment of this bill, although I have introduced it.

Mr. JAMES. Is it not true that the chief objection of this company to a compliance with the law as it now stands and the chief reason for the passing of this bill is that section 12 of the permit issued by the Government provides that if they go into a trust or a monopoly or a combination, this pipe line shall cease to be their property and the right to use it shall be denied?

Mr. RAKER. Oh, no.

Mr. JAMES. And the further right under that permit is reserved to the Secretary of Agriculture to examine their books and see whether a monopoly has been attempted by them, or whether there is oppression used upon the public in the charge for water?

Mr. RAKER. Oh, no.

Mr. JAMES. Those things are in the permit which the gentleman's company wishes to avoid.

Mr. RAKER. The gentleman may have stated the substance of it, but not the language accurately.

Mr. JAMES. Of course, those stipulations are expressed in a better form, no doubt. I was stating them offhand.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, it is charged that there is monopoly involved in this company, when, as a matter of fact, this plant is 60 miles away from a railroad and it runs its own business. The Government has determined that there is no monopoly in it and——

Mr. JAMES. In order that there may be no dispute between the gentleman and myself as to these provisions in the permit which the Government requires, Nos. 12 and 13, I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, that they be inserted in the RECORD, following the remarks of the gentleman, so that it can be seen which of us is right.

Mr. RAKER. The gentleman did not give quite the purport of them, and I think the best way is to give them entirely.

Mr. JAMES. I simply tried to give the gist of them. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, that sections 12 and 13 of these water-power stipulations be inserted in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent to insert the provisions he has named in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Following is the stipulation referred to:

[United States Department of Agriculture; Forest Service.]

WATER-POWER STIPULATION.

The Hydro-Electric Co., hereinafter called the permittee, a corporation organized and existing under and by virtue of the laws of California, and having its office and principal place of business at San Francisco, having applied for a temporary permit to occupy and use certain lands of the United States within the Mono National Forest for the construction and use of a conduit or pipe line to conduct water for the generation of electric energy, under the provisions of the act of Congress approved February 15, 1901, does hereby, in consideration of the granting of the said permit, stipulate and agree as follows, to wit:

1. To pay in advance on the 1st day of January, 1911, and on the 1st day of January of each year thereafter, to the First National Bank of San Francisco (United States depositary), or such other Government depositary or officer as may hereafter be legally designated, to be placed to the credit of the United States, the sum of $75; and in case this temporary permit shall be superseded by a final permit, in such form as the Secretary of Agriculture may prescribe, such payments shall be credited to the permittee and be applied to the charges due or to become due under the said final permit.

2. To pay in advance, as required by the district forester, to the said national bank, or other United States depositary, to be placed to the credit of the United States, the full value of all merchantable, live, and dead timber to be cut, injured, or destroyed, in the construction of said works, title to which, at the time of said cutting, injury, or destruction, is in the United States, such full value to be deemed and taken to be the value fixed by the district forester, according to the scale, count, or estimate of the forest officer or other agent of the United States in charge of said scale, count, or estimate, and at the price which shall be the prevailing stumpage price for similar material on said national forest at the time of said cutting, injury, or destruction.

3. To pay, on demand of the district forester or other duly authorized officer or agent of the United States, to the said United States depositary, or other authorized officer as above set forth, full value as fixed by said district forester, or other duly authorized officer or agent, for all damage to the national forests resulting from the breaking of, or the overflowing, leaking, or seepage of water from the works constructed, maintained, and [or] operated under the permission applied for, and for all other damage to the national forests caused by the neglect of the permittee or of its employees, contractors, or employees of contractors.

4. To dispose of all brush and other refuse resulting from the necessary clearing of or cutting of timber on the lands occupied and [or] used under the permission applied for, as may be required by the forest officer in charge.

5. To protect all Forest Service and other telephone lines at crossings of and at all places of proximity to the transmission line in a standard manner and satisfactory to the forest officers and to maintain the line in such a manner as not to injure stock grazing on the forest.

6. To do all within its power and that of its employees, contractors, and employees of contractors, both independently and upon the request of the forest officers, to prevent and suppress forest fires.

7. To build and repair roads and trails as required by the forest officer, or other duly authorized officer or agent of the United States whenever any roads or trails are destroyed or injured by the construction work or flooding under the permission applied for, and to build and maintain suitable crossings as required by the forest officer, or other duly authorized officer or agent of the United States, for all roads and trails which intersect the conduit, if any, constructed, operated, and [or] maintained on the lands the occupancy and use of which have been applied for and to secure which this stipulation is filed with the district forester.

8. To install and maintain in good operating condition, free of all expense to the United States, accurate measuring weirs, gauges, and [or] other devices approved by the Secretary of Agriculture, adequate for the determination of the natural flow of the stream or streams from which water is diverted for the operation of said works, and of the amount of water used from the natural flow in the operation of said works, and of the amounts of water held in and drawn from storage, and to keep accurate and sufficient records, to the satisfaction of the Secretary of Agriculture of the above-named measurements.

9. To sell electric energy to the United States, when requested, at as low a rate as is given to any other purchaser for a like use at the same time: Provided, That the permittee can furnish the same to the United States without diminishing the measured quantity of energy sold before such request to any other consumer by a binding contract of sale: And provided further, That nothing in this clause shall be construed to require the permittee to increase its permanent works or to install additional generating machinery.

10. That the said permit shall be subject to all prior valid claims and permits which are not subject to the occupancy and use authorized by said permit.

11. That except when prevented by the act of God or by the public enemy or by unavoidable accidents or contingencies, the permittee will, after the beginning of operation, continuously operate for the generation of electric energy the works constructed and [or] maintained in whole or in part, under said permit, unless upon a full and satisfactory showing of the reasons therefor this requirement shall be temporarily waived by the written consent of the Secretary of Agriculture.

12. That the works to be constructed and [or] maintained under said permit will not be owned, leased, trusteed, possessed, or controlled by any device permanently, temporarily, directly, indirectly, tacitly, or in any manner whatsoever so that they form part of, or in any way effect, any combination or are in anywise controlled by any combination, in the form of an unlawful trust, or form the subject of any contract or conspiracy to limit the output of electric energy, or in restraint of trade with foreign nations or between two or more States or Territories or within any one State or Territory in the generation, sale, or distribution of electric energy.

13. That the books and records of the permittee, in so far as they show the amount of electric energy generated by the works constructed and [or] maintained, in whole or in part, under said permit, or the amounts of water held in or used from storage, or the stream flow or any other data of the watershed furnishing the water used in the generation of said energy, shall be open at all times to the inspection and examination of the Secretary of Agriculture, or his duly appointed representative; and the permittee will during January of each year, unless the time therefor is extended by the written consent of the Secretary of Agriculture, make a return to said Secretary, certified under oath, in such form as may be prescribed by the said Secretary, of such of the measurements of records made by or in the possession of the permittee, as may be required by the said Secretary, concerning the matters in this clause above named, and for the year ending on December 31 preceding.

Mr. MANN. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER].

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, this bill, after the enacting clause, is as follows:

That the said Hydro-Electric Co. is hereby granted a right of way over the said northeast quarter of section 14, township 2 north, range 25 east, Mount Diablo meridian, California, for its said pipe line during the period of its beneficial use only.

This is a short bill, but it is long enough. It grants an easement practically in perpetuity, for it is fair to presume that that water is going to run forever and will be beneficial to somebody all the time that it is running.

Then we have this remarkable report—very remarkable in view of the question before us, for the situation developed here is very complex—protracted litigation, many incidents, important correspondence, conflicting testimony, and denunciation of lawyers who, it is said, have violated stipulations. It is a very difficult, complicated affair, and yet they get rid of it in a report of 12 lines.

The committee had a hearing of only one day, and at the end of the hearing moved to stop further proceedings and to report the bill unanimously by those Members who were present, and it is presented here as a unanimous report. Yet it is not a unanimous report, for one of the very strongest speeches that has been made against the bill, one of the very strongest speeches possible to be made against it, was made this afternoon by the distinguished gentleman from Iowa [Mr. PICKETT], a member of the committee.

Now, the gentleman from California [Mr. HAYES] and the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] and the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. TAYLOR] asked if we, the people of the East, are going to keep on stopping the development of the industries of California. Whereupon the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HUMPHREYS] arose here and read from the report of the United States Inland Waterways Commission, showing that there is 800,000 hydroelectric horsepower in the State of California which has been picked up practically by four companies, and that these have developed only 2 or 3 per cent of it and are holding the rest for speculative purposes. In view of this startling fact, who is holding up the development of California? Is it the people of the East or is it some of the great corporations that propose to hold these 800,000 horsepower until they get ready to develop it and then to solidify it under one management?

The general industrial development by means of hydroelectric power is a subject which has been brought to the attention of the American people within comparatively very few years last past, not more than six or seven. It was first brought powerfully to their attention by a Republican President. During these years public sentiment has become crystallized and is practically unanimous upon the proposition that hereafter no corporation of this kind shall be granted a privilege in the national domain without the Government of the United States in some form retaining control over it; not to be arbitrary and oppressive, but so that it can not be used for the purposes of monopoly.

What is attempted by this bill is to give this corporation an absolute grant of an easement forever, beyond the possibility of public control. It is a grant of an easement forever without conditions. Are we, the trustees for the American people who own that property, justified in giving away that easement, so that we can not control it hereafter? The gentleman said that this company does not belong to the General Electric Co. But that means nothing. Is there anything in this bill or in the charter of the company to prevent its being purchased by the General Electric Co. after we enact this bill into law? Certainly not; and nobody knows it better than the gentleman from California who has championed this bill. Of course it does not belong to the General Electric Co. now. But does the gentleman deny that if we pass this bill and make it a law the General Electric Co. could purchase all these rights within 10 minutes afterwards? And does the gentleman doubt that they will make the purchase?

Mr. RAKER. What rights does the gentleman refer to?

Mr. COOPER. I mean the property of the company named in this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. MANN. How much time have I remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has 22 minutes remaining.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, if I may have the attention of the committee, in 1909 the Hydro-Electric Co. had in contemplation the construction of the power plant which has been referred to in the debate, and it had communication with the Forest Service in reference to the laying of the pipe line which has been referred to. That company was informed by the Forest Service that under the law of 1901, passed by this Congress, the Forest Service would issue a permit upon application made by the company for the construction of this pipe line through this forest reserve. That was in 1909.

The company declined to make the application, and on March 5, 1910, one Francis Burke located some mining claims on the forest reserve where the pipe line was to run. On May 10, one J. A. Conway located some additional mining claims on this forest reserve; so that between the locations of the two gentlemen they located mining claims over the entire strip in the forest reserve where the pipe line was to run. We had passed a law in 1901 authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to grant permits for the construction of hydroelectric lines over the public domain. In 1905 we transferred that authority with the national forests from the Secretary of the Interior to the Secretary of Agriculture. There still remained on the public domain outside of the national forests the right of these companies to secure the title to land by locating upon the land and obtaining the title to property necessary for the development of electric power. It became so threatening that the President of the United States issued an order reserving from location great quantities of land that might be profitably used for the development of water power, but the authority to obtain title to the land was never given in the forest reserve, except through the medium of locating mining claims. Having found that they could not obtain permission to lay this pipe line through this forest reserve without making an application, they resorted to the expedient of locating the mining claims a few months later and then bought the mining claims from the locators at $10 apiece. It became the duty of the Agricultural Department to examine the mining claims to ascertain whether they were located in good faith.

If those mining claims are located in good faith, the gentlemen who locate them, or the Hydro-Electric Co., which now owns them, will in the course of a short period of time become the absolute owners of the property. They will obtain patents to the property, and they do not need to ask or receive any concession of rights from the General Government. But the Agriculture Department found that the mining claims were fraudulently located. I hold in my hand a letter from the Secretary of the Interior with reference to this bill, in which he says:

Inside of national forest scrip could not be used nor could any adverse claim upon the lands be initiated otherwise than under color of the mining laws. * * *

Experience has shown the necessity of vigilance to prevent the fraudulent use of the mining law obtaining private title to water-power sites in national forests. * * *

If the claims—

Referring to these mining claims—

so located should be patented before the construction of the conduit the possibility of control by the Federal Government would be destroyed. * * * The usual examination of the claims on the ground satisfied the Department of Agriculture that they were fraudulent. * * *

In accordance with the practice above described the company, when it applies to this department for patent to these claims, will be met by proceedings to determine the validity of the claims. If, upon such proceedings, it appears that the claims are valid, they will be patented and the company may proceed with its construction free of control by the Federal Government. If, on the other hand, the claims are found to be fraudulent they will be declared invalid, and Federal control of water-power development on the lands embraced therein will be perpetuated. One necessary effect of the pending bill would be to anticipate this adjudication in favor of the company and against the public.

Mr. RAKER. What does the gentleman read from?

Mr. MANN. I read from a letter from the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. RAKER. Written when?

Mr. MANN. March 9, 1912; a very recent communication.

Mr. RAKER. Well, why will not the gentleman insert it in the RECORD?

Mr. MANN. Perhaps I will; but I do not yield my time to the gentleman now. I have not much time. That being the situation, Mr. Chairman, the Forest Service was still willing, under the law of 1901, to grant the permit. It is still willing now to grant the permit. All the talk about this company not being able to go ahead with its construction is pure balderdash. The pipe is down in the ground; the company has gone ahead; it obtained the power and has constructed a pipe line. The only question is upon what terms it shall retain the pipe line. The Department of Agriculture issued a temporary permit, permitting the construction of this pipe line after the temporary injunction had been issued, or in connection with it, and at the same time it issued a permanent permit.

Under the law of 1901 the general permit which they issue, which they call a stipulation, to be signed by the permittee—in this case the Hydro-Electric Co.—is very broad. I will defy any gentleman in this House to draw a permit to any company in the land to authorize the use of the public domain and make it more liberal than was the permit issued by the Department of Agriculture. To what did the company take exception? First, it took exception to the statement in the permit that this land was the land of the United States. No one denies that. It was subject to the location of mining claims, which, if they prove valid, transfers the title to the Hydro-Electric Co., but the land was still the land of the United States. Next, they took exception to a provision in the permit that they should sell electric power to the United States as cheaply as they did to anyone else, not that they should give electric power to the United States, not that they should sell it any cheaper than they did to anyone else, but that they should sell electric energy to the United States when requested at as low a rate as was given to any other purchaser for a like use at the same time. The company objected to it. It said it wanted the power to sell electric energy to other people at a cheaper rate than it sold it to the United States. Next, it objected to the provision in reference to some gauges.

Mr. Chairman, I am going to call the attention of the committee now to a provision in the stipulation to which they did not object, but which is the reason they are here to-day asking for this permit from Congress. They gave trivial objections to the stipulations. No reasonable man will sustain them in the objections which they made. It would not have cost them a tithe—I doubt whether it would have cost them a hundredth part—if they had obeyed the conditions of what it has cost them trying to pass this bill. I have been annoyed myself with telegrams and letters, with high-priced lawyers, both from Washington and Chicago, urging the passage of this bill, because the Government proposed to exact the enormous sum of $75 a year so long as the title to this property remained in the Government, they claiming that they would soon own the title themselves. To what do they object? First, they objected because the law provided for a revocable permit. They objected to being classed with everybody else who obtained similar permits. Mr. Chairman, during my service in this House I think we have never passed a bill of any character giving special permits without the power to revoke them. We have passed bills for dams, for water-power purposes, under the general dam law, and the Secretary of War is authorized under that law to order a reconstruction of the dam at any time, and Congress reserves the power to wipe it out by repeal at any time. Every railroad company that builds a bridge across a navigable stream does it with the express provision in the statute that the Secretary of War may order it removed at any time, and Congress reserves the power to repeal the law at any time. Every time we grant permission to cross a military reservation we do the same thing.

Up to date this power has not been abused; but, Mr. Chairman, there was one stipulation to which this company, while not nominally doing it, really objected. Some time ago we ordered the Bureau of Corporations to make an investigation of the water-power resources of the United States and of the possible monopolization of those powers. I venture to state from my own knowledge of the subject that the State of California is now within the control, so far as hydroelectric power is concerned, of not to exceed four companies, and that northern California, where this project is proposed, is in the absolute domination of one company. [Applause.] When it was proposed in this stipulation to insert this item, which I will read, it was all off:

12. That the works to be constructed and [or] maintained under said permit will not be owned, leased, trusteed, possessed, or controlled by any device permanently, temporarily, directly, indirectly, tacitly, or in any manner whatsoever so that they form part of, or in any way effect, any combination or are in any wise controlled by any combination, in the form of an unlawful trust, or form the subject of any contract or conspiracy to limit the output of electric energy, or in restraint of trade with foreign nations or between two or more States or Territories or within any one State or Territory in the generation, sale, or distribution of electric energy.

Mr. Chairman, it took a very bright lawyer to write that, and he wrote it so that it meant something. If, under this stipulation, this company was granted this power, it could not transfer it to the company that now controls the hydroelectric power in that part of the State. It could not sell out to the combination that is seeking to control the development of water power all over the United States; and when the Department of Agriculture put that provision into the stipulation, as it does into all other stipulations relating to the development of this power in the national forests, this company found an excuse that they did not wish to construct a water gauge, something that would not cost them more than $100, and they have spent thousands of dollars trying to lobby and intimidate Members of Congress to break down the fundamental principles that we have established—that those permits which were granted by the Government shall remain under the control of the Federal Government. [Applause.]

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, this bill, in my judgment, has been given unnecessary importance by both sides of the House, by the members of the committee, and by entirely too many people. This bill was submitted to the Committee on the Public Lands and a unanimous report had thereon. It gives a right of way across one quarter section of rocky, worthless, hilly land. This company has enjoyed a right of way across this identical quarter section of rocky and worthless land for 30 years under law that no man questions or attacks. That law is still in full force and effect, and they still enjoy that full right, and could to-day and indefinitely enjoy the same right through an open ditch. What do they elect to do? They elect to improve their water system, owning all the water themselves. They elect to improve their ditch, owning all the land themselves excepting this quarter section. They elect to move their pipe line just a little west and bury it in the ground. What confronts them? Here comes the Federal Government and says that even though you own every bit of the water, even though you own every bit of the land, even though you own a right of way for an open ditch and have enjoyed that for 30 years, even though you own 3½ miles of pipe line, because we own 3,800 feet of worthless land which you desire to cross you must submit to have your books left open for inspection; you must submit to an annual charge; you must submit to every sort of regulation that Gifford Pinchot and his tribe can conjure up.

Mr. Chairman, I am not one of those who are here to assert that Gifford Pinchot or Gifford Pinchotism is always wrong. I think in the past—and it will probably be true in the future—that he has and will render good and faithful service to the people of this Republic, but I do say that in this instance it is simply a case of conservation run mad. The best friend that conservation has had better go up and take Gifford Pinchot and his people in hand on this proposition to the end that they do not render themselves absolutely ridiculous. Here we are spending days and days of debate, when, if this bill is defeated, not one penny's worth of property is saved. I assert that there is no such thing as conservation when there is nothing to conserve. If this bill is defeated, we have saved nothing. If this bill is passed, we have surrendered nothing. If this bill is passed, we simply let the Hydro-Electric people enjoy the right by a covered pipe line that they now enjoy and have enjoyed for 30 years by an open ditch under existing law. I ask with what consistency can this side of the Chamber, with what consistency can that side of the Chamber, and with what consistency can you oversensitive and supersensitive conservationists uphold Gifford Pinchot and his tribe in such a contention? Why do you come in here and grow to fever heat over nothing? Why do not you allow yourselves to be overwrought up when the public land is really involved? What is involved here? Worthless, worse than worthless, land and only the right of way across 160 acres. I have examined the photographs of that quarter section of land, and it is not worth 5 cents for 10 miles square. This company owns every bit of water, owns every bit of land on both sides, and they have owned it for 30 years, and now, because they want to move an open ditch up here and lay a pipe [pointing to the map], run a few feet away from the former open ditch across the identical land that they have the right of way across now by an open ditch, Congress is thrown into fever heat over nothing. My friends, only day before yesterday I had a long conversation with the Director of the Reclamation Service, and what did he say?

He told me that in the reclamation and irrigation of arid lands he had expended $60,000,000 out of the Federal Treasury in the last 10 years.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FERRIS. I have but a few moments of time.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. It is a very short question.

Mr. FERRIS. I will yield.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Why did you not put an antimonopoly provision in this bill?

Mr. FERRIS. Oh, there is no monopoly in a man's own individual property. I am glad the gentleman asked me that. They own every drop of the water; they own 3½ miles of pipe line; they own all the land. I want to ask you where there is a man so sensitive that he can think that a man could have a monopoly of his individually owned property?

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. They might sell it to a monopoly.

Mr. FERRIS. I will ask you with what propriety can the Federal Government say that because they own 3,000 feet of worthless land they have the right to come in here and adopt rules and regulations for a man who owns 3½ miles of pipe line and has owned it for 30 years?

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield for one question? Is the issue now pending in the courts broad enough, if decided in favor of this company, to absolve it from any responsibility to the United States Government?

Mr. FERRIS. I can not answer the gentleman entirely on that proposition, because I have not gone into that. This company owns some mineral claims covering this identical land, and whether they be valid or invalid, so far as I am concerned, I am not going to grow insane over the regulation of property that this Government does not own.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Do they object to signing this stipulation for the reason that in the event of the decision of the court being in their favor ultimately they will meanwhile have assigned away their rights? Is that one of the gentleman's contentions?

Mr. FERRIS. I have not advanced that.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Those seem to me to be the issues in this case, but they have not been asked about.

Mr. FERRIS. There are flying around this House cries of "monopoly." Men have been excited and wrought up on the theory that there is going to be some monopoly here. I assert that there can be no monopoly when a man is simply enjoying the fruits of his own property and his own labor. These men and their predecessors have owned this property for 30 years. They are out there trying to furnish those little towns and communities with light, water, and power, in order to develop the country without help from the reclamation fund of the Federal Government. Here comes the Federal Government, expending in the last 10 years $60,000,000 for irrigation and reclamation, and now they are unwilling to give to this company, which is willing to irrigate this land themselves, a right of way across one quarter section of worthless land. Gentlemen over on the other side have asserted that a great fundamental principle was involved here. I deny that. No principle is involved.

My good friend, I want to be one person that asserts that no matter whether it be the Hydro-Electric Co. or any individual or corporation, each are entitled to common, decent treatment, and anyone who grows excited over the granting of a right of way across one quarter section of land is striking a severe blow to conservation. It is simply branding contempt for a policy that is productive of much good.

I want to leave one question with you, and want to impress it on you with all the earnestness I have. Only last year we issued $20,000,000 for bonds to irrigate the West. Here is a company trying to irrigate land itself. What do they ask at the hands of this Government? Nothing except the right to move their pipe line from right here up to this line [indicating], a distance of less than 200 yards, and proposing to convert an open ditch into a covered pipe line. No one objects to their present holdings, founded and attached under existing law. I ask you if it is not all unnecessary, if it is not all unusual, if it is not all wholly outside the range of any form of conservation, if it is not folly, if it is not practicing gross obstinacy in the name of conservation? Conservation—ah! how many wrongs are committed in thy name. If the bill is defeated, nothing is saved or conserved; if it is passed, nothing but justice is done. This bill ought to pass by unanimous consent, and would if properly understood, without the stress of excitement and the cry of the demagogue who knows not what he says and cares not what havoc his undigested words inflict.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk proceeded with and concluded the reading of the bill, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 12572) for the relief of the Hydro-Electric Co. of California.

Whereas the Hydro-Electric Co., a corporation of California, has constructed and is now operating a water-power plant for the generation of electric energy in Mono County, Cal., such electric energy being for use in the operation of its own mining properties and for sale for mining, manufacturing, and domestic purposes in the vicinity, and the water being available for the irrigation of otherwise arid and barren desert land; and

Whereas a small portion, approximately 3,800 feet only, of the water-pipe line of the said project is located upon unpatented land in the northeast quarter of section 14, township 2 north, range 25 east, Mount Diablo meridian, within the Mono National Forest, in California, such unpatented land being treeless, arid, and barren, and not susceptible of forestation, and being claimed by said company under the mining laws of the United States: Therefore

Be it enacted, etc., That the said Hydro-Electric Co. is hereby granted a right of way over the said northeast quarter of section 14, township 2 north, range 25 east, Mount Diablo meridian, California, for its said pipe line during the period of its beneficial use.

With the following committee amendment:

In line 7, after the word "use" insert the word "only."

Mr. JAMES. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the enacting clause.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JAMES] moves to strike out the enacting clause.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, the question is debatable, I believe. I do not know what the views of the House on this proposition may be, but I hope this action will not be taken. I never was as positive in my life that a bill was so absolutely free from fault and absolutely the victim of overexcitement as this one. But if this proposition is voted down, and if amendments can be made, if thought necessary—and I do not think any amendment is necessary—if it is the wisdom of the House to amend it, let that be the course rather than any drastic motion to kill the bill. Of course, if the motion to strike out the enacting clause prevails, there will be no chance to do anything further.

Mr. MANN. If the motion should prevail the company would still have an opportunity to obtain a permit from the Agriculture Department on the same terms as any other company has on the public reserve.

Mr. FERRIS. I do not know whether they would have or not, in the face of that letter. They have had the property for 30 years. The land is worth nothing.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. Chairman, I made the motion simply because it was a quick way in which to kill the bill. They did have the opportunity that every other corporation has that crosses Government land to comply with Government regulations. They have refused to do it, and I believe it is because they want a monopoly; and the reason I oppose the bill is because I am opposed to monopolies; and I hope my motion will prevail, which means the defeat of the bill. I ask for a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JAMES] to strike out the enacting clause.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. FERRIS. Division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 98, noes 27.

So the motion to strike out the enacting clause was agreed to.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill to the House with the recommendation that the enacting clause be stricken out.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. RUSSELL, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 12572, and had directed him to report the same to the House with the recommendation that the enacting clause be stricken out.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the motion to strike out the enacting clause.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of no quorum.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count.

The Chair proceeded to count.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the point of no quorum.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California withdraws the point of no quorum. The ayes have it, and the motion to strike out the enacting clause is agreed to.

HOMESTEAD ENTRIES.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on the Public Lands I call up the bill S. 3367.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act (S. 3367) to amend section 2291 and section 2297 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, relating to homesteads.

Be it enacted, etc., That section 2291 and section 2297 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 2291. No certificate, however, shall be given or patent issued therefor until the expiration of three years from the date of such entry; and if at the expiration of such time, or at any time within two years thereafter, the person making such entry, or if he be dead his widow, or in case of her death his heirs or devisee, or in case of a widow making such entry her heirs or devisee, in case of her death, proves by two credible witnesses that he, she, or they have resided upon or cultivated the same for the term of three years immediately succeeding the time of filing the affidavit, and makes affidavit that no part of such land has been alienated, except as provided in section 2288, and that he, she, or they will bear true allegiance to the Government of the United States, then in such case he, she, or they, if at any time citizens of the United States, shall be entitled to a patent as in other cases provided by law: Provided, That the absence of said entryman or of his family from the land for a period not exceeding 6 months in any one calendar year shall not be held or construed as interrupting the continuity of the 3 years' residence required by this section, but in case of commutation the 14 months' actual residence as now required by law must be shown.

"SEC. 2297. If, at any time after the filing of the affidavit as required in section 2290 and before the expiration of the three years mentioned in section 2291, it is proved, after due notice to the settler, to the satisfaction of the register of the land office that the person having filed such affidavit has actually changed his residence after establishing the same, or abandoned the land for more than six months at any time, then and in that event the land so entered shall revert to the Government: Provided, That the three years' period of residence herein fixed shall date from the time of establishing actual permanent residence upon the land."

SEC. 2. That all existing pending entries perfected under and according to the terms of this act, except entries under section 6 of an act passed and approved February 19, 1909, and section 6 of an act passed and approved June 17, 1910, providing for an enlarged homestead, and that as to entries under said sections this act shall not in any wise apply, except that the provision allowing a six months' residence during any calendar year shall apply to all homesteads.

Also the following committee amendments:

Line 5, page 2, after the word "have," insert "a habitable house upon the land and have."

Lines 6 and 7, page 2, strike out the word "immediately."

Line 14, page 2, strike out the word "absence" and insert in lieu thereof the word "presence."

Line 15, page 2, strike out the word "from" and insert in lieu thereof the word "on"; and in the same line strike out the words "a period not exceeding."

Line 16, page 2, strike out the word "six" and insert in lieu thereof the word "seven"; and in the same line strike out the words "any one" and insert in lieu thereof the word "each"; and in the same line strike out the words "not" and "or."

Strike out all of line 17, page 2, and insert in lieu thereof the words "sufficient to constitute the."

Line 20, page 2, after the word "shown," add the following:

"Provided, That where the person making the entry dies before the offer of final proof those succeeding to the entry must show that the entryman had complied with the law in all respects to the date of his death and that they have since complied with the law in all respects, as would have been required of the entryman had he lived, excepting that they are relieved from any requirement of residence upon the land."

Page 3, lines 2 and 3, strike out the words "actually changed his residence after establishing the same" and insert in lieu thereof the words "failed to establish residence within six months after the date of entry."

Page 3, line 9, after the word "entries," insert the words "requiring residence upon the land under the homestead laws."

Page 3, line 10, change the comma after the word "Act" to a period and strike out all the remainder of section 2, beginning with the word "except" in line 10 and ending with the word "homesteads" in line 18.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, it is apparent that we can not dispose of this bill to-night. I therefore ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

Mr. MANN. This is not the first reading of the bill. Mr. Speaker, this bill ought to be on the Union Calendar. I have no objection to calling it up. I think it is a Union Calendar bill, providing as it does for the taking of homesteads and the disposition of the public domain. If it is a Union Calendar bill I was going to make a request for unanimous consent that it be transferred to the Union Calendar without affecting its being called up to-day.

Mr. FERRIS. I have no objection to that, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, this bill will be transferred to the Union Calendar, and it will be the unfinished business next Wednesday.

COST OF LIVING (H. DOC. NO. 617).

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying documents, was referred to the Committee on Ways and Means and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a letter from the Acting Secretary of State with accompanying data on cooperation and the cost of living in certain foreign countries.

The popular demand for information of this character apparently was based on the belief that some remedy or partial relief might be found for the growing burdens of the high cost of living. The immediate result of the inquiries instituted by the Department of State through the consular officers was to accentuate the fact that the increase in the prices of the common necessities of life is world-wide and that it is an absorbing question with the cooperative associations as well as with the mass of consumers as individuals. Multiplied evidences of the universal restlessness under this condition are given. Intelligence gathered and presented by the cooperative societies shows that even where there has been an advance in wages the percentage has not kept pace with the rise in the cost of food supplies. This disproportion in many cases is so marked as to be startling.

The information collected and collated by the Department of State is comprehensive and is a permanent contribution to the history of the efforts of producers and consumers, but more especially of consumers, to solve for themselves the economic problems of production, distribution, and consumption. If the cooperative associations which have been in existence for half a century and more have not been able to determine the fundamental causes of the increased cost of living or to retard the advance, the student of social progress at least may derive instruction from the account of the associations and their influence on the well-being of their members.

How far the system of cooperative organization which flourishes in various European countries may be adapted to our highly organized and individualistic social organization may perhaps only be determined by experiment, and in any case the experiment must be of a voluntary character. The practical information contained in the reports of the consular officers undoubtedly will be of much value to those who are seeking to work out this problem for themselves by means of similar associations.

In my message of February 2 I recommended an international commission to look into the cause for the high prices of the necessities of life and the possible remedies. Should such a commission be authorized by Congress, the relation of the cooperative societies to this subject would be of great interest and the reports of the consular officers would have additional utility.

WM. H. TAFT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, March 13, 1912.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, by unanimous consent, I would like to see if I can make an arrangement with the gentlemen on the other side of the House in reference to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 21213) revising the sugar schedule to-morrow. If I could make a satisfactory arrangement with the gentlemen on the other side of the House, I would like to have the House meet by unanimous consent at 11 o'clock to-morrow and let the debate run all day and into the night, if necessary, if they are willing that at the end of to-morrow's debate the previous question shall be considered as ordered and we can vote on the bill Friday morning.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman mean the previous question?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I mean that general debate shall be closed.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, of course this is the most important bill, so far as the revenues are concerned, that can be brought into the House under the present methods, involving $53,000,000 of revenue in an off year, and more, usually, as the years run. It also involves a great agricultural industry in the Southern and Northern and Western sections of the country. It involves all our insular possessions and their prosperity. It involves our treaty with Cuba and removes the prop by which we have been able to use our influence with that island, preventing an open outbreak there and thus preserving its Government.

There is a great desire to debate this bill on both sides of the House, and especially upon this side. I have simply taken the names of those who came to me, and the list which I have now calls for 12 hours' debate on one side. The gentlemen all seem anxious to debate the subject, and they are men to whom the House listens when they speak and men who speak intelligently upon any subject.

Now, we have hours of debate on trivial matters here in this House; days are given to unimportant matters. Why, I sat here and witnessed three hours wasted the other day by gentlemen making—I want to be parliamentary—buncombe speeches for the free distribution of seed. The time was utterly wasted, so far as the country is concerned, or so far as the good of the country is concerned. It is not now late in the session. There is time to talk about these important matters. Why not give time to the important matters?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. PAYNE. I am willing, Mr. Speaker, that debate, both general and five-minute debate, shall be closed in time on Saturday to take a vote on this bill and dispose of it Saturday afternoon.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman names a number of very important problems and reasons, from his standpoint, why this bill should be delayed, but he overlooks the proposition that there are 90,000,000 people being taxed $115,000,000, and we would like to get this bill to the Senate in time to have it enacted into law at this session of Congress.

Mr. PAYNE. Now, my friend knows that the bill will not be enacted into law. He knows that it is simply a political proposition when he talks about the 90,000,000 people being taxed. They have got to be taxed for something, and they might as well be taxed for sugar as for pepper and the other like things that the gentleman put upon his other bill. The gentleman will not gain anything toward the election of a President this year by passing this bill, and especially if he does it without deliberation and debate to a reasonable extent.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The gentleman last year advised me that we would not pass the wool bill through the Senate, but it went through the Senate nevertheless, and if somebody is going to prevent the passage of this bill and prevent its becoming a law we want ample time to find out who is going to stop it. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

But what I wanted to say to the gentleman is this: Ordinarily a day's debate is about four or five hours. I intended to propose that we should start at 11 o'clock and run until 10 o'clock to-morrow night, which would be more than two days' debate, and give the same length of time practically that the gentleman asks for.

And let it be understood that to-morrow is to be devoted entirely to the debate. Everybody will have the same opportunity to say what he wants to, and the work of the House will not be delayed by one day.

Mr. PAYNE. I meant to include in my proposition the meeting at 11 o'clock on all of these days, which would add three hours more. The gentleman knows that debate after 6 o'clock upon a measure like this, or any measure in the House, is no debate at all. People will not stay here for such a debate. They will go out to their dinner, and when they know there will be no vote, they will not come back.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. There are more men in this House right now than you will find at 3 or 4 o'clock in the afternoon, and there will be more men here at a night session than in the daytime.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman think Members of the House ought to be subjected to the strain of 11 hours' solid debate?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do not know that it is a strain. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] and myself have often tried 11 hours' strain, and it has not injured either of us.

Mr. MANN. Oh, well, when it comes to listening to a debate for 11 hours on a stretch, everyone knows that no human being can keep his mind acute during that length of time on a general debate, I do not care who he is. Meeting at 11 o'clock will interfere with the work of the committees of the House and will really put back the work of the House.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I desired to find out whether I could come to an agreement with gentlemen on that side.

Mr. MANN. Why can we not have an agreement, as the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] suggests, and vote Saturday afternoon?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I hope we can pass both tariff bills this week.

Mr. PAYNE. Does the gentleman mean this so-called income-tax bill? A tax on activities is, I believe, what he denominates it.

Mr. MANN. Has the bill been reported yet?

Mr. PAYNE. It has not been.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. It will be reported to-morrow.

Mr. MANN. I should think that on a bill that is going to pass this week, that affects the taxes on everybody in the country, possibly, we ought to have more than a day in which to study the report.

Mr. PAYNE. I think that after a reasonable debate on this last bill the gentleman himself will see the folly of it, and will look around for revenue somewhere else.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The gentleman need not worry about either of these bills, from his standpoint. The responsibility of their passage rests with this side of the House. If there is any merit in the bills, we shall claim the credit for them.

Mr. MANN. You will have it.

Mr. PAYNE. And the responsibility for showing the demerit of these bills rests upon this side of the House, and with reasonable time we can do it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. There may be some special interests that are opposed to these bills, but so far as the verdict of the American people is concerned upon them, I have no doubt as to that verdict. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. PAYNE. The gentleman is fooling himself on that proposition. He will get the general verdict, so that he will understand it, along in November next, and it will not be in favor of these bills.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I understand the gentleman does not desire to come to an agreement about the debate to-morrow.

Mr. MANN. Why, yes.

Mr. PAYNE. Not on the proposition the gentleman makes. I am willing to come to a reasonable agreement.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 17 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, March 14, 1912, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting by the direction of the President of the United States, in response to House resolution No. 415, copies of all records on file in the War Department bearing on the extracts quoted from communications of The Adjutant General of the Army in order of February 14, 1912, relieving him from duty (H. Doc. No. 619); to the Committee on Military Affairs and letter ordered to be printed.

2. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, submitting supplemental estimate of appropriation for the Public Health and Marine-Hospital Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913 (H. Doc. No. 618); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

SENATE.

THURSDAY, March 14, 1912.

The Senate met at 2 o'clock p. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. Ulysses G. B. Pierce, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, our heavenly Father, with whom do live the spirits of those who depart hence, we thank Thee that Thou hast brought us to this day of tender and reverent memory. Unto Thee, who art the bountiful source of all goodness, we render thanks for the long and honorable public ministry of him whom we this day commemorate. As in memory we again see his face and hear his voice, and as of yore we seem to behold him sharing the counsels of this body and laboring by our side, we pray Thee to consecrate to us the service of this day and to make us worthy of this fellowship. Because of such, life is the richer and nobler for us all. Death is robbed of its sting and the grave loses its victory as we contemplate the peace and the joy that await those who faithfully serve Thee.

We remember, now and here, those whose sorrow is most deep. Comfort them by Thy heavenly grace and uphold them by Thy spirit. Bid the light of Thy countenance to shine upon them in their darkness and let the assurance of Thine unfailing love be their hope and stay. Thou hast given and Thou hast taken away; blessed be Thy name, O Lord of life and of death.

In the name of Him who abolished death and brought life and immortality to light, receive our prayer. Amen.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by D. K. Hempstead, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House had passed the joint resolution (S. J. MEMORIAL ADDRESSES ON THE LATE SENATOR WILLIAM PIERCE FRYE.

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. Mr. President, I submit the resolutions which I send to the desk, and I ask that the same be read and adopted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Maine asks for the present consideration of resolutions, which will be read.

The resolutions (S. Res. 248) were read, considered by unanimous consent, and unanimously agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with profound sorrow of the death of the Hon. WILLIAM PIERCE FRYE, late a Senator from the State of Maine.

Resolved, That as a mark of respect to the memory of the deceased the business of the Senate be now suspended to enable his associates to pay proper tribute to his high character and distinguished public services.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate a copy of these resolutions to the family of the deceased.

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. Mr. President, I appreciate that a duty has fallen upon me which could be performed much better and more appropriately by one who could speak of Mr. FRYE from long and intimate association with him in this distinguished body. But, although I never knew him intimately nor enjoyed his friendship, and my service with him here began with the first session of this Congress, yet his life and his character, because of his long, most important, and honorable public service, have been a part of the household knowledge of the citizens of Maine for many years.

It may not be altogether inappropriate, therefore, that, speaking for that great citizenship which he so long and ably represented, and served most faithfully, reflecting honor upon them, I should attempt on this occasion to express their appreciation of him, not only as a faithful public servant of lofty patriotism shown in his devotion to the Nation and the State, but also of him as a citizen, neighbor, and friend. I do this most gladly, because none of the long list of illustrious men whom Maine has given to the Nation enjoyed more fully the confidence of all her citizens than Mr. FRYE, whose rugged honesty, simplicity of life, broad sympathies, and loyalty to conviction drew their affection to him most naturally.

I shall leave to those long associated with him here the broad field over which such intercourse took them by his side, where ample opportunity was afforded of observing his abilities and traits of character under the load of heavy responsibilities. In what I may say I am certain that I shall not be led into extravagant eulogy, but my only fear is that I may not be able to bring the full measure of tribute which the State expects and which I wish to bear.

Mr. FRYE well represented in his character, tastes, and sturdy Americanism those hardy Puritans who, leaving the mother colony, found their adventuresome spirit best satisfied in a contest with the austerer conditions to be met in the most northeastern section of the country, upon whose pine-clad hills and rocky coast nature if conquered would yield only after a stubborn resistance, but where, nevertheless, a large return awaited those who had the courage and endurance to grapple with and overcome her forces, employing keenness of brain and accuracy of foresight as well as physical strength. Because he descended from one of the most noted of these early pioneers, he possessed their mental and physical characteristics, a vigorous constitution, and a strong mind capable of deep conviction and tenacity, but his buoyant optimism saved him from the narrowness of the Puritan. His ancestry was of good old English stock, which emigrated from the county of Hants, England, in 1654 to the Massachusetts Colony, and some of whose descendants found a home in Maine. His great great-grandfather, Gen. Joseph M. Frye, was a colonel in the English Army, and fought in the French and Indian wars, and afterwards becoming a general in the American Army in the Revolutionary War, for his services was awarded a township of land near the New Hampshire boundary, which was named after him, Fryeburg, where there is now a pretty, prosperous village of that name. His father, Col. John M. Frye, was one of the early settlers of Lewiston, now a busy manufacturing city on the banks of the Androscoggin River, whose splendid water power has been the city's source of growth. Here Mr. FRYE was born September 2, 1830. He graduated from Bowdoin College in 1850, where he had as associates late Chief Justice Melville W. Fuller, Gen. O. O. Howard, and Gen. Joshua L. Chamberlain. In his college course there was nothing to mark him as a precocious youth or to forecast his eminent career, as he had not then bent himself to the serious purposes of life and was fond of sport; but he had then the power of making friends and keeping them.

After his graduation from college he became a law student in the office of William Pitt Fessenden, one of Maine's great Senators, eminent as a lawyer and a statesman, whose clear mind and eloquent tongue had already brought him fame which was afterwards to be largely increased during his service as United States Senator and as a member of the Cabinet. The relations of lawyer and student in those days permitted an intimate acquaintance. It was most fortunate that a young man of Mr. FRYE's talents had the opportunity thus afforded of placing before himself as an ideal the absolute integrity of such a man as William Pitt Fessenden, whose whole life, intellectual and moral, was raised to the highest level of human standards and whose attainments as a lawyer were of the same character. In 1853 he entered upon the practice of his profession in the city of Rockland, in his State, and two years later removed to his native city of Lewiston, where he made rapid progress. He had a clear, analytical mind; a fine physique; an attractive manner; a musical, well-modulated voice; imagination; earnestness; and always courage. This is the picture drawn of him by those who knew him then and which has been handed down to us.

He became a powerful jury advocate, capable of grasping the salient points of a case and presenting them with fervid eloquence. He wasted no time or effort upon the immaterial, but had the priceless gift of courage to discard it. He was a member of the State legislature in 1861, 1862, and 1867, exciting periods in the history of every State, whether North or South, and which called for men of strong convictions and force. In 1867 he was elected attorney general of his State and reelected in 1868 and in 1869, and in the meantime he had served his city as mayor two terms, in 1866 and 1867. Those who remember him in the conduct of his office of attorney general state that his reputation as a lawyer was largely increased, and he had become a master of cross-examination, that most dangerous weapon to the wielder himself in the hands of the unskilled. In 1871 he was elected to the Forty-second Congress and seldom appeared in the courts afterwards. The profession lost a great advocate at just the time when his powers were reaching their expansion, and the universal opinion of its members who then knew him is that, had he continued in it, he would have become one of the most eminent lawyers. When he entered Congress James G. Blaine was Speaker and ex-Senator Hale, for 30 years his associate in this body, was just entering upon his second term.

His ability was at once recognized and he was assigned to important committees, serving as chairman of the Library Committee and as a member of the Committee on Ways and Means and the Judiciary Committee and in three Congresses as chairman of the Committee on Rules. He was a ready debater, an uncompromising believer in the principles of his party, and willing and ready to defend them most forcibly. Many difficult questions were pressing for solution before the passion and prejudice excited by the Civil War had abated and party spirit was a most powerful influence. While in all the controversies that engaged his party in this period of its history, it never had a more consistent and abler advocate, it can be truthfully said that the country did not have a more honest or faithful legislator. The district which he represented had large shipping interests, and he made these interests the subject of careful study, which made him an expert in them. He was equally interested in all matters affecting the welfare of his State, particularly its manufacturing interests. The CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, during the period of his service in the House of Representatives, will show that he assisted in the passage of many important acts and took part in nearly all the great debates. He had the power of concise statement and clear analysis of a question, and with his magnificent voice and commanding presence he became a forcible and eloquent debater, and his services as a campaign orator were in great demand in every section of the country. It is said upon good authority that if his service in the House had not been terminated by his election to the Senate he would have been elected Speaker of the Forty-seventh Congress.

His service in the Senate began March 15, 1881, when he succeeded Hon. James G. Blaine, who had been called to the Cabinet of President Garfield. Of his service in this Chamber I shall not attempt to speak, but shall leave the task to those who were long associated with him, and from whom he will doubtless receive the tribute which his long and distinguished public service merits, and which close and intimate friendship with a kind and generous nature will gladly bestow, for I was forcibly impressed with the evidence of affectionate regard manifested by many Senators at his death. The citizens of his State knew that he became a great Senator, of large influence in shaping the affairs of the Nation; that he was the chairman of the Committee on Commerce, a member of the Committees on Foreign Relations and Appropriations; that for 15 years he was the President pro tempore of the Senate and for 7 years of this time Acting Vice President, and felt honored by the distinction which he had achieved.

His appointment as a member of the Paris Commission to arrange the terms of the treaty of peace with Spain testified to the confidence reposed in him, and was highly gratifying to him because unexpected and tendered to him by President McKinley on account of his stalwart Americanism, which had characterized his whole public life.

The last years of his life were marked by failing health, but he continued courageously at his post, performing easily all the duties of his important office, because of his familiarity with the work. A long and eventful public life was closed at his death August 8, 1911, surpassed in its length by but few and by none in the faithfulness of the service rendered and the importance of the benefits conferred. From his State came an Evans in its early history, and later a Hamlin, Fessenden, Blaine, Morrill, and Reed, all of whom rendered great services to the Nation, bringing honor to themselves and the State, but none rendered greater service than he to the Nation nor more faithfully served his State, and his name will always be recorded with theirs as Maine's great gifts to the Nation. This much, at least, can be truthfully said, bearing in mind what I know would be the wish of his honest mind.

> After my death I wish no other herald,
> No other speaker of my living actions,
> To keep mine honor from corruption
> Save an honest chronicler.

We can not now think of him as dead, so long did he exercise a potent influence over the minds of our citizens, with whom he was always simple and unaffected in his manner and from whom he never grew away by reason of the eminence which he attained, but when he returned to them he brought the same courteous, kindly, sincere greeting, and was again one of them. His simplicity of manner gave him a personal charm, because it was like the simplicity of marble, whose polished surface needs no adornment. His nature was of such purity that it needed only to show itself to command not only respect, but love. It seemed an easy thing for him to be influential, to sway men, whether as an orator in legislative halls or before a popular assembly or as a pleasing companion, because this power appeared to be what was expected of him. In political campaigns, in which he took an active part, not only in his own State, but in nearly every Northern and Western State, he was one of the most eloquent and forcible speakers. His magnificent voice and impressive manner, with his imagination, retentive memory, clear reasoning, keen sense of humor, and power of apt illustration drawn from familiar incidents made a splendid equipment for campaign oratory; and when in the possession of his full physical powers he was ever ready to use it in the exposition or defense of the principles of his party. He always kept before his mind that it was to be used not for the gratification of his personal pride, but to carry conviction to the minds of his hearers, and while his imagination suggested to his mind brilliant rhetorical passages and word imagery he never allowed it to lead him so far into the realm of fancy as to forget that facts were to be presented. These he could marshal in his clear, incisive manner, hurling them in battalions against the opposition, and turning aside now and then to brighten his more serious talk with flashes of humor and anecdote. But through every speech his hearers were convinced that he spoke with serious purpose and honest conviction. For many years he had a national reputation as one of the most brilliant and effective campaign orators in either party. His great influence, however, came not so much from his powers of oratory, great as they were, as from the settled belief in the minds of his hearers that he was sincere, that beneath his strong partisanship there were patriotism and deep conviction that the principles he advocated were best for the Nation. While he was an extreme party man—and would most willingly have made this admission—his innate honesty raised him above the partisan in the common acceptance of the word, and would not permit him to debase himself by the use of the means commonly employed for partisan advantage. Through a long public life, begun in his own State in 1861 and continued in the service of the Nation until his death last August, he carried himself so that no taint of corruption touched him and no suspicion that any reached him was ever entertained to cause the foul mouth of slander to hurl its venomous words at him. In the midst of the most exciting political controversies, an active and uncompromising participant, he employed no low or mean devices, his weapon was always a shining rapier and never a bludgeon. For 40 years going in and out, where avarice and greed are fed by the display of wealth and social distinction builds itself upon its sustaining power, he led his simple, quiet, faithful life, performing great duties with a high and patriotic purpose.

Beneath all the coverings which honors, social position, or other conditions can place above character, it is, after all, the most satisfactory thing in life, and one that makes it really worth the living, that men look for true manhood, and in forming their judgments tear away these coverings and search for the hidden treasure.

In Mr. FRYE's life there never were any coverings to be discarded before arriving at the true man, for beneath the honors he wore and his strong, aggressive party spirit his true, honest manhood showed clear to every observing gaze. It was because of this that he was loved and honored by all classes of citizens in his State, and why here affectionate regard overflowed the banks that would confine it to party associates and poured itself about him in one common tribute to the man.

He was not, however, one who endeavored to make friends. He selected friends from those who were congenial and for whom he had respect, and when once selected he never wavered in his loyalty to them. He ever bore in mind the advice of old Polonius:

> The friends thou hast and their adoption tried
> Grapple them to thy soul with hoops of steel;
> But do not dull thy palm with entertainment
> Of each new-hatched unfledged comrade.

Mr. FRYE made strong friendships at home and everywhere. His nature was an intense one, and if it showed itself in strong and forcible utterances, it also manifested itself in his strong attachment for his friends, and they reciprocated. As he despised the sham and artificial, it is easy to understand why he loved nature so well. Every summer, as soon as he could get away from his duties, found him at his cottage beside one of Maine's beautiful lakes where he loved to fish and reflect upon great public questions; or he found rest and recreation at his seaside home on the Maine coast among his neighbors and friends. According to some standards he might not be accounted a religious man, but he was most truly one, for nature made him so. As he looked from his cottage over the placid waters of the lake before him or strolled beneath the bending trees upon its wooded shores and caught the sound of waterfalls in the brooks that fed it, he could say:

> And this our life exempt from public haunt
> Finds tongues in trees, books in the running brooks,
> Sermons in stones, and good in everything.

One of the grand things in Mr. FRYE was his optimism, and this he manifested in every relation in life. He believed in a magnificent future for the Nation and the State. He believed in mankind and that it was marching forward, and, therefore, men believed in him and trusted him. He believed in his friends and, therefore, they believed in him. If at times he seemed austere and somewhat brusque, it was because his nature was impetuous and active and he wished to come at once to the subject. I venture to say, from my knowledge of him, that he never wasted the time of this body with the discussion of technicalities or immaterial things, but that when he addressed the Senate he had something to say, and to the point.

No sketch of Mr. FRYE, however brief, would record a just description without a reference to his home life, and here we pause at the threshold of this innermost sacred sanctuary, where the profane may not and should not enter, but can not fail to notice the purity, serenity, and sweetness of the home which was his and which he made radiant and happy by his presence, for he was never greater than here, and in all the relations of husband and father all the noble qualities of his generous affectionate nature were revealed, and from these relations he drew inspiration and courage.

Highly fortunate in his great natural powers, in the satisfaction of his ambition, in the acquisition of honors, in his host of true and loyal friends, he was still more fortunate in the choice of her who became his wife, a lady of rare character and intellectual attainments and of sweet and engaging personality, gracious in manner, and most sympathetic by nature. Her death, which preceded his by about 10 years, was a most severe blow to him; one support upon which he had leaned had been removed, and none know, whatever their station, how much they have been supported by the companionship and love of a noble, high-minded, sympathetic woman. Heroically he set himself to his work, cheered and consoled by the loving care and tender administrations of his affectionate daughters. But now was the beginning of the end. Nature must have her way, and so his step grew faltering and the tongue, which had formerly so readily sounded the brilliant thoughts that flew to it from his active brain, became more silent. Beneath the heavy load of years to which his sorrow added he manfully bore himself faithful and loyal to the last.

It was evident that the tide of his life, which in its fullness had expanded so that it touched and eddied around the pillars of a great nation and made its influence felt even on foreign shores, had now turned and was slowly but surely returning to its home in that great deep from which it had mysteriously flowed. And so last summer, from these scences where for 40 years he had been a prominent actor on the stage of a great nation's capital, he returned to home, to kindred and friends. The courage which had always been his characteristic never deserted him; never by look or word did he show impatience with those who ministered to his wants nor resentment at his fate; but with the same courage, kindliness, and consideration of others with which he had fought all the battles of life he endured all the pain and suffering incident to his weakened condition. His buoyant and courteous manner never deserted him, and when the end came we are glad to know that he passed peacefully away, hopeful to the last, loving life and desiring to live, but perfectly resigned.

> Like a shadow thrown softly and sweetly
> From a passing cloud, death fell upon him.

A great and useful life was ended, measured by correct standards. It is true that he had not spent it in amassing wealth, which in this commercial age too often measures the success of life, and to the hackneyed, and it seems to me most foolish, question often asked, "What did he leave?" the answer might be unsatisfactory to some. It is true that he did not leave wealth, but he left more. He left a grander and nobler heritage—a spotless name, a record of achievement, an influence for good, and ever-enduring evidences of his patriotic character and high ideals in the fabric of republican government, which is being woven not only for the citizens of this Republic, but also for the elevation of the whole human race. His active work has ended, but its influences will live forever, for we confidently believe that the same loyalty to truth, faithfulness to duty, dauntless courage and unselfish consideration of life's mission and purposes which he displayed throughout his long and memorable life still live and will bear their fruit elsewhere.

> The day has come, not gone;
> The sun has risen, not set;
> His life is now beyond
> The reach of death or change;
> Not ended, but begun.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, almost from the time when I began to take an interest in public affairs I was familiar with Senator FRYE's name as that of one of the leaders among the younger men of that day in New England politics. But he became a real and vivid personality to me for the first time at the national convention of 1880. The name of Mr. Blaine had not been placed before the convention in a very effective or successful manner, and the presentation was in strong contrast to the brilliant speech of Ingersoll on a like occasion four years before. The gentleman who moved Mr. Blaine's nomination began by an expression of regret that he had been selected for that duty and ended by making a mistake as to the initials of his candidate. The seconder of the nomination had talked about the land of the pineapple and the palm and of Mr. Blaine's popularity in the Territories, which gave rise to a telling retort from Mr. Conkling. The result of these efforts was distinctly depressing, and Mr. FRYE was brought in—it was said at the time on the spur of the moment—to save the situation. It was a rescue not easy to effect. I recall well the slight figure in evening dress which came rapidly upon the stage. In a few minutes the atmosphere changed. The vitality and energy of the speaker, as he described Mr. Blaine in the trying days of the contested election of Maine's governor, were communicated to the delegates. They roused from the depression which had fallen upon them, and as Mr. FRYE rose to his climax there was no longer any doubt that the situation had been saved and Mr. Blaine's name fittingly presented. It seemed to me at the time an unusual feat of oratory, carried to success under most trying circumstances.

Two years later I had a nearer view Mr. FRYE, both as man and orator. In the campaign of 1882 he came to Lynn and spoke there at a great meeting in behalf of the Republican candidate for Congress. I spoke just before him and was then very untried and unskilled in public speaking. Mr. FRYE'S subject was that one which is always with us—the tariff. I had endeavored to speak on the same subject in an interesting way and, as it seemed to me, had failed dismally. I listened to Senator FRYE with wonder as he proceeded and with despair in my heart at the contrast which he presented to my own efforts. He made the dry question of rates of duty glow with interest as he went on from one topic to another. I recall particularly, after he had closed an exciting discussion of the cotton schedule, the manner in which he paused and walked slowly across the stage, looking at his audience, and then began in a low and impressive voice by saying, "Now, there is pottery." His audience seemed transfixed by his manner, as if he had appealed to them in behalf of their lives, their property, and their sacred honor. They behaved as if the duties on pottery was the one interest of their existence, although in that particular city there was nothing resembling a pottery industry. There followed a brilliant and intelligent presentation of a dry and difficult subject, set forth in such a way that everybody understood it, and it was all fused together by the warmth and energy of the speaker's manner and by the enthusiam which he seemed able to impart to his hearers. I heard him many times afterwards, but never was I more impressed by his remarkable qualities as a public speaker than on that occasion.

He possessed in perfection the great art of making his hearers feel that he was expressing exactly what each one of them thought, but which they were unable to put into words. He was always master of the subject which he discussed. He stated his case with great precision and clearness, but above and beyond these qualities was a genuine eloquence to a degree and of a kind not often met with. He was profoundly sympathetic, and it was that attribute above all others which gave him such power with a popular audience. He was equally effective in the Senate, although of late years, owing to his long service in the chair and then to ill health, he spoke but seldom. But when I first entered the Senate he spoke frequently, and I have never seen anyone who, when aroused, could stir the Senate more than he. He was also as a Senator a very industrious and a most excellent legislator. The work of his great Committee on Commerce was always most admirably done and he was complete master of it in all its details. He was also one of the best presiding officers that I ever saw. The death of Vice President Hobart, followed so soon afterwards by the death of President McKinley, made Mr. FRYE the permanent presiding officer of the Senate for nearly six years, and I do not think that high position was ever better filled by any man. He was very kind and considerate and also very fair. The quality of sympathy, however, to which I have alluded in trying to describe his power with a great audience, seemed to me the dominant note in his character. I have never known a Senator in this body who commanded so entirely the affection of all the Members, without the slightest regard to party lines. I do not recall in all my service here any Senator whom the Senate was so ready to oblige as it was to oblige Senator FRYE. Anything that he wanted was pretty sure to be done.

He was, of course, a very distinguished public servant throughout his long career, one of the most distinguished Senators of recent times, and one of the ablest men ever sent to Washington by a State which has been generally conspicuous for the ability and character of its representatives. His public services are a part of the history of his time. The affectionate sympathy which made him so beloved in this body is better understood by us who lived with him from day to day than it can be by any others, and for that reason his associates here have mourned his death with a deep sense of personal loss and with grief for the departure of one whose presence was always a happiness to all who knew him.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, it has been well said by another, when commenting upon his friendships in the Senate, that some of the sweetest fruits found in the experiences of political life are those which hang over the party wall.

To those who witness our daily proceedings in this Chamber, with its sharp collisions in the ardor and heat of debate, and also to the great public who are only reached by the echoes of the strife within these walls, the realization is difficult that there are not only cordial relations, but frequently the closest ties of personal friendship between those who sit respectively on the different sides of the aisle that divides us. But the fact is well known to those more nearly familiar with conditions here. Aside from the general cordiality of these relations the noted instances of close personal friendship between Senators of opposing political parties have been in a measure historic. While, with possibly the exception of our honored colleague from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM], all the Senators of that day have passed from these scenes, it is a pleasing tradition which has come down to us of the devoted friendship and daily associations of Senator Thurman, of Ohio, and Senator Edmunds, of Vermont, the one a partisan Democrat and the other a no less partisan Republican, daily in the collision of debate with each other in this Chamber, but yet with a congeniality of tastes, intellectual, temperamental, and otherwise which drew them into the most genial and continuous personal association when they passed without its doors.

And coming down to a later date, about the time I entered the Senate, there was the intimacy so generally observed between Senator Butler, of South Carolina, and Senator Cameron, of Pennsylvania. And there are a number of Senators still with us who will recall the cordial friendship with its consequent association daily, and frequently nightly, between Senator Vest, of Missouri, and Senator Quay, of Pennsylvania. Many other instances of like character could be mentioned, some of them happily existing at present in the Senate.

This thought, Mr. President, has come into my mind as I offer a brief tribute to the memory of our late associate and friend.

For more than 16 years I was associated with him here, and it gives me unfeigned pleasure to bear testimony to the uniformly cordial esteem and friendship with which Senators on this side of the Chamber regarded him. He was a Republican of the straightest sect, prompt at all times to avow its principles and support and defend its measures in a degree, perhaps, in which no other Senator of his party was more pronounced; and yet there was withal a sincerity, a kindliness of heart, a courtesy of demeanor, and a generous consideration of others which drew to him in the bonds of friendship, not only those of his political party, but as well all of his associates of opposing political views and affiliation.

One fact brought him into closer personal relationship with all the Democrats of the Senate than, as a body, they enjoyed with any other single Republican Senator. That was the fact that he was for 15 consecutive years the President pro tempore of the Senate. This was a longer time than any other ever held the office either of President of the Senate or that of its President pro tempore. Not only so, but through the death of Vice President Hobart, and in the succeeding administration the promotion of Vice President Roosevelt to the Presidency, Senator FRYE, as President pro tempore, was the actual presiding officer of the Senate for more than five years. That threw him into direct close official relationship with the Democrats as well as with the Republicans of this body. During all of that time, although there were then often periods of partisan heat and strenuous political contentions in the Senate, by his uniform courtesy to all and his unvarying impartiality in the discharge of his duties as its presiding officer, he won and enjoyed in ever increasing measure the esteem and friendship of all Senators, Democrats as well as Republicans. A marked manifestation of this was given at the close of the Fifty-sixth Congress, when a Vice President had been elected whose term as the President of the Senate would begin with the succeeding Congress. As the final session of the Fifty-sixth Congress was drawing to a close the Democratic Senators, on their own initiative, began the movement to have the Senate present to Senator FRYE a testimonial in recognition of the fidelity, courtesy, fairness, and impartiality with which he had discharged the duties of its presiding officer. The Republican Senators, gratified as they were that the movement had originated with the Democratic Senators, joined with them, and, as a pleasing testimonial from all the Senate, a large, handsome silver loving cup was procured and presented to Senator FRYE. The gift was made in the marble room of the Senate, practically all of the Senators being there assembled, while a happy presentation address was made in their behalf by the venerable and honored Senator from Massachusetts, Mr. Hoar.

But this was not to be his final service as the actual presiding officer of the Senate. Upon the death of President McKinley and the consequent promotion of the Vice President to the Presidency, he again became the actual presiding officer of the Senate, and so remained during all of the sessions of the Fifty-seventh and Fifty-eighth Congresses.

Mention has already in these proceedings been made of this fact, and I only repeat it that I may have opportunity to say from this side of the Chamber that during this enlarged service as the presiding officer of the Senate it was true, as it had been in the former briefer service, that his discharge of his duties in that difficult and often trying service was characterized in the most signal and marked degree not only by efficiency, but also by the most unvarying courtesy, fairness, and impartiality. During my service here there have been, including himself, six presiding officers of the Senate, and without instituting comparisons where each has been so acceptable and excellent in this high office, it is but simple justice to him to say that he was fully the equal of either of the others in the qualities which make an able, efficient, and satisfactory presiding officer.

There is nothing hazarded in saying that as a presiding officer, as well as in his senatorial and personal relations, he enjoyed, as he richly merited, the unqualified confidence and esteem of all his associates here, regardless of differences in political views and party affiliations.

For years preceding his death he and I were by mutual agreement each the pair of the other during the temporary absence of either from the Chamber. But our relationship was still closer. To me personally it was then no small gratification to know, and it is now to me a valued recollection, that he numbered me among his chosen friends, although perhaps no two Senators differed more radically and more widely in many political views. By that friendship I was greatly honored, and it is with me among the garnered memories which one treasures and preserves.

He had a long and distinguished career in the Senate. That he enjoyed the unstinted confidence of his State was shown by the fact, stated to me by him, that he took no heed and had little recollection of when there would end his several recurring terms as a Senator, as his elections were without opposition and went as a matter of course, and that upon one occasion he had entirely, for a time, forgotten the fact as one term was about to end and another about to begin, until summoned by a telegram to the capital of his State to make his acknowledgments to the legislature for the renewed term as Senator, to which, while he overlooked the date, they had just already elected him.

Mr. President, such a career as his, so long, so full of accomplishment, it is impossible to even touch upon in detail in the limited time which either of us can to-day properly occupy, and I shall not attempt to do so. It is only practicable, as we severally offer our tribute of esteem and affection to our late friend and comrade, to each furnish, as it were, one leaf to the garland which we to-day lovingly lay upon his bier; and with this view I have sought to speak briefly of my personal affection for him, and to bear testimony for my political associates on this side of the Chamber to the fact that he had so borne himself as a presiding officer and as a Senator, that he had in his long service won the esteem, the confidence, and the affection not only of his party fellows but as well of the Senators of opposing political faith.

It is comparatively easy for one to be in personal accord with those actuated by the same motives and animated by the same views and purposes, but it is the golden heart, the generous mind, the knightly soul that inspires friendship and trust and confidence in the antagonist with whom he strives in fair and honorable combat.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, of the 88 Members of the Senate when I entered this body in the year 1891 the only remaining one is the distinguished and lovable senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM]. Of the entire number, 60 are dead. The Senate had in its membership at that time many men of great distinction, and special mention may properly be made of the following:

John T. Morgan and James L. Pugh, of Alabama; James K. Jones and James H. Berry, of Arkansas; Leland Stanford, of California; Henry M. Teller and E. O. Wolcott, of Colorado; Joseph R. Hawley and Orville H. Platt of Connecticut; George Gray, of Delaware; A. H. Colquitt and John B. Gordon, of Georgia; John M. Palmer, of Illinois; Daniel W. Voorhees and David Turpie, of Indiana; William B. Allison and James F. Wilson, of Iowa; Preston B. Plumb, of Kansas; John G. Carlisle and J. C. S. Blackburn, of Kentucky; R. L. Gibson and Edward D. White, of Louisiana; Eugene Hale and William P. Frye, of Maine; Arthur P. Gorman, of Maryland; Henry L. Dawes and George F. Hoar, of Massachusetts; James McMillan, of Michigan; Cushman K. Davis, of Minnesota; James Z. George and Edward C. Walthall, of Mississippi; Francis M. Cockrell and George G. Vest, of Missouri; Charles F. Manderson, of Nebraska; John P. Jones and William M. Stewart, of Nevada; William E. Chandler, of New Hampshire; John R. McPherson, of New Jersey; Frank Hiscock and David B. Hill, of New York; Matt W. Ransom and Zebulon B. Vance, of North Carolina; Henry C. Hansbrough, of North Dakota; John Sherman, of Ohio; Joseph N. Dolph, of Oregon; Matthew S. Quay and J. D. Cameron, of Pennsylvania; Nelson W. Aldrich, of Rhode Island; Matthew C. Butler, of South Carolina; Isham G. Harris and William B. Bate, of Tennessee; Richard Coke, of Texas; Justin S. Morrill and Redfield Proctor, of Vermont; John W. Daniel, of Virginia; Charles J. Faulkner, of West Virginia; and Philetus Sawyer and William F. Vilas, of Wisconsin.

Probably at no period in the history of the country has there been a larger proportion of able men in the Senate than at that time, and I recall with pride and satisfaction the fact that my service in the Senate was begun with such an array of distinguished Senators as my associates. Their presence was to me an inspiration and an incentive to do the best possible work that I was capable of in this great legislative forum.

Mr. President, WILLIAM PIERCE FRYE had a most wonderful career, which will be discussed at length by other Senators. It is sufficient for me to say that no man with whom I have been associated in public life commanded my admiration and esteem to a greater extent than did Mr. FRYE. He was literally idolized by the State of Maine, and for more than a quarter of a century was a favorite with the people of New Hampshire. Recognized as perhaps the most effective political orator of his time, he participated in the campaigns of our State for a great many years and won the regard and esteem of our citizens generally. An earnest and uncompromising believer in the principles of the Republican Party and an eloquent advocate of the doctrine of protection, his speeches were always free from personalities and denunciations of his political opponents. He argued the views he held in a calm, dispassionate, sincere manner, appealing to the judgment and the intelligence of his audience. He was also a firm believer in the upbuilding of the American merchant marine, an earnest advocate of the Navy, and especially devoted to the interests of the Revenue-Cutter and the Life-Saving Services.

As chairman of the great Committee on Commerce, Senator FRYE rendered the country a service that will never be forgotten, and I count among the special privileges of my public life that I was permitted for many years to serve under him as a member of that committee. He presided over the committee with an ease, a courtesy, and a kindliness that won him the affectionate esteem of the entire membership. He was especially proud of the fact that with rare exceptions the reports of the committee were unanimous.

As President pro tempore of the Senate, covering a period of 15 years, the same urbanity and impartiality characterized his conduct. He was an accomplished parliamentarian, and his decisions were seldom disputed and never reversed by the Senate.

All in all the country has had few such men. Correct in his habits, devoted to his family, true to his friends and loyal to his convictions, he was an upright, conscientious, high-minded public servant. In his death not only the State that honored him and the Senate which trusted and loved him, but the Nation as well, sustained a great loss. He served in the House of Representatives 12 years and in this body 30 years, covering a period, with but one exception, greater than that with which any man in our history is credited, and the record of his public service is absolutely free from blemish of any kind.

Senator FRYE was a Christian in the best sense of the word. Devoted to his church, he was neither bigoted nor narrow. Generous and charitable, his benefactions were unostentatious and liberal. Wherever he went the sunlight of good cheer and the wholesomeness of genuine friendship were there. The world was the better for his having lived in it, and the influence of his good deeds will never die. He has left us to join the majority, but we still claim him, for—

There is
One great society alone on earth—
The noble living and the noble dead.

Mr. President, I will not indulge in any preachment, yet can not refrain from quoting from an address of the late Senator Wolcott, of Colorado, so well remembered by some of us for his eloquence and genius. These were his words:

We can none of us know what awaits us in that hereafter, in that unknown to which we in our turn shall go, as a bird flies from the lighted room out into the darkness of the night. It may be that we shall realize the Buddhist hope, and spend the illimitable future in calm and passionless contemplation of the worlds below us, without longing and without desire. Perhaps there awaits us the heavens of Mohammed, with their barbaric splendors; or it yet may be, as so many of us hope and believe, that, redeemed and sanctified, we shall sit at the feet of the crucified Savior, the Christ, no longer bearing upon his body the marks of the spear that pierced Him or of the cruel nails or the crown of thorns, but rehabilitated in His majesty and resplendent in the ineffable glory of His divine presence. It is not given us to know of these things, but it is given us to realize and to remember until we go to join the silent majority, silent to all human ears, we dwell in the living present; that to our times and to this generation is confided, in the government of men, the one hope of the world; that to us is intrusted the manhood, the equal manhood, and the liberty, the equal liberty, of mankind. Our eyes are turned upward; our feet press forward. Armed with these resolves, we can never be dislodged, for our feet are planted upon the eternal rock.

Mr. President, those of us who knew Senator FRYE believe that in that great unknown land, freed from the cares, the perplexities, and the sorrows of this life, he still lives, steadily growing in all the attributes of knowledge, truth, and justice. His life furnishes a lesson to us all, which we may well learn. It is a great thing for a man to leave behind him such a record as did Senator FRYE. Remembering him as we do, we can truthfully say:

None knew him but to love,
None knew him but to praise.

What more, Mr. President, could be said of any man?

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, I am altogether unable to express in words a fitting tribute to the memory of Senator FRYE. I knew him well. For 20 years I was more closely associated with him in matters pertaining to public business than with any Member of the House or Senate outside of my own State. In all those years I cherished for him an increasing fondness and respect.

It is very difficult when the life record of a public servant is made up to determine exactly the features which will give him a place in history. In the case of Senator FRYE there were several distinctive characteristics of his career which will give him an honored place in the annals of this body. In the first place, his long service exceeded, I think, with one exception, the legislative career of any other Member of Congress. He was elected to the House of Representatives when about 40 years of age. Prior to that time he had enjoyed a varied experience as a member of the legislature of his State and as its attorney general, and a large experience as a lawyer. For 40 years, without interruption, he represented either a district of the State of Maine in the House of Representatives or that State in the Senate. Until almost the very close of his life he was possessed of a degree of health and energy which gave the greatest effectiveness to his efforts.

I remember calling upon him two years ago this winter, at a time when he was confined to his apartment, and he stated that then for the first time in his life he had found it necessary to have his meals brought to his room. He had not suffered until then from ill health, with its handicap or its caves of gloom. He was always alert and ready for the performance of any duty, and until very near the age of fourscore years retained an unusual degree of vigor.

It would be but natural to expect that in so long a career in Congress he would leave a lasting impress upon the legislation of the country. He was especially associated with its commercial interests and for a long time the chairman of the great Committee on Commerce. The ports, rivers, and channels of the country were always to him a matter of the most sedulous care. He stood for a policy of progressiveness, of liberality in appropriations, but of stern rejection of unworthy projects. There is hardly a harbor or a river in the country in which he did not take a very sincere interest and in the improvement of which he did not bear a leading part, and he was equally active in advocating the construction of the Panama Canal. He had a constant interest in the merchant marine of the country; not merely in the ships, not merely in our commerce at home and abroad, but the humblest sailor could always evoke his interest.

In the great questions pertaining to the tariff, to finance, in brief, all the great questions which have awakened the interest of the country, he bore always an influential part, and in all those 40 years no one could question his sincerity or patriotism in any view that he expressed.

If there is any one thing which caused him to have the confidence of those of all parties and all localities which has been ascribed to him to-day, and which belonged to him always, it was his sincerity and broad-mindedness. The Atlantic as well as the Pacific were within the purview of his thought. He stood for commerce at home and abroad, for national expansion, for patriotism; and these great ideas are written in every line of his speeches.

Mr. President, in the present day there is a disposition to look with some degree of disparagement upon the legislator. Publicists speak of legislative bodies as losing their influence. Means are being devised and widely advocated to diminish or even take away the power of Senates and Houses of Representatives. It seems to me that the life of Senator FRYE is one which stands as a monument for the greatness, the usefulness of legislative activity, and as a protest against so changing our opinions or our policies as to destroy the prerogatives which must belong to the national and to State legislatures. For, true it is, that wherever human aspiration has found a voice or human weakness has uplifted its hands for help, there some legislative body or some legislator has been found sometimes expressing himself in language that is sublime, sometimes building institutions and framing statutes which are pillars of hope and of strength all along the world's pathway. It is well for us, when we review this public life of 40 years, to point to the usefulness of those who have to do with the making of laws and the shaping of policies in order to encourage others who feel that this is not a proper career to adopt it with the hope that if in patriotism and with due regard for the interests of all they do their duty they shall find a field of usefulness unsurpassed anywhere.

I would gladly speak of the beauty of the life of Senator FRYE, for after all the supreme test of a man's greatness is the loveliness of his character. He was a model husband and a model father. Whatever be our creed, or whether we have any creed at all, it is pleasant for us to recall that his life was actuated by Christian principle, and in death he was encouraged and sustained by Christian hope.

The life of anyone who chooses a public career is perhaps more or less ephemeral in its influence. In the whirling currents of this time especially new subjects awaken attention, new ideas gain credence and support. But in the great framework of things which we now enjoy no small part of the creative forces must be ascribed to the work of men like Senator FRYE.

We may say now of him: Rest, noble spirit, in the cemetery at Lewiston, where he loved to dwell in the State which honored and loved him, and in the country which he served so faithfully and so well. Whenever days are dark, when patriotism seems to wane, and the tocsin of alarm is sounded, thousands will point to his life, and although he has gone from us, will find in his career an inspiration to patriotism and for all that is inspiring and helpful to the State, to the country, and to humanity.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, it is a mournful privilege to pay tribute at the bier of an associate.

The human heart responds when in sympathy we recall the departure from our midst of those with whom we have enjoyed friendly relations and agreeable intercourse.

When I first came to the Senate, Senator FRYE had already served 20 years in this body. To him a certain position was accorded, not only because of his length of service, but because of his personality, his ability, and faithful public service. He was a man of few but exact words; of strong convictions, thoughtful, and of business habits; mindful of the great affairs that claimed his attention as a Senator.

Some years elapsed before we were thrown together by committee assignments, but when we were I came to know him well. He had a warm heart and a generous nature. There was a magnanimity about him that quickly won my esteem, and as the years passed, and he admitted me more and more to his innermost self, the greater became my regard for and the warmer my attachment to him.

He had a manhood that was of the finest texture, a nobility of soul that adorns sterling character, and personal traits that evoked admiration.

It was a pleasure to be with him, and I enjoyed much gratification when it became my fortune to be more closely associated with him at each recurring session of the Senate. Our friendship ripened on my part into an affectionate regard, and on his part he gave me many evidences of his sympathetic friendship and regard for me, and I have missed his presence with real regret and mourn his departure with sincere sorrow.

Speaking from my knowledge of his simple taste and modest disposition, I am sure, if he whom we mourn could order these ceremonies, it would be more agreeable to him for me in a few words to give expression to my affectionate remembrance and my grief at his death, than were I to essay any studied eulogy or indulge in extended remarks of commendation and praise.

Mr. President, Senator FRYE was my friend, and I heard the tidings of his death not only with deep sorrow, but with a feeling of personal loss.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, Senator FRYE passed away on the 8th day of August last, in the eighty-first year of his age, at the city of Lewiston, Me., the place of his birth, after a most illustrious and notable career, such as has been allotted to but few men in the lifetime of our Nation.

He was highly equipped at the outset for the great work which he assumed and which became his lot. He was born of good Anglo-Saxon stock, he had a collegiate education, and he possessed natural gifts, moral and intellectual, of an unusually high order. At the age of 25 he entered upon the practice of the law, and soon became one of the most prominent lawyers of his State. But his knowledge of public affairs, his great energy and zeal, and his notable gift of oratory soon diverted him into the field of a legislator, which became his great life work, and which offered him the best sphere for his abilities, his gifts, and his attainments. And in this field his value, his enterprise, and his usefulness was most pronounced and second to none.

His preliminary training as a legislator he received in his State legislature, to which he was elected in 1861 and in which he occupied a prominent and leading place. After three years' service in that body, and after three years' service as attorney general of his State, he was elected, in 1870, a Member of the House of Representatives in the Forty-second Congress, and was thereafter reelected for five additional terms. In March, 1881, before his last term in the House of Representatives had expired, he was elected a Member of this body, and continued as such from that time till the day of his death. Forty-one years measures the time of his Federal legislative career—a period of greater evolutionary legislation than in all our prior legislative history since the foundation of the Government, a period in which many dormant powers of the Constitution have been enacted and developed into much-needed, efficient, and far-reaching regulative legislation, notable among which may be menttioned railway rate regulation, antitrust legislation, pure-food and meat-inspection legislation, and Federal employees' compensation legislation.

At an early date, even before he entered Congress, Senator FRYE became noted as a most eloquent, effective, and persuasive political campaign orator, second to none in the country, always in great demand, East and West, in every big political campaign of his party. And there was no abatement in such campaign work on his part till the last few years of his life. It was not only the eloquent and the rhetorical character of his speeches that made them so effective, but they derived their most convincing and persuasive force from the great sincerity and the intense earnestness with which he spoke. There may have been campaign orators as eloquent as he, but certainly none that were more convincing or that left a more permanent effect and impression. He not only convinced his hearers, but he engendered an enthusiasm in them that made them zealous missionaries in the cause.

In the House of Representatives he became at once prominent and one of the leaders of his party from the outset. On the floor and in committee he was equally ready and always in his place. He was as ready in preparing and formulating great measures as in debating and advocating them on the floor. He was a great debater, and in a running debate, in giving and taking blows, he was at his best. He could be merciless, incisive, and most exhaustive in exposing the defects or vices of a bad or questionable measure, and equally so in promoting the passage of a good and proper measure. He was ever watchful and on the alert, with his ear, eye, and mind on the entire legislative field. He was not one of those legislators who are content, and exhaust themselves in delivering one, or perhaps two, set speeches during a session and, as to everything else, seem entirely listless and oblivious, and who regard all else in the legislative field as mere drudgery beneath their notice and attention. In short, he was an attentive, ever-present, ever-active, and vigilant legislator.

He became, at an early stage in his legislative career, well versed in the intricacies of the tariff, and on the stump there was no more effective expounder than he of the nature and value of a protective tariff. The industries of his own New England, and for that matter of the entire country, had in him one of their most vigorous expounders and defenders. At an early day, too, he took a great interest in the welfare of our sailors in our merchant marine, in improving our waterways and harbors, and in securing aids to navigation; and in the end this became, to a large extent, his great life work as a constructive legislator and statesman.

In 1881 he became a Member of the Senate as the successor of James G. Blaine. He entered this body in the full vigor and maturity of his powers, better versed and better equipped for the great task of national legislation than most men who enter this Chamber. His training as a Member of the House, coupled with his great energy and native ability, made him a most valuable acquisition to this body. He became a leader from the start, not one of those self-seeking leaders, but rather one of those leaders whom we all with one accord unite in impressing into that service.

In 1896 he was elected President pro tempore of the Senate, and continued to serve as such until the time of his death. He was an excellent parliamentarian, well versed in parliamentary law and in the rules, precedents, and customs of the Senate, and this, supplemented by his keen sense of justice and fairness, made him unexcelled as a presiding officer, both in expediting the business of the Senate and in passing upon and applying the proper rules of procedure.

He was a most active member of that important commission that negotiated the final treaty of peace with Spain in 1898, under which we acquired the Philippine Islands, Porto Rico, and the island of Guam, and besides were given a sort of a supervisory control over the affairs of Cuba to the extent of enabling the people of that island to maintain a stable government.

While as a member of the Committee on Foreign Relations he took an active and effective interest in our foreign affairs, yet his interest in our merchant marine and shipping and all that pertained and related to these matters, as well as his interest in the improvement of our rivers and harbors, was so great and so near and dear to him that when he could have had the chairmanship of the Committee on Foreign Relations he preferred to relinquish that in favor of retaining the chairmanship of the Committee on Commerce. And to the varied and far-reaching work of this committee he gave much of his time and energy. The welfare of our merchant marine, of our sailors, of our Revenue-Cutter Service, and of our Life-Saving and Lighthouse Services was given much of his time and his zealous care and attention. And on all these subjects he was an expert, better qualified to pass upon the wants of the service than anyone else, and ever ready to secure progressive and remedial legislation for the benefit and improvement of the service.

He labored zealously and hard, in season and out of season, for developing and increasing our merchant marine engaged in foreign commerce. His efforts met to a large extent with success in this body, and though not always successful in the other legislative branch, yet he never abandoned his efforts on this account. He felt and he believed that the products of this country shipped abroad should be carried in American bottoms and under the American flag. To him any other course seemed intolerable and unpatriotic. He made special efforts to promote the efficiency and welfare of the Life-Saving Service by providing for a system of retiring disabled and superannuated employees, and met with success in his endeavors in this body. The welfare of our sailors was ever near and dear to him, and he was largely instrumental in abolishing the vicious system of allotting wages under which our sailors were so frequently "shanghaied" aboard our merchant ships. He was also, to a great extent, instrumental in securing legislation providing better quarters, better accommodations, and better food for the sailors on American ships. In short, our sailors, our life-saving men, and our lighthouse keepers had in him a constant, watchful, and most efficient friend.

He was a model committee chairman in considering and dispatching all measures that came before his committee. Everything was given due attention, and all parties entitled to be heard were given a hearing, and he had the happy faculty of so treating and so interesting the members of his committee that, as a rule, they were faithful in their attendance at committee meetings; and those who have had experience in such matters know how important this is. A slack or negligent chairman can oftentimes demoralize his committee and render it apathetic and inattentive; a working chairman makes a working committee; an indolent and listless chairman sets an example that is discouraging and demoralizing to the rank and file of his committee.

Senator FRYE was emphatically a man of work. To him his legislative duties, of whatsoever kind, were a most serious matter, to which he was devoted and to which he gave his undivided attention. He was not here for social pleasures or social functions; he had no time to spare for these. His life was a life of work in the public service and for the public good. His country's weal and welfare was ever uppermost in his heart and his affection. How useful such a man is in a legislative body, especially in such a one as this, legislating for more than 100,000,000 people.

Senator FRYE was more than a mere legislator in this body; he was a teacher for the new and inexperienced Senator, teaching by precept and example as few, if any other, could teach, and he was ever helpful and kind to his associates, ready to guide them and to extricate them from legislative difficulties and embarrassments. His aim in this, as in all else, was not to patronize, to court popularity, but rather to be useful, to be helpful and encouraging. Though a son of New England, and true to her welfare and interests, yet his heart, his instincts, his aspirations, and his work were national and cosmopolitan in the truest and best sense. Our great country has never had a more faithful or more useful public servant than Senator FRYE—faithful and useful to the uttermost in public and private life. We have lost him as a colaborer in this body, but we have not lost him as an example of all that is truest and best in a Senator, in a great public servant. As such an example he will continue to guide us and to inspire us to follow in the path which he blazed and followed throughout his career. If we can be guided by his spirit and follow his example we shall indeed be most fortunate—fortunate for ourselves and fortunate for our common country.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. President, in the death of WILLIAM P. FRYE our country lost a typical American. He was of that old stock which was distinguished for its sturdy and unselfish patriotism, which religiously believed in the principles of free government by the people and for the people, and which deemed self-seeking under the guise of public service to be a sort of treason to the State.

In his long career no word or deed of his gave rise to suspicion that he had ambition to be other than a true representative of the best thought of his time. His aims were high, his methods straightforward and manly, and his efforts constantly directed to securing the greatest good for the greatest number.

His earnestness and honesty made themselves felt when he first entered upon his career. These qualities were recognized very early. Through them he was forced into public life, and they remained his prominent characteristics until the end, gaining for him at the bar, as a public official, as a member of the Maine Legislature, and as a Representative of his State in Congress that high respect and confidence which are given so willingly to all honest, earnest, and courageous men.

The ability, force of character, and eloquence of the rising young Maine lawyer very soon brought him into the field of national politics where he at once became a power, and where his influence was directed to the promotion of public good through the doctrines of the party in whose principles he firmly believed. So he naturally came to the House of Representatives, and on the retirement of Blaine as Senator took his place in this body.

During his long service here his work was along the same lines which had marked his earlier efforts—the greatest good to the greatest number. His committee assignments placed it within his power to exert his great ability in the directions he found most to his taste, particularly that to the Committee on Commerce, where I was his colleague for 17 years, and where I learned to realize how broad was his mind, how untiring his work for the great objects he had in view, and how sincere was his desire to promote legislation that would be of lasting benefit to his country.

His long struggle in behalf of the American merchant marine is well known to everyone here. As member of the Committee on Commerce he was in a position to make himself thoroughly familiar with the subject, and coming from a State where once the maritime interests predominated, and which had built up cities which decayed with their death, he was able to realize and gauge what had been our country's loss when our great fleets were swept from the sea. Senator FRYE's fight for legislation which would encourage the growth of the American merchant marine was long and strenuous. From the time when the postal subsidy bill of 1891 was brought forward he was a consistent advocate of legislation that would encourage the construction of American ships for the foreign trade. This bill, in the passage of which his influence was great, was not sufficient to give that stimulus to shipbuilding that all friends of the deep-sea sailor desired, and he resumed the struggle with other bills which he believed to be calculated to induce the investment of capital in American ships for foreign traffic.

In 1900 a bill on which he had labored long and earnestly was introduced in the Senate by him. It was again revived in the following Congresses and was earnestly debated.

In 1902 the Hanna-Frye bill was passed by the Senate, but was not acted on by the House, and the failure is said to have occasioned the greatest disappointment of its author's long political career.

He had made a brave, stubborn, and brilliant struggle for the resurrection of one of the former glories of his country, and at a time when age was beginning to be felt the failure of his hopes brought discouragement. Since then there has been no vigorous movement to again place the American flag on the high seas and to make it a sign in foreign ports of the commercial enterprise and greatness of the American Republic.

As chairman of the Committee on Commerce, Senator FRYE has done more than any other man for the safety and well-being of the tens of thousands of men who gain their livelihood upon the sea. No measure affecting them failed to receive the most careful scrutiny, and wherever a real benefit would be conferred that bill had his most hearty support. The Revenue-Cutter Service, Lighthouse Service, and Life-Saving Service have grown in extent and efficiency under his fostering care, and the loss of life and property which they have prevented is incalculable.

It was in connection with great navigation problems of the country that Senator FRYE did the greater part of his congressional work, but he was intensely interested in all matters of broad scope and great importance. He was early placed on the Committee on Foreign Relations, where he performed notable work at various times, and where his rare ability as a diplomat was so readily recognized that he was chosen one of the commission to determine the terms of peace between this country and Spain. And it was this habit of fair and courteous dealing on all occasions which made him the most available man for the high post of President pro tempore of the Senate, and which gained for him the warm support of his political opponents and the sincere respect and absolute confidence of every Member of this body.

No man who has held that high office was ever missed more than Senator FRYE will be by those who were his colleagues. In all his public work Senator FRYE was absolutely unselfish. No thought of personal gain ever occurred to him in his long career. Although, as he said, he had opportunities for making money legitimately, he never availed himself of them, for the reason that he feared at some future time the obligations acceptance would put him under might conflict with what he believed to be his duty to the country.

He therefore died a comparatively poor man.

And in politics his only ambition was to serve faithfully the best interests of the people. Advancement to higher dignities he refused, and though he was a power in the Republican Party and used his strength and ability freely in all campaigns, his object was solely the party good and the success of the policies which it had adopted and in which he believed.

The only advancement which, I think, he was glad to have was his election, term after term, to the position of President pro tempore of the Senate, and this chiefly because it was evidence of the high personal esteem in which he was held by his colleagues on both sides of this Chamber. That he received this mark of confidence and respect all of us are more than glad, and we all know that it was fully appreciated.

Senator FRYE was a type of the class of men whom New England has sent to Congress for over a century. Strong, sturdy, independent, honest, and energetic, he exerted a powerful influence for good in all matters affecting the well-being of the American people. The broadness of his views caused him to consider the welfare of the entire country and not of a particular section.

The advancement of the whole country was his aim and was the motive for his long and strenuous struggle for a bill which would again launch upon the ocean an American merchant marine commensurate with the greatness of the United States. His life should be an inspiration to all who sit, or may hereafter sit, in this Chamber to do unselfishly and without fear the work which comes to their hands and to keep before themselves that great central idea which was the mainspring of his every action—the greatest good to the greatest number and the advancement of our country in prosperity and happiness.

With faith, hope, and confidence he had no fear in crossing the bar.

Sunset and evening star,
And one clear call for me;
And may there be no moaning of the bar
When I put out to sea.

Twilight and evening bell,
And after that the dark;
And may there be no sadness of farewell
When I embark.

For though from out our bourne of time and place
The flood may bear me far,
I hope to see my Pilot face to face
When I have crossed the bar.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. President, as we stop the work of the session to pay tribute to our honored dead, I am impressed with the fact that within this Chamber many illustrious men have served their country, made history, and passed into the great beyond. It embarrasses me more than I care to admit that I am so poorly equipped to pay a proper tribute to my illustrious predecessor.

Mr. President, WILLIAM PIERCE FRYE, statesman, orator, diplomat, was the product of Maine ancestry, associations, environment, and education. I think he most fittingly represents what he so well said of another—

Maine's rugged and dangerous seacoast, her sterile soil and rocky farms, her cold climate and long winters have somehow been productive of strong, vigorous, and successful men. The secret undoubtedly lies in the fact that life there from early boyhood onward is a struggle, that economy, patience, self-reliance, and habits of industry are its acquirements.

If we may attribute personal character to influence of climate, soil, and rough and rugged natural scenery, then he certainly is the type of citizen in which Maine may take just pride. He loved nature with an enthusiasm never waning, and was happiest when in the seclusion of her forest he could "hold communion with her visible forms," and to him "she spoke a various language." Her mountains, rivers, lakes, and streams filled his soul with grand and noble thoughts and influenced the great qualities of his genius. How much of it appeared in that serious face. How much in that cool, deliberate manner, responsive to his natural disposition of kindness and cheerfulness which made him so beloved by his many friends. How much in his conversation and oratory, in which he had few equals when at his best. The cool, perhaps austere, manner, speaking of the influence of nature's rougher side, was often touched as with the mellowing influence of the summer or autumn breeze, and gave us the free display of all his faculties in all their various modulations. It was then he sounded the heights and depths of oratory with the art of a Demosthenes. I have heard him before an audience of the people he loved and knew the best, the people of his beloved State, and none who have never heard him on such occasions can realize the marvelous power of his eloquence in its entirety. He could tell a story with inimitable grace, or he could astonish his audience with a burst of oratory like to the majestic sweep of the storm over mountains and valleys and lakes, or he could carry his audience along in his argument as cool and calm as the broad rivers of Maine flow through her fields and valleys to meet the sea.

I regret I have not at hand more specimens of his style. But, regretful as it is, he made no collection of his speeches, and they are in the most part to be found in the files of the newspapers which reported them. With him, after serving their purpose, they were forgotten; but some one, I hope, will bring to light some of his addresses, and I am confident they will rank high as specimens of American oratory.

I think it eminently fitting at this time to include in my address this extract from an address delivered by Senator FRYE on the occasion of a celebration of the birthday of Robert Burns. I introduce it here for two reasons: First, as a good specimen of his style, and, second, because of the application of the views so eloquently expressed to our own country and the love of liberty among its people. The selection is as follows:

Scotland for more than a thousand years, for liberty and the right to worship God according to the dictates of conscience, fought the whole power of England until the blood of her brave sons washed every mountain side, drenched every valley, tinged every lake and river. You know well that the cause a nation espouses and fights for has reflex action upon her people. Spain fought for conquest and slavery and to-day is bankrupt, a beggar among the nations, impotent to hold in subjection one little island of the sea. Rome fought for glory and empire, and she is only known in history. Our Republic fought for liberty, equal rights, and humanity, and this year the world joins in her centennial. Scotland came out of her fiery furnace of war purified. Those savage, idolatrous tribes of Caledonia gradually grew into brave, intelligent, God-fearing soldiers, who, just before entering the battle of Bannockburn, to a man knelt and with uplifted hearts and hands asked help from the god of battles. King Edward seeing them, cried, "The cravens already ask for mercy," to whom an English baron replied, "Sir, they ask no mercy from us; they pray for help from God. They will conquer or die." And they conquered.

In the arts, sciences, agriculture, and manufactures she has no occasion to hide her face. Such a country, so cold, so barren, so mountainous, so torn and distracted by worthless wars, only 300 miles long and 200 miles wide, with such glorious fruits of the highest civilization. Whence did it come? From the perpetual contest for liberty and equal rights and religion, the schoolbook and the Bible. This civilization, indigenous to cold countries of the north, crossed the ocean, landed on the bleak, barren coast of Massachusetts, toiled, suffered, and fought until, 100 years ago, it declared in words that shall live forever, making glad the hearts of toiling millions: "All men are created free and equal," and a clarion voice from Scotia's shore replied, "A man's a man for a' that." Under its inspiration independence was achieved, and England lost from her diadem one of her brightest jewels. More than a century ago this glorious old Scotland, inspired by such civilization, labored and brought forth a child, laid him in a mud-covered hut, gave him to a mother who loved the "dear God" and to a father who feared him. Then the boy, with no lingering step, with satchel and book, went to the humble school, while at home the master and mistress taught:

"An' O be sure to fear the Lord alway
And mind your duty duly morn and night,
Lest in temptation's path ye gang estray.
Implore His counsel an' assisting might—
They never sought in vain that sought the Lord aright."

Senator FRYE was born in Lewiston, Me., September 2, 1830. His ancestors were Quakers, and it is said by those who knew him best, his immediate family, that in many ways the early influence of family religious teaching manifested itself all through his life. He had much of the stern faith of his religious forefathers regarding God and His creation and man's duty to God. During a life which passed four score years he enjoyed all the honors he desired. Mayor of his native city, member of the legislature, attorney general of his State, Member of Congress in the House of Representatives, United States Senator, and had he so chosen, he might have been President of the Republic. The story is authentically reported that President McKinley desired him to go on the ticket with him in 1900, but that Mr. FRYE declined to consider the proposition. "Why, no, Mr. President," he said, "what if anything should happen to you?" "Why then you would be President," said Mr. McKinley, "and no man is better fitted to fill that place than you, Senator." "No," Mr. FRYE replied, "I will not take the chance, for I wouldn't be President if it were handed to me on a plate of gold. In fact, I would rather be Senator from Maine than to occupy any office in the gift of the President or the people."

Senator FRYE was a partisan. As he once said upon the floor of the Senate:

I have little faith in a man connected with a political party who really and honestly believes in its principles who is not ready at all times to defend and maintain them.

He was that kind of a partisan who would always make his politics express his honest opinions. He was a partisan who wins the admiration of his associates and commands the respect of his opponents.

In the Senate he occupied a prominent and leading position for more than 30 years, respected and loved by all. Never once have I heard his personal integrity questioned or doubted. As President pro tempore of this body he long presided over the Senate with distinguished courtesy and with equity and justice to all. In this connection Senator HOAR in his Reminiscences says:

Vice Presidents Wheeler, Morton, Stevenson, and more lately Mr. FRYE, asserted authority with as little show of force as if they were presiding over a party of guests at their own table, but the order and dignity of the body have been preserved.

Maine has furnished many men renowned in the affairs of the Nation, but none more beloved by her people than was WILLIAM PIERCE FRYE. We did not all agree with him upon many political questions, but none ever doubted his honesty and integrity. The friendships he enjoyed among all her people is demonstrated by the fact that for 30 years he had no opposition in his own party for reelection to this body, and by one legislature he was unanimously elected, a Democratic minority uniting with a Republican majority in voting for him—an incident which touched his heart more than I ever saw it touched before when he addressed the legislature upon that occasion.

Senator FRYE was an idealist. This characteristic manifested itself in many ways. He did not limit his activities to politics nor narrow his thoughts by immersing himself in politics. He loved to contemplate nature in her multitudinous phases; loved the grandeur of her high mountains, deep valleys, lakes, and streams, the forests of pine and spruce. And he found the temple of his pleasure in the beautiful Rangeley region, where he loved to go from the busy haunts of man to dwell close to the scenes he loved, with family and friends about him. As he once said:

Everybody thinks me a great fisherman, but, as a matter of fact, fishing with me is a mere incident of camp life. I love the woods and its solitude.

Like the poet Byron, he found

A pleasure in the pathless woods, a rapture on the lonely shore.

I have given just a few thoughts which have come to me from my acquaintance with my illustrious predecessor.

It has not been my intention to pronounce a eulogy upon his life. He needs none. Every good and great man builds his own monument to fame in his daily life and rule of action. Living, he can not add one cubit to his stature; dead, none can add to the memorial of his life. Friend or foe can not change what life has wrought, and one's truthful epitaph each chisels deep into the memorial he leaves behind for posterity to contemplate. With firm and not uncertain hand WILLIAM PIERCE FRYE wrought in simplicity and truth his own epitaph. Let it be—

He lived in honor, and with patience and ability wrought with fidelity the duties life brought him.

How fortunate the man. As he slowly went into the shadows of the twilight of his life's departing day, with loving children and friends about him, sustained by the thought of duty done, and knowing that he had the confidence of his fellow citizens in a life of integrity as a public servant in the service of his country.

Who could have or desire more?

Mr. President, in behalf of my colleague and myself I offer the following resolution, which I desire to have read at the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Maine offers a resolution for adoption, which the Secretary will read:

The Secretary read the resolution (S. Res. 249), as follows:

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect to the memory of WILLIAM PIERCE FRYE the Senate do now adjourn.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution submitted by the Senator from Maine.

The resolution was unanimously agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, March 15, 1912, at 2 o'clock p. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, March 14, 1912.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father in heaven,
We can not always trace the way
Where Thou, Almighty One, dost move;
But we can always, always say
That God is love.

There are no errors in the great eternal plan,
And all things work together
For the final good of man.

Yet we know that wrong is wrong and right is right, and Thou hast laid upon us the stupendous responsibility of the power of choice. To do wrong is to retard the coming of Thy kingdom; to do right is to hasten the final good of man. Help us, therefore, as rational beings, to work together with Thee that we may hasten the coming of Thy kingdom. In the spirit of the Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

TAX ON INDIVIDUAL AND COPARTNERSHIP BUSINESS.

Mr. UNDERWOOD, from the Committee on Ways and Means, reported a bill (H. R. 21214) to extend the special excise tax now levied with respect to doing business by corporations to persons, and to provide revenue for the Government by levying a special excise tax with respect to doing business by individuals and copartnerships, which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report (No. 416) ordered to be printed.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I desire to present the views of the minority on the same measure, and I ask unanimous consent that they be printed with the report (H. Rept. 416, pt. 2).

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to have the views of the minority printed with the report. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed joint resolutions of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. J. Res. 89. Joint resolution to amend the joint resolution to prohibit the export of coal or other materials used in war from any seaport of the United States;

S. J. Res. 87. Joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of War to receive for instruction at the United States Military Academy at West Point Messrs. Humberto Mencia and Juan Dawson, of Salvador; and

S. J. Res. 88. Joint resolution relative to the transfer of all books, maps, and other documents now in the possession of the National Monetary Commission.

SENATE JOINT RESOLUTIONS REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, joint resolutions of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees as indicated below:

S. J. Res. 87. Joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of War to receive for instruction at the United States Military Academy at West Point Messrs. Humberto Mencia and Juan Dawson, of Salvador; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

S. J. Res. 88. Joint resolution relative to the transfer of all books, maps, and other documents now in the possession of the National Monetary Commission; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

EXPORTATION OF COAL, ARMS, ETC.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of Senate joint resolution 89, and I ask the Speaker to lay it before the House for the action of the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate joint resolution 89. Is there objection?

Mr. PAYNE. Let the resolution be read, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. MANN. Let it be read for information.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution (S. J. Res. 89) to amend the joint resolution to prohibit the export of coal or other material used in war from any seaport of the United States.

Resolved, etc., That the joint resolution to prohibit the export of coal or other material used in war from any seaport of the United States, approved April 22, 1898, be, and hereby is, amended to read as follows:

That whenever the President shall find that in any American country conditions of domestic violence exist which are promoted by the use of arms or munitions of war procured from the United States, the President is hereby authorized, in his discretion, and with such limitations and exceptions as shall seem to him expedient, to prohibit by proclamation the export of arms or munitions of war from any place in the United States to such country until otherwise ordered by the President or by Congress.

SEC. 2. That the shipment of any material prohibited by such a proclamation shall be punishable by fine not exceeding $10,000, or imprisonment not exceeding two years, or both.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I should like to say that my attention was called to a similar resolution referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce by the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. LITTLETON], and the illustrious chairman of the Judiciary Committee, Mr. CLAYTON.

I examined the bill and reached the conclusion, which I think is a correct one, that it is not a matter which should be held up for consideration by our committee, and that I have no objection to the action suggested by the gentleman from Texas, that the matter be taken up and considered immediately.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, it is unusual under the recent practice of the House—the rules now providing for a Unanimous Consent Calendar—to give recognition to ask unanimous consent for the consideration of a measure. This measure could, if reported, be placed upon the Unanimous Consent Calendar for Monday, and whether reported or not, might be passed under suspension of the rules on Monday if recognition were given for that purpose. But in consideration of the emergency in this case, and without intending that it shall create a precedent for ordinary bills, I shall not object.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is obliged to the gentleman from Illinois for making that statement. If he had not made it, the Chair would have made it himself. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. CLAYTON].

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, the Committee on the Judiciary had the subject matter of this resolution under consideration at its meeting this morning, and that committee instructed me, in anticipation of the coming of this resolution to the House to-day from the Senate, to ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the resolution and that it be amended in two particulars—that the amendments be agreed to and that the Senate joint resolution as so amended be passed. And it is in pursuance of that resolution and the direction of the Committee on the Judiciary that I join in the request for unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution. Mr. Speaker, unanimous consent having been given for the present consideration of the resolution, I now move the following amendments.

Beginning in line 10, page 1, strike out the following:

The President is hereby authorized, in his discretion and with such limitations and exceptions as shall seem to him expedient, to prohibit by proclamation the export of.

And insert in lieu thereof the following:

And shall make proclamation thereof, it shall be unlawful to export, except under such limitations and exceptions as the President shall prescribe, any.

Beginning in line 3, page 2, strike out the following:

The shipment of any material prohibited by.

And insert in lieu thereof the following:

Any shipment of material hereby declared unlawful after.

So that the resolution as amended will read as follows:

Resolved, That the joint resolution to prohibit the export of coal or other material used in war from any seaport of the United States, approved April 22, 1898, be, and hereby is, amended to read as follows:

That whenever the President shall find that conditions of domestic violence exist in any American country which are promoted by the use of arms or munitions of war procured from the United States, and shall make proclamation thereof, it shall be unlawful to export, except under such limitations and exceptions as the President shall prescribe, any arms or munitions of war from any place in the United States to such country until otherwise ordered by the President or by Congress.

SEC. 2. That any shipment of material hereby declared unlawful after such a proclamation shall be punishable by fine not exceeding $10,000, or imprisonment not exceeding two years, or both.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLAYTON. Yes.

Mr. BURLESON. As I understand it, the two amendments suggested by the gentleman from Alabama meet with the approval of the author of the resolution, the senior Senator from New York [Mr. ROOT].

Mr. CLAYTON. They do. The Committee on the Judiciary accorded a hearing this morning to the author of the Senate joint resolution 89, and these amendments, I may say, are the result of the joint labor of the Senator from New York [Mr. ROOT] and of the gentleman from New York [Mr. LITTLETON], each of whom introduced a resolution upon this subject, one in the Senate and one in the House. These amendments are the joint product of those two gentlemen, and meet with the approval of the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CLAYTON. Yes.

Mr. MANN. The amended resolution as suggested by the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary does not change in any way the substantive effect of the resolution, does it? Is it a mere change of the language?

Mr. CLAYTON. It does not change the substantive effect of the resolution. It is a change in the language. It does not change the intention of the resolution or its substance. It merely makes it more clear and free from criticism.

Mr. MANN. In what respect does it make it more clear?

Mr. GARNER. It makes it a little bit more grammatical, I take it.

Mr. NORRIS. No; it does more than that.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, it takes away from it possible criticism of the language in the original resolution. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], I am quite sure, has read the case of Field v. Clark (143 U. S.), where the objection was made to the act there under consideration by the court, that the language employed in the act was a delegation of congressional power to the President of the United States. The court did not agree with that view or with that criticism of the act there under consideration. The amendments make the language entirely free from the criticism which might be suggested; that is, that the unamended resolution would be a delegation of certain legislative powers to the President of the United States, whereas these amendments make it clear that it is not a delegation of any legislative power to the President, but confers a mere administrative function upon him.

Mr. MANN. When the gentleman's amendment was first reported I got the impression, which, I think, was a mistaken impression, that this required the President to make a proclamation whenever disorder existed, which was promoted by arms, and so forth——

Mr. CLAYTON. It relates to an administrative matter.

Mr. MANN. As I understand the resolution, as now suggested, it would not take effect until the President had made a proclamation, and he is not required to make the proclamation unless he chooses to do so.

Mr. CLAYTON. That is correct.

Mr. MANN. What I had in mind was this. I do not believe that it should be required that the President shall make proclamation against the shipment of arms and munitions of war whenever some local disorder happens in any of the American States. The President ought to have the right to say whether that disorder has reached the point where he is required to make a proclamation.

Mr. GARNER. This resolution, as amended, gives him that entire discretion.

Mr. CLAYTON. I think that latitude is left with the President.

Mr. GARNER. And if I understand it, it meets the approval of both the Senator from New York [Mr. ROOT] and the gentleman from New York [Mr. LITTLETON].

Mr. CLAYTON. It does. With the permission of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER], I will ask that the gentleman from New York [Mr. LITTLETON] be heard.

Mr. LITTLETON. Mr. Speaker, the change in the resolution as between the Senate resolution and the one now proposed with the amendments is simply this: In the original resolution, as passed by the Senate, provision was made that the President—is hereby authorized, in his discretion and with such limitations and exceptions as shall seem to him expedient, to prohibit by proclamation the export of arms, etc.

As amended we propose that it shall read:

That whenever the President shall find that conditions of domestic violence exist in any American country which are promoted by the use of arms or munitions of war, procured from the United States, and shall make proclamation thereof, it shall be unlawful to export, except under such limitations and exceptions as the President shall prescribe, any arms or munitions of war, etc.

In other words, the resolution as it came from the Senate made a violation of the President's prohibition a crime, whereas as now amended it makes the violation of the act of Congress a crime when the President shall have proclaimed a certain state of facts to exist. It therefore avoids the criticism which has heretofore been made upon those acts.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, I do not desire to discuss the amendments. What I want is the immediate passage of the resolution; so I suggest that the amendments be adopted and the resolution do pass.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

Beginning in line 10, page 1, strike out the following:
"The President is hereby authorized, in his discretion and with such limitations and exceptions as shall seem to him expedient, to prohibit by proclamation the export of."
And insert in lieu thereof the following:
"And shall make proclamation thereof, it shall be unlawful to export, except under such limitations and exceptions as the President shall prescribe, any."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Beginning in line 3, page 2, strike out the following:
"The shipment of any material prohibited by,"
And insert in lieu thereof the following:
"Any shipment of material hereby declared unlawful after."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the third reading of the amended Senate joint resolution.

The Senate joint resolution was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. GARNER, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was passed was laid on the table.

THE SUGAR SCHEDULE.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 21213) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide revenue, equalize duties, and encourage the industries of the United States, and for other purposes," approved August 5, 1909.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from Alabama that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 21213.

The question was taken; and there were on a division (demanded by Mr. MANN)—ayes 104, noes 83.

So the motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 21213) to revise the sugar schedule, with Mr. ADAIR in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 21213) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide revenue, equalize duties, and encourage the industries of the United States, and for other purposes," approved August 5, 1909.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the first reading of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, this bill makes an entire change in the present law relating to the tax on sugar. The Government of the United States since almost the beginning of its history has levied an import tax on sugar, except when the McKinley bill was enacted into law. It is true that the Wilson bill, when it passed this House, provided for free sugar, but that bill was amended in the Senate, and in conference a tax was placed on sugar imported in the United States. At the time the Republican Party placed sugar on the free list, through the McKinley bill, they provided for a bounty to be paid to the sugar manufacturers, recognizing, from their standpoint, that the sugar manufacturer and producer had a vested right in tariff taxation.

Mr. Chairman, I do not believe any bill has been presented to this House or will be presented to it that more clearly marks the dividing line between the two great political parties of this country than does the bill now presented for consideration. The minority members of the Ways and Means Committee, in their report on this bill, contend that we are about to destroy a great industry of the United States; that this industry has a vested right in the taxes levied at the customhouse. Mr. Chairman, the position the Republican Party has always taken in reference to taxes levied at the customhouse is that such taxes are for the benefit of industries, and, going one step further, it is but natural for them to recognize a vested interest in the power to tax the American people for special privileges. On the other hand, the party that I represent on this floor has never, from the beginning of its history, contended that it was legitimate to levy taxation for any other purpose than that of raising revenues to support the Government of the United States. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

We have never recognized any man or any industry as owning the vested right in their power to tax the American people. Your party, the descendant of the Federalists and Whigs, have attempted to engraft, and have engrafted, on the legislative history of this country those principles brought here from the English Crown.

Not many years ago I recall having a gentleman in the city of London tell me that one of the great lords of that realm possessed the right to tax every man that went to a certain market of London to sell to the people of that great city their daily food, and that he had a vested right to that privilege; that one of his sainted and decorated ancestors in the days of Queen Elizabeth had been granted that privilege, and the present peer had inherited from his ancestors the right to levy a tax on the sale of food in one of the great marts of London.

Now, there are some gentlemen on that side of the House who pretend that we are committing an unjustifiable act, because we are willing to say and to enact into law the repeal of a tax on food, and to deny that any industry or any man in the United States has a vested right in the privilege of taxing the American people. [Applause on the Democratic side.] This bill, if it becomes a law, will admit free of duty sugar of every kind and description from all the markets of the world. It is contended that if we pass this bill we will destroy an American industry. I do not believe that true, so far as the American sugar-refining companies are concerned; that is, the cane-sugar refining companies. I want to call your attention to what it costs in the various countries of the world to refine sugar in bond, where no tax is levied and where the result is not affected by taxation, and make the comparison as to whether the American refinery is enabled to face free competition with the markets of the world.

These average quotations as to the cost of refining are net cash, in cents per pound, for the year 1910, and relate to sugar in bond in the various countries of the world. They are as follows.

In England refined sugar in bond is quoted for 1910 at 3.706 cents; in Germany, 3.640 cents; in Austria, 3.800 cents; in France, 4.070 cents; and in the United States, 3.532 cents. The result is that sugar is quoted in bond in the United States for the year 1910 cheaper than untaxed sugar in bond was quoted in any of the great European countries that produce sugar.

Now, if that is the case, is it possible that any man can contend that placing sugar on the free list is going to destroy the industry of refining cane sugar in America? I think not. But it is contended that cane sugar is only a portion of the product and that the untaxing of the sugar of the American people might destroy the beet-sugar industry of America.

I want to call your attention to this fact, that the total cost of producing 501,700 tons of beet sugar and the associated by-products in the year 1909 by the beet-sugar factories of America was $37,353,000; that the value of products as shown by the census returns was $48,122,000, showing a total profit to the beet-sugar manufacturers of the United States in that year of $11,000,000, according to the census figures. Their total capital invested amounted to $129,000,000. It is recognized by all that probably one-half of that capital represents watered stock. Yet, as shown by the census figures, they made a profit on their total capital stock of 9 per cent during the year 1909. That does not look as if this infant industry was struggling for an existence. But they may say, "If you repeal the tax that protects their market you will destroy their profits." But I want to tell you that the investigations made by this House show that the beets in the United States cost the factories here less than in Germany, its competitor.

Mr. FORDNEY. Can the gentleman show official figures for that, please?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I have not the official figures, but they are contained in the Hardwick report. The report states it, the witnesses so stated it, and I have not seen it denied. The gentleman publishes in his minority views a lot of ancient figures that are not up to date. Only day before yesterday a man who came from Germany and knew the facts stated to me that during last year the cost in Germany was $7.50 a ton for beets. The gentleman does not contend that it cost more than $5 or $6 in America to-day. There is no one who contends for one moment that the beets of this country have not higher sugar content than the beets of Germany, our principal competitor.

Mr. FORDNEY. Will the gentleman pardon me for a question?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Yes.

Mr. FORDNEY. I wish the gentleman would kindly show statistics for that.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will refer you to the Hardwick report.

Mr. FORDNEY. I think I can show from that it is right the reverse.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Of course I know there are some beet fields in the United States where the beets are raised under humid conditions and a great deal of water is in them, and that under such conditions there is a low percentage of sugar in the beets. But in Colorado and Utah and portions of California, which are arid sections, I contend that it can not be contradicted that the percentage of actual sugar in the beet is greater than in the beets of any country of Europe.

Mr. HARDWICK. If the gentleman will pardon me, Dr. Wiley swore that before the committee.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. There is no question as to that fact. Now, what is the result? The beet-sugar interests of this country have a cheaper beet at the factory, with a higher sugar content. They have as good machinery to produce the result, and probably better machinery, than their foreign competitor. Yet, although the labor cost at the beet-sugar factories in Europe may be less, the cost of coal in the European countries is far greater, and certainly equalizes the difference in labor cost.

Mr. PICKETT. Will the gentleman yield to a question?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Certainly.

Mr. PICKETT. I wish to call the attention of the gentleman to the report of the majority, on page 5, where it says that the cost of sugar would average 2.415 cents, and then goes on and observes that it is also ascertained that the cost to the United States is 3.54 cents, or a difference of practically 1.13 cents. In view of the statement the gentleman has made, I thought I would direct his attention to these figures and ask for an explanation.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. That is a quotation from the Hardwick committee. I am stating why I believe that the cost of producing sugar at the American factories is no greater than it is in Germany. I will repeat the statement that the sugar content of the beet in this country on an average is greater and costs less at the mill; and although the labor cost is less in Europe the expense for fuel is greater, and this to a large extent makes up the difference in labor cost.

But, aside from that, the testimony before the Hardwick committee and before the Committee on Ways and Means three years ago is that for a large portion of the American market the beet-sugar refiner of the West has a railroad freight rate that absolutely protects his market. In their report the minority themselves call your attention to the fact that the beet-sugar industry of the United States can not come farther eastward with its product than Pittsburgh and Buffalo and farther south than Arkansas.

Now, what does that mean? They can not come farther than that into the markets of the cane-sugar refiner, because the freight rate becomes prohibitive and drives them back.

That same freight rate that prohibits them from coming into the eastern market also prohibits the foreign sugar, or the refiner of cane sugar, from going westward into their markets, so that they have a market, although not as large probably as they want; not as large as the minority members of the Committee on Ways and Means would like to give them, because they say in their report:

> If you extend this tax and continue this tax on the American people, you can create a market for the big beet-sugar refiners that will extend to a territory far beyond what it does at present by reason of the tax.

There is no question about that. If you put a prohibitive import tax on cane sugar and also a prohibitive tax on beet sugar, I have no doubt that you could turn over the entire market of the United States to those who make beet sugar in the western mountains.

But there is no doubt about the fact that if you put sugar on the free list, as designed by this bill, the freight rate will afford protection for a reasonable market for these beet-sugar refineries in the West. You are not going to destroy the cane refiner, because, according to the report, he is selling his sugar cheaper in the East to-day than his competitors. You are not going to destroy the beet-sugar manufacturer, because he has a freight rate that protects his market just as the freight rate protects the iron and steel market of the Mississippi Valley.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Alabama yield to the gentleman from Nebraska?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. For a question.

Mr. NORRIS. Does the gentleman contend that the present market of the beet-sugar factories could be retained on account of this freight-rate protection?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. No; I did not say that. Of course I recognize the fact that the beet-sugar man may not be able to retain his market all the way to Pittsburgh and Buffalo, but there is a western market that he can retain.

Mr. NORRIS. Can the gentleman tell what that is?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. No; I can not; neither can you.

Mr. NORRIS. I admit I can not.

Mr. MURDOCK. At present prices?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Certainly not at present prices.

Mr. MURDOCK. While the gentleman says that the western manufacturer of beet sugar will be protected by the freight rates, he means protected in what? In the present level of prices?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Oh, no. He ought not to be protected in the present level of prices. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. MURDOCK. But will he be?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I say he ought not to be, and I do not think he will be. He is making to-day, according to the census, 9 per cent on his capitalization, and half of his capitalization is water. He is making 18 per cent on his real capitalization, and that profit is being dragged out of the American people by taxation. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. MURDOCK. As a matter of fact, the beet-sugar people made 16 per cent last year.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Well, I am talking about the last census year and giving the gentleman census figures. I have no doubt that the gentleman from Kansas is right and that my figures are conservative and his progressive. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Alabama yield to the gentleman from Michigan?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Yes.

Mr. FORDNEY. The gentleman has just stated that he is not in favor of dragging out of the people the present price of sugar. Will the gentleman explain to the House what caused the high price of sugar during the months of August and September and October in the year 1911, when there was no domestic crop on the market?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. It was due, to a large extent, to the Payne-Aldrich Tariff Act, which the gentleman helped to put into law. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. FORDNEY. That is your answer—if that is satisfactory to you.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Alabama yield to the gentleman from Colorado?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Yes.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I would like to ask the gentleman if he can name to the House a single large American industry that is not dragging enormous and unjust profits out of the American people, without any reference to the question as to whether it has a tariff on its products or not. Such industries, for instance, as the Oil Trust or the Steel Trust, which latter was shown the other day by a report of one of the committees of the House to be making a profit of 240 per cent annually——

Mr. BARTLETT. Oh, no; that was only on one railroad that it owns.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. That does not justify it; but as a fact there are some industries in this country that do not exist as a result of protection by taxation. One of them is the cotton-growing industry in my own Southland. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I want to know if the gentleman's statement about dragging the profits out of the people is not altogether begging this question?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Well, if my friend will allow me to go on I will give my reasons for it. I recognize that we have got to levy taxes at the customhouse in order to produce revenue. I wish we did not have to levy any taxes at the customhouse. But I do say this, that when you come to levying customhouse taxes the most unjust tax that can be levied on a people is that on the food they consume. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Now, I want to call your attention to the reason why I say this tax is unjust, and why I say it is dragging money out of the American people to support this industry. The original theory of the Republican Party in favor of protection was not in favor of continuing forever a protective tariff. They contended in the days of Henry Clay—the protectionists of that day contended—that they levied a tariff for protection in order to build up infant industries; but they never contended that the protection should be maintained forever—a burden kept on the people continuously for the purpose of benefiting one man by taxing another.

Now, you should test this case according to the theory of the Republican fathers, not the theory of the standpat Republicans of to-day, who believe in the right to tax the American for the sake of special privilege; but try this case according to the theory of your fathers. You have maintained a tax on sugar almost from the beginning of the Government. When at one time you took it off you taxed the American people in another way and gave a bounty to the sugar producer.

But what is the result of your taxation? We find to-day that it is not building up an industry necessary to supply the American people with sugar. You are hothousing, or attempting to hothouse, a plant where it was not intended to grow. The beet-sugar industry of the United States to-day produces only about one-seventh of the quantity of sugar consumed annually by the American people. The cane-sugar industry in the United States produces to-day only one-tenth of the American consumption. The total sugar that is produced in the United States, both cane and beet, amounts to 1,717,000,000 pounds, or less than one-fourth of the sugar annually consumed by the American people. The total production of beet sugar in the Western States and of cane sugar in Louisiana furnishes the American people with only one-fourth of the amount of sugar that is necessary to supply their needs.

Now you want to continue to maintain a tax of over 1½ cents a pound on every pound of sugar consumed by the American people for the purpose of fostering the growth of an industry that has been protected for generations and still has not developed to the point of independence.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. In just a moment. I want to finish this statement.

Now, what is this costing the American people? The tariff adds $115,000,000 to the cost of the total annual American sugar supply. Now, as the production here amounts to only 1,717,000,000 pounds, the American people are forced to pay the equivalent of 6.7 cents a pound to foster every pound of American-grown sugar—I mean sugar produced in continental America.

Now, are you going to stand on that? Is that a proposition which you gentlemen propose to take back to your constituents, that wherever the American people are a tax is to be levied on them amounting to the equivalent of 6.7 cents upon every pound of American sugar produced? Are they ready to justify that tax, or to pay it? I think not. I think that when an American industry, after years of experiment, has to be fostered and held up under such conditions, it is time to remove the tax and give the American people a chance for themselves. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. Is the gentleman in favor of giving any protection to any infant industry in the country?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will answer the gentleman very candidly. I am surprised that it is necessary for him to ask me that question, after the number of speeches that he has heard me make on the tariff. I do not believe that any tariff for the sake of protection is justified. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. I will ask the gentleman, since when has that become the doctrine of our party.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. It has always been the doctrine of the Democratic Party. [Applause on the Democratic side.] The doctrine of the Democratic Party from the beginning has been that there is no justification to tax the American people except to raise the revenue that is necessary to support the Government. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. One more question. Where does the gentleman draw the line when he speaks of the Republican side of this House being in favor of protection upon the theory that an industry is an infant one? When does the industry become an adult, speaking now with reference to the beet-sugar industry?

Mr. BARTLETT. Never, under a Republican tariff.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will say to the gentleman that the time when these infant industries were really infants runs to a time when the memory of the present generation runneth not to the contrary.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. But that is not so with the beet industry.

Mr. JAMES. They are all "beat" industries—beating the American people out of money. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The beet industry has been in existence 45 years.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I do not intend to detain the committee much longer with this argument. It is contended in the minority report that the American people will not get the benefit of the reduction of this tariff. If you do not reduce the price of sugar to the American people by reducing the tariff, how are your beet-sugar people in the West going to be hurt by the tariff reduction? [Applause on the Democratic side.] If you are going to keep up the price of sugar and the American people will not get the benefit of it, how is competition going to hurt you? But I contend that the American people will get the benefit of this reduction. It is one of the few articles in the entire tariff list where a reduction in tariff duties will be accompanied by a reduction in the price of the commodity.

I want to call your attention to the difference in the wholesale price of sugar at Hamburg, the open market of the world, and the wholesale price at New York. Although, as I pointed out some time ago, sugar in bond in Germany—that is, untaxed—sold in 1910 for more than it did in the United States, while the wholesale price of taxed sugar in Hamburg for 1911 was 2.82 per pound on raw sugar, compared with 4.45 per pound in New York, a difference of 1.63 cents per pound.

Mr. FORDNEY. Will the gentleman permit? Is not that the quotation on European raws, from which we drew not a single pound?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will give the gentleman the quotations on granulated, if he is not satisfied.

Mr. FORDNEY. No; I am speaking of raw sugar.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Oh, certainly; but it is the price, whether they come from there or not.

Mr. FORDNEY. Oh, no.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Here is your granulated sugar. In 1911 the wholesale price of granulated sugar in Hamburg was 3.20 cents per pound, while in New York it was 5.34 cents, a difference of 2.14 cents per pound, or more than the difference in the tariff with the freight rate added. Yet the gentleman contends that if we take away this tariff tax it will not affect the market.

Mr. FORDNEY. What will be the effect on domestic sugar, of the sugar refined by the trust that you propose now to aid?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. It is refined sugar in New York. Whether it is Louisiana sugar, Cuban sugar, or Philippine sugar makes no difference to the American people. It is the price of sugar.

Mr. FORDNEY. That was the price fixed by the institution that you propose in your bill to aid—the Sugar Trust.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Now, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman brings this argument down to a point where he stands behind his last breastwork. Think of the beet-sugar industry of this country contending that the Democratic Party is in favor of free sugar for the purpose of aiding the American Sugar Refining Co., or the Sugar Trust!

Mr. FORDNEY. Absolutely, that is my contention.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Just let me present a picture to you. Who maintains this American Sugar Refining Co.? Who is it that votes for the Republican Party? Who were in partnership with the Sugar Trust when, by a secret spring, it robbed this Government of millions of dollars? Republican officials in the State of New York. [Applause on the Democratic side.] You never could trace the trail of the Sugar Trust into the Democratic camp. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Talk about our putting sugar on the free list for the benefit of the American Sugar Trust! Democratic hands have been clean since the beginning, so far as that trust is concerned.

Mr. PAYNE. Did not the Sugar Trust contribute a large amount to the gentleman's party, campaign after campaign?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I have never known it.

Mr. PAYNE. Everybody else in the United States has known it. I do not know whether the gentleman can find it out. The Democratic officers of the Sugar Trust said so. They are on record.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I should like to have the gentleman produce his proof. I have never seen it or heard it.

Mr. HINDS. Does the gentleman from Alabama yield?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will.

Mr. HINDS. I will say, on my own——

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I yield for a question; not for a speech.

Mr. HINDS. I thought the gentleman asked if anyone could produce evidence, and said he had not seen the evidence.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do say so. I never have seen it, and I do not believe there is any.

Mr. HINDS. If the gentleman will go to the office of the American Sugar Refining Co., in New York City, and ask for their ledger and look at the special account, he will find that on the same day large sums of money were paid to men identified first with the Republican Party and next with the Democratic Party as managers and treasurers of their organizations.

Mr. HARDWICK. And the gentleman will also find that the check sent to the Democratic Party was returned and the check sent to the Republican Party was cashed and spent in the election. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. HINDS. We traced that out. The check sent to the Democratic Party was deposited in the bank, and after being deposited in the bank was withdrawn and the top of it torn off; and if you will study contemporary literature you will see that no motive of virtue inspired that Democratic campaign manager. [Cries of "Oh!" on the Democratic side.]

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Nevertheless the Democratic Party did not get the money and the Republican Party did. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. HINDS. Possibly there may be some virtue in a man in that situation who is compelled to disgorge, but I can not see it. [Cries of "Oh!" on the Democratic side.]

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I will tell you why the American Sugar Refining Co. is not in favor of free sugar here. It is not to their interest to be. They get to-day a 20 per cent reduction on all sugar that comes from Cuba, and more than one-half of the raw sugar that comes into this country is from Cuba. The American Refining Co. gets that reduction. This is to their advantage in facing competition with the world. It is not the differential on sugar that is their protection. The greatest protection that the American sugar refiner gets to-day is the reduction of 20 per cent in the duty on sugar imported from Cuba. Now, if you put sugar on the free list, the American refiner is deprived of that advantage over the foreign producer.

The result of giving them that 20 per cent reduction on the cost of raw sugars has been so effective in the past that there is practically no refined sugar imported into this country, but when you take all taxes off and give the refiner no advantage over his foreign competitor, in reference to Cuban sugar, he is deprived of that protection just as well as the beet-sugar man is deprived of his protection.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, may I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will say to the gentleman that I am anxious to conclude.

Mr. AUSTIN. I really want to vote for the gentleman's bill, but I want a certain matter cleared up to my satisfaction.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. My time is nearly up, and I will ask the gentleman to hasten with his question.

Mr AUSTIN. We put hides on the free list, and yet there was no reduction in the price of leather or the price of shoes. If I believed—and I am a standpat Republican on the tariff—that the consumer was going to get a reduction of a cent and a half a pound——

Mr. LANGLEY. Or any substantial reduction.

Mr. AUSTIN. Or any substantial reduction, I would vote for the bill; and if the gentleman will amend the bill so that in the event there is not a substantial reduction to the consumer the present tariff on sugar shall be restored, I will support the bill, if so amended.

Mr. LANGLEY. And so will I.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, my friend is very hard to convince, but I desire to call his attention to what Mr. Claus Spreckels, one of the independent refiners of sugar, stated in the hearings before the Committee on Ways and Means in the consideration of the Payne bill.

Mr. Spreckels testified that the price of refined sugar to the American consumer is affected to the full extent of the duty. Further, in reply to the inquiry as to whether the exemption of sugar from duty would reduce the price by the amount of the duty Mr. Spreckels replied, "By the amount of the duty." Further confirmation of the fact that the full amount of the tariff tax on sugar is transferred to the consumer in the form of increased prices is found in the evidence of Mr. Wallace P. Willett, a recognized sugar statistical expert, in his testimony before the special Hardwick committee, page 3547, where he says:

Whenever duty is taken off, the consumer gets the full benefit of the amount of duty taken off and also a part of the lower cost of refining.

Mr. Chairman, there is no doubt but that if you take the duty off sugar the consumer will get the benefit. That was demonstrated when the Republican Party passed the McKinley bill. Almost immediately after the enactment of the McKinley bill into law the price of sugar dropped about 2 cents a pound to the American consumer.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question? I want to ask him if he does not know that on page 3977 and on page 3978 Mr. Willett takes back every word that the gentleman has quoted him as having said?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I have not been advised to that effect, and if he does, I have overlooked it.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I dislike to interrupt the gentleman from Alabama, but I am very anxious to ask him a question on the point that he is just making. I am not sure that the figures which I have are correct, I am not authority for them, but I have been informed that for the 4 years during the operation of the McKinley bill, under free sugar, the average wholesale price of sugar in New York City was $4.84 per hundred, and that during the 16 years since that time, excluding last year, the price ranged about $4.60 per hundred; in other words, the average price for the 4 years under the McKinley bill, the wholesale price, ranged slightly higher than it did during the 14 years succeeding, under the Dingley law.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman is mistaken. Here are the figures:

Average American prices of raw and refined sugars before and after formation of the trust (terms net cash).

[2] Increase in European crop supply of 2,000,000 tons. [4] Short crop in Europe.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I propose to follow up this matter. I will say that I am not sponsor for those figures, but they were given to me by a well-informed gentleman who is usually very accurate.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will say to the gentleman that I have the official prices of sugar.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I do not question the drop at the beginning, but I take the full average for the whole 14 years.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. As shown in this table of prices, the enactment of the McKinley law putting sugar on the free list reduced the price of sugar about 2 cents a pound.

Mr. BROUSSARD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Certainly.

Mr. BROUSSARD. Is it not a fact that during the four years that the McKinley law was in force and when sugar was on the free list the average price paid by the American consumer for sugar was practically the same as it was for the four preceding years and the four succeeding years?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do not think so.

Mr. BROUSSARD. That is the fact.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The gentleman is mistaken. I consulted the figures only yesterday, and I know that when the McKinley bill was enacted into law sugar dropped about 2 cents a pound.

Mr. BROUSSARD. I am talking about the price to the consumer. We are speaking of the consumer.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. And I am talking of the wholesale price of sugar.

Mr. BROUSSARD. The gentleman's bill intends to reduce the price to the consumer.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Certainly it will.

Mr. BROUSSARD. Is it not a fact that the consumer paid just as much and above and beyond the price he formerly paid when sugar was not on the free list, and contributed 2 cents a pound for every pound of sugar produced in the United States?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do not think he did.

Mr. BROUSSARD. I am certain that he did.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I quote the wholesale prices. If some corner groceryman held up the price to his customers, that is another matter. I do not know whether that is so or not.

Mr. BROUSSARD. Will he not do it again?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. No; he will not.

Mr. BROUSSARD. Why will he not?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Because when you fix the policy of the United States to put sugar on the free list, and have absolute competition with the markets of the world, that world-wide competition will bring down the price.

Mr. BROUSSARD. But it was on the free list under the McKinley bill, and that opened this market to the markets of the world.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. And it brought down the price.

Mr. BROUSSARD. I would like to see the gentleman's figures.

Mr. RANSDELL of Louisiana. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman from Alabama a question, and I will ask unanimous consent that his time be extended in order that I might ask that question. He has entirely ignored Louisiana. I want to ask him something about Louisiana sugar.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I have only five minutes remaining.

Mr. RANSDELL of Louisiana. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If the gentleman will ask his question I will try to answer it.

Mr. BROUSSARD. I desire to ask the gentleman another question.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I have not the time.

Mr. RANSDELL of Louisiana. I notice the gentleman entirely failed in his report upon this bill to say anything of the effect of the bill upon Louisiana sugar. He discussed the effect on beet sugar, but says nothing about its effect on Louisiana sugar. I have followed the gentleman's speech very carefully, and he has not alluded to the possible effect of the bill upon the Louisiana industry. I would like to have him now explain that, if he will.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Certainly, if the gentleman will allow me to proceed to close, I will. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman brings me to the point with which I desire to conclude. He says that I have not referred to Louisiana nor given statistics as to whether the Louisiana industry can survive or not. I will say to the gentleman candidly that I do not know. I do not know whether it can or not. I hope it can, but I want to say this, that of the total amount of sugar that is consumed by the American people, the State of Louisiana produces about one-tenth. The American people were taxed $52,000,000 at the customhouses in 1911, and over $60,000,000 by the refiners and producers of sugar to maintain this industry. I am not prepared to say that the Louisiana industry can survive, but I can say, that there is no principle in the Democratic Party that justifies any man in saying that we should maintain a tax of $115,000,000 upon the bellies of the poor people of America in order to maintain an industry in Louisiana which can not produce one-tenth of the sugar used by the American people. [Applause.]

Mr. RANSDELL of Louisiana. Is it not a fact that we have maintained a very considerable duty on this Louisiana industry since 1789 without one single moment of delay, and is it not a further fact that the Democratic Party in its last expression of opinion at Denver declared for a gradual reduction of the tariff, to reduce it to a revenue basis, and never has declared for complete and absolute destruction of any great business which has been fostered for all of these years? [Applause.]

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, answering the gentleman's question, as I stated, I do not know whether the removal of this tax will destroy the sugar industry in Louisiana or not. I hope it will not, but I do say that with sugar in Porto Rico, sugar in the Philippines, sugar in our continental possessions, it does not represent an economic truth for the gentleman from Louisiana or myself to stand for a position that necessitates the American people to be taxed over $100,000,000 in order to foster an industry, which the gentleman in his own statement admits has been fostered for a hundred years and which he says can not survive without the protecting hand of the Government of the United States. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, does the gentleman desire more time so that he can answer questions of gentlemen on the floor?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I will say to the gentleman from Illinois that, as the time will be limited, I do not think any gentleman ought to occupy more than an hour. I would object to any other gentleman occupying more than an hour, and I shall not ask it myself.

Mr. MANN. As the gentleman himself introduces the bill and undertakes to explain it, it seems to me he ought to have time enough in which to answer any questions which any gentleman may desire to ask.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I think I have fully explained the bill to those who want an explanation.

Mr. MANN. I want an explanation. Perhaps I am not intelligent enough to understand the gentleman's explanation.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. Chairman, I demand the regular order.

Mr. MANN. There are many gentlemen who require more time. If the gentleman does not want to answer or give information, we will not compel him to.

Mr. McCALL. Mr. Chairman, I do not know the purpose of the incursion that the gentleman from Alabama made into American history, but its effect clearly was to prove that this bill was in violation of every Democratic precedent which has ever been set upon the subject of sugar. He demonstrated absolutely that we have had a tax upon sugar in this country ever since the formation of the Constitution, except during two or three years under the operation of a Republican tariff bill. He now announces a theory which is novel in the history of his party and which is violated by every chancellor of the exchequer in the civilized world, and claims that sugar should be put absolutely upon the free list. I submit that the distinguished gentleman has entirely failed to give any reason in a broad discussion of the financial aspect of this bill why we should depart from the almost uniform practice in the United States and from the uniform custom of foreign nations and put sugar upon the free list.

The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD], who is the very worthy leader of his party, yesterday had a colloquy with the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE], the ranking Republican member upon the Committee on Ways and Means, and it seemed to me that their attitude at that time very clearly illustrated the difference in the methods of those gentlemen with regard to dealing with tariff matters. The gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] was in favor of discussing a question of this great importance and the gentleman from Alabama was suddenly possessed with a notion that it was necessary to pass it practically without debate.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] has shown himself a very prudent steward of the Treasury. When he brought in his tariff bill two years ago he found a great deficit in the Treasury, and he had in mind to meet the main purpose of a tariff bill, and under the operation of the law which bears his name that deficit was dispelled and gave way to a surplus of something like $30,000,000 a year. He did this by virtue of a law which under its first full year of operation has shown that it levied a lower average ad valorem upon all imports coming into the country than that of any fiscal year since 1843, when the fiscal year was established, with the exception of those four omnious and abnormal years preceding the Civil War.

The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] brings in this bill, airily dispensing with this $53,000,000 of revenue which the country to-day is enjoying under the Payne tariff bill. And if you add to that the breach that he has made in the Treasury wall by previous tariff bills, you will find that in the aggregate he has taken by all his bills, if they should become laws, something like a hundred million dollars from the Treasury, and he proposes to repair this breach by the passage of another bill which he has just reported to the House.

I do not propose to discuss at any length the economic features of the sugar tariff. That will be done by others of my colleagues. But there has been no proof brought to show that any of the sugar duty which is to be remitted would escape the importer, the refiner, the jobber, the retailer, and the foreign producer, and reach the ultimate consumer of sugar in the United States. The gentleman from Alabama displays a good deal of courage in view of our experience in the very recent past in removing tariff duties, when he assumes to prophesy that the total amount of the reduction which he makes by the proposed bill will reach the consumers of American sugars. Undoubtedly by opening up our markets and by removing obstacles which exist to the importation of foreign sugar, foreign countries could not put their surplus here as easily as they do now. But by the removal of these obstacles there would be a rise in the outside world's price of sugar. And then when you take into acccount the enterprising gentlemen who stand between the customs house and the man who consumes, you can easily see that no great amount of this reduction of duty is likely to reach the consumer.

I wish to say a word with reference to the operation of this bill upon Cuba. We are under peculiar obligations with regard to Cuba. In 1903 we gave to the sugar of that island a preferential entrance into our market of 20 per cent from our general duty, and that has been a great boon to the island. It has stood between her and revolution. It has added to her prosperity. We are under obligations to her not to admit sugar free of duty, because she agreed if we would admit her sugar at 20 per cent from our regular rate, she in turn would admit the products of the United States at a reduction of from 20 to 40 per cent below her general tariff rates. The result of that arrangement has been that in 1903 the imports into Cuba from the United States amounted to some $21,000,000, and in the year just closed they amounted to $60,000,000. That is, they have increased about 300 per cent under the operation of this treaty. The two largest items in the exports of the United States and Cuba are the items of breadstuffs and meat, so that if we terminate this arrangement by taking away the preference which Cuba has in our market, we necessarily take away at the same time the preference which Cuba has given us as a consideration for that. We shall thus especially strike the American farmer. He will get it "coming and going." He will be harmed by the removal of the duty on sugar, and also by the destruction of this very important item in our trade with Cuba.

The same thing might be said, although perhaps it is not so important, in the case of Porto Rico. The remission of duty which we made to Porto Rico has contributed materially to the welfare of that island, and if her sugar is to be upon the same basis as the sugar of all the world it will to that extent be an injury to Porto Rico.

But what I particularly wish to discuss during the few minutes in which I shall engage the attention of the committee is the substitute which the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] offers for the sugar duty. As the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] terms it, these two bills are twins. They came into the world together, and you can not consider the one without considering the other.

Mr. KITCHEN. Before you get on the other bill, in regard to the excise tax, if it would not interrupt you, I would like to ask you one question.

Mr. McCALL. Go ahead.

Mr. KITCHIN. I believe you say you are against free sugar. When you were a young Member of this House, in the Fifty-third Congress, did you not vote to free the people from the tax on sugar and relieve them from that burden?

Mr. McCALL. I can look up my record and tell the gentleman how I voted on any bill; but I do not remember how I voted on the amendments that were offered to the Wilson tariff bill. I was about to say a word with regard to the substitute that is proposed by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD]. He says that he has a bill which he estimates, with a great deal of optimism, is going to produce some $60,000,000 of revenue a year, or $8,000,000 more than the amount we are now deriving from sugar. I think those who will take the pains to read the views of the minority, which were presented to the House to-day by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH], will see clearly demonstrated there that this excise bill, or income bill, or whatever it may be, will not yield above $20,000,000 a year.

Why, gentlemen have made no investigation. They have relied entirely upon the imagination. In the minority views you will find a discussion of that question, and upon the best available authority given I doubt, even if it could be enforced in every particular, that it would yield as much as $20,000,000 a year. But this tax which is proposed to take the place of the sugar duty is framed with reference to the decision of the Supreme Court upon the corporation tax imposed by the Payne bill. And they endeavor to phrase this law so as to apply to an individual almost in the same nomenclature as the decision applies to a corporation.

Why, the purpose is transparent. It is a bold attempt to violate the Constitution of the United States. They could much better have accomplished their purpose if they had put into this bill a declaration that "every inhabitant of the United States is hereby made a body politic and a corporation subject to all the provisions of the corporation tax of 1909."

But let us look at this tax for a moment. In the first place, to whom would it apply? It is ostensibly directed to the doing of business. To any individual or firm who has an annual income from doing business of $5,000 this income tax would apply. What is doing business? That has been adjudicated by the Supreme Court by a decision in a case rendered on the same day that the corporation-tax law was upheld. In the case of the Minneapolis Syndicate the Supreme Court held that a corporation existing simply to hold the title to real estate and to receive the income from it and to distribute that income among its stockholders was not doing business within the meaning of the act.

Now, if a corporation doing those things at which this law was leveled was not doing business, much less is an individual doing business who simply draws income from his rents, from bonds, from mortgages, and in the usual way in which men get income, without any effort, from inherited wealth; so that if you look at this bill closely you will find it is not a tax upon accumulated wealth at all. Andrew Carnegie would pay nothing under this bill. James J. Hill, John D. Rockefeller, and others would pay nothing under it. None of those gentlemen would pay anything under it who have made life merry in the last few months before the committee of which our great and good friend from Kentucky [Mr. STANLEY] is the chairman. Accumulated wealth is excepted from the operation of this law, and it is purely a tax upon industry.

To call a man who is cutting off coupons and receiving the payment of interest money "a man in business" is doing violence to the term. He is no more doing business than a little bird is doing business which holds out its bill and receives a worm from the bill of its mother bird. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin?

Mr. McCALL. With pleasure.

Mr. COOPER. As to the point of doing business, would it not be said that Mr. Carnegie has retired from business?

Mr. McCALL. Yes. Of him it would be said that he had retired from business. Now, what they are trying to do in this bill, and what I am trying to point out, is simply that they level a tax against industry, against the right to work, against the men who are following out the command, or the curse, or whatever it may be called, to earn their bread by the sweat of their brow, and they take and segregate a comparatively small class of men for purposes of taxation.

This bill is not broadly framed, as is the income tax of England, where incomes of £160 are taxed. But they segregate a relatively small number of men, one or two or three hundred thousand, and they take and carefully remove to a place of safety from that group those who are living upon inherited or accumulated wealth; and they tax the men whose shoulders are to the wheel and who are pushing forward the industries of the country and furnishing means of livelihood to millions.

There is another thing that the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD], I think, has neglected to consider in proposing this bill. He has ignored the history of his party by removing the tax upon sugar. He is also ignoring the traditional position of his party with reference to the importance of the local governments under our system. The States and the counties and municipalities bear the great burdens of government. They maintain the police, they make the roads, they protect against fire, they educate the children. They have reason to spend $5 where this great central authority at Washington has the need to spend $1. In the town in which I live, which has less than 10,000 people, our appropriations for the expenditures this year amount to about $27 a head for every one of the population. The appropriations and expenditures of the National Government, omitting the postal receipts, where special service is rendered, are only about $7 a head. That is, we spend about four times as much in maintaining our local government there, four times as much per capita, as it costs to run the Government of the United States.

Now, this central Government has the sole power to levy duties upon imports. That power has been taken away from the States. The central Government has other great sources of revenue. It can impose direct taxes, providing it follows the rule of apportionment, and yet it goes galloping through all the fields of revenue, and in so doing it attacks sources that heretofore have been especially reserved for the States. It would make it much more difficult for the States and the counties and the cities to secure in the future the money that is necessary to run them.

It can hardly be contended that so much of this tax as is a tax upon the income of real estate is constitutional. That would be directly in the teeth of a decision of the Supreme Court. When you exclude the income from real estate, when you take away the income from stocks, which are now taxed under the corporation act or corporation tax law, and which by the terms of this bill are not taxable, it is not possible for you to figure up $10,000,000 that you are going to get out of the pending bill instead of the magnificent sum of $60,000,000 which the gentleman from Alabama proposes, and that is such a material part of the bill that upon the decision of the court upon the Wilson income-tax provision it would probably vitiate the whole bill and make it all unconstitutional.

This bill is sure to be followed by an increase in the force of Federal inspectors, who will exercise an inquisition over the affairs of every man in the country. The corporations keep books. They are public institutions. It is a simple thing for them to make a return. It is a simple thing to inspect their books. But under this law every man in the United States is liable to have the sources of his income revealed; his books, if he keeps them—and most of us do not keep them—and all his affairs inquired into by inspectors sent out from Washington, and this would produce an inquisition. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. McCALL. Mr. Chairman, I should like to have leave to put in the RECORD some papers received from the Department of State; a letter from Mr. Huntington Wilson and from Mr. C. M. Pepper, giving the details of our trade with Cuba and Porto Rico. I should like to have leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCALL] asks leave to extend his remarks in the RECORD by the insertion of certain papers named. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Following are the documents referred to:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, March 6, 1912.

Hon. S. W. McCALL,
House of Representatives.

DEAR MR. McCALL: The department is transmitting under separate cover various data relating to sugar and the Cuban reciprocity treaty in the form in which it can be printed without causing confusion. As you will see the statistics show a steady growth in our percentage of Cuban trade since the reciprocity treaty went into effect. Unfortunately the Cuban official detailed statistics are very much behind in date. They are, nevertheless, the necessary basis of measuring the exact imports of the various articles and the preference which is given to them. I think it quite allowable, however, to measure the total of our trade with Cuba, which is favorably affected by the treaty and which would lose the preference under free sugar, by our own export statistics, and, accordingly, have included the table. While the figures based on the latest Cuban table would show a little less than $40,000,000 worth of goods the actual amount at the present time is $60,000,000. As you will see by running through the articles all sections of the country are benefited under the preference, the South in relation to cotton goods, cottonseed oil, and various other articles of local production.

Canada would benefit very materially at our expense by the Cuban preference on flour, fish, and lumber being removed; Belgium and Great Britain by the removal of the preference on sugar machinery. A good many of the articles which come under machinery are manufactured in the South. I have been told that a southern concern, located I think at Atlanta, has the best chance for sugar machinery, but have not had an opportunity to verify this fact. Boots and shoes are of special interest to the trade which centers in St. Louis, and which probably does much more business with Cuba than do your New England factories.

Sincerely, yours,

CHARLES M. PEPPER.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, March 6, 1912.

Hon. S. W. McCALL,
House of Representatives.

SIR: Replying to your request for information relative to the trade of Cuba with the United States and other countries since the reciprocity treaty between the United States and Cuba became effective, I have the honor to state that this treaty has been in force since December 27, 1903. The fiscal year ending June 30, 1905, is, therefore, the first full year in which its operations can be given and, consequently, this period is taken as the basis in the comparative statement showing the share of Cuba's import trade enjoyed by leading nations. From these statistics it appears that in 1905 the United States share in the total Cuban imports was 40.7 per cent and in 1910, 50.6 per cent.

The commerce of Cuba with the United States and with the world as related to articles by countries of origin and destination is indicated in the summarized table, which also shows the preponderant share of Cuban exports taken by the United States.

Relative to the preferential rates of duty accorded to the United States by Cuba under the treaty a statement is submitted showing the class of commodities admitted at a reduction of 20 per cent from general duties, 25 per cent, 30 per cent, and 40 per cent, and the value of these imports for the year ended June 30, 1909. From this it appears that the value of the American imports for the year given admitted at 20 per cent reduction was approximately $22,357,000; at 25 per cent reduction, $3,321,000; at 30 per cent reduction, $11,849,000; at 40 per cent reduction, $680,000; or a total of $38,207,000.

The detailed official Cuban statistics since 1909 are not yet available. The growth in American imports into Cuba since 1909 may, however, be determined relatively from the statistics of domestic exports from the United States to Cuba during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1911. It appears from this statement that the total domestic exports from the United States to Cuba in that year amounted to $59,963,000.

In accordance with your request for data concerning the exports of sugar and coffee from Porto Rico, tabular statements are submitted covering those subjects. I have the honor to be, sir,

Your obedient servant,

HUNTINGTON WILSON,
Acting Secretary of State.

(Inclosure: (A) Cuba's import trade by leading nations; (B) Commerce of Cuba with the United States and with the world; (C) United States commerce with Cuba; (D) Imports into Cuba from the United States; (E) United States exports to Cuba; (F) Exports of sugar from Porto Rico; (G) Exports of coffee from Porto Rico.)

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, about 30 days ago, in the city of Paris, the people of France celebrated the one hundredth anniversary of the establishment of the beet-sugar industry of that country. Only a few days ago the people of England celebrated the establishment of the first beet-sugar factory built in England. To-day the House of Representatives of the United States is celebrating the first serious attempt to destroy that magnificent industry in the United States. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The Republican Party for the past 52 years have controlled the legislation of the Federal Government of the United States, and the only two years that our Democratic friends have had absolute control of Federal legislation in this country were the only two poor, lean years that we have experienced in that time.

Mr. Chairman, I want to call the attention of Members of this House to the splendid compliment paid by the majority members of the Ways and Means Committee in their report to this magnificent beet-sugar industry.

On the first page of their report they say:

The growth of the beet-sugar industry in this country during the decade ended with 1909 is shown in Table 1 to have increased 117 per cent in number of establishments, 399 per cent in the quantity of beets used in the manufacture of sugar, and the value of the products has increased almost sevenfold.

What greater compliment could be paid to this great beet-sugar industry in this country, even by its friends?

On page 5 of the same report they say:

In the report of the same investigating committee (p. 22) we find that the cost of manufacturing beet sugar is lowest in Germany, and, according to the best-known sugar experts, the cost of producing a pound of raw sugar there ranged from 1.96 to 2.07 cents. Adding a refining cost of four-tenths of a cent per pound, the cost of producing refined beet sugar in Germany would average 2.415 cents per pound. The average cost of producing beet sugar as computed from the returns of the 11 plants in which the American Sugar Refining Co. is interested is shown not to exceed 3.54 cents per pound. This difference between the German and American costs more than offsets the freight charges from Germany to the United States. In this connection the following price figures for the countries named lend considerable interest.

Mr. Chairman, after showing the cost of production of refined beet sugar in Germany to be $2.41½ per hundred pounds, and adding the freight from Germany to New York, 12 cents per hundred pounds, which sum totals $2.53½ per 100 pounds, and deducting this sum from $3.54, which is the cost of production of beet sugar in this country, we have a difference of a fraction over 1 cent per pound. Yet in another paragraph in their report they say that this bill, if enacted into law, will not, in the slightest, injure the beet-sugar industry of the United States.

Mr. Chairman, they quote from Mr. Willett of the firm of Willett & Gray, of New York, the greatest sugar statisticians in this country and perhaps the greatest in the world.

Mr. Willett was called before the Sugar Investigating Committee by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK], the chairman of the committee. Mr. Willett is an estimable gentleman and perhaps the greatest sugar statistician in the world. I have great admiration for the gentleman. If in the majority report the next two lines of Mr. Willett's statement had not been omitted they would, in a sense, contradict the two lines quoted.

Later on I shall call attention to a question or two put to Mr. Willett by myself when that gentleman was before our committee. I asked him whether he had not hastily made the statement that the duty is added to the cost to the consumers of sugar in this country. I called his attention to a report made by the Tariff Board, wherein the board shows where they had purchased in England 16 samples of goods and paid for those goods $41.84, and that the duty as provided for in existing law on those 16 samples was $76.80. Adding the duty to the foreign cost, those goods laid down in our markets would cost $118.64. I called Mr. Willett's attention to the fact that the Tariff Board reports that similar articles produced in this country are selling, not for $118.64, but for $69.75, a sum far below the foreign cost with the duty added. Assuming that statement to be correct, can you say that the duty is added to the cost of the article when consumed in this country? He asked to be given time to consider that question. I gladly consented, and the gentleman took a week to file his answer. When he came back, let me show you what he said. On page 3977 he answered that question, as follows:

The consumer in 1910 paid $1.151 per 100 pounds of the $1.348 duty on Cuban sugar. By Table No. 6B, page 3551, similar comparisons can be made for each year, showing that the consumer has not paid full duty in any year of reciprocity, while in the years preceding reciprocity the consumer naturally paid the full duty.

The effect of giving reciprocity to Cuba appears to have been to change the old statement that "the consumer pays the full duty" on sugar except in such cases as the consumer insists upon a certain specified sugar that he can not get without paying the full duty assessed upon it and which, as a matter of fact, is imported to a very small extent.

As exists in the woolen fabric trade, may not—at the time when the production of domestic and insular and Cuban sugars exceed the requirements for consumption—a fierce competition between these interests reduce the price of sugar to the consumer far below the full tariff protection if it remains unnchanged?

In all these analyses I reach the same conclusion—that to decrease the price of sugar to the consumer, increase the domestic production as rapidly as possible.

[Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. Claus Spreckels is the president of the Federal Sugar Refining Co. of New York, of which Mr. Frank C. Lowery is the sales agent. He has been sending broadcast, through barrels and packages of sugar, the yellow journal which I hold in my hand, asking consumers of sugar to appeal to their Congressmen to save the poor suffering consumer from the ravages of the trusts. He asks us to remove the duty from foreign imported sugar and save the suffering people, the consumers. Mr. HINDS, a member of the sugar investigating committee, asked Mr. Spreckels the following questions:

Mr. HINDS. In other words, perhaps, you would take it [the tariff] all off, would you not, and have free trade?

Mr. SPRECKELS. I would have free trade. (Part 27, p. 2277 of hearings.)

Mr. HINDS. You would have free trade in sugar?

Mr. SPRECKELS. Absolutely. (Part 27, p. 2278 of hearings.)

I am quoting the testimony given by nearly every man who appeared before that investigating committee interested in the refining of foreign imported sugar to show you whether or not they are in favor of this free-sugar bill introduced here by our Democratic friends, and I propose to prove it. This testimony was all taken under oath.

Now comes Mr. Gilmore, a representative of the Arbuckle Bros. Sugar Refining Co., which is reported by that committee to be an ally of the great American Sugar Refining Co.:

Mr. MADISON. In other words, you think the thing to do is to take off the duty, and that it would be to your advantage to take it off as a refiner of cane sugar?

Mr. GILMORE. Yes, sir.

Mr. MADISON. And you would advocate the taking off of the duty?

Mr. GILMORE. I would personally. I am only speaking now personally. (Part 14, p. 1169, of hearings.)

Then Mr. Jamison, also a partner of Arbuckle Bros., testified as follows:

Mr. RAKER. How would it affect you if there was no tax on the importation of sugar—raw sugar?

Mr. JAMISON. I think it would enable us to run more constantly.

Mr. RAKER. What do you mean by that, now?

Mr. JAMISON. To keep up the capacity.

Mr. RAKER. Will you explain it?

Mr. JAMISON. I mean we would be able to sell more sugar.

Mr. RAKER. Do you not have a supply all the time?

Mr. JAMISON. Well, we are not able to run full at all times.

Mr. RAKER. Because of the way raw sugar is shipped into the United States?

Mr. JAMISON. Oh, no; on account of the beet product.

[Applause on the Republican side.]

That is one of the firms that this bill evidently is in the interest of. At this point our good chairman, an estimable, pleasant gentleman, very courteous, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK], became interested and he said:

Is it really on account of the competition, Mr. Atkins?

I will say that Mr. Atkins is the present vice president of the American Sugar Refining Co., and its real manager. He owns a sugar plantation in Cuba from which he produced 30,000 tons of raw sugar last year, which he sent to this country and which was refined by the firm of which he is the vice president and manager.

Mr. ATKINS. I think so. There is very much larger capacity than is required, and the beet sugars are taking away the trade of the refiners year by year.

Mr. MADISON. So you can hardly ascribe it to the fierce competition by the beet-sugar people?

Mr. ATKINS. Certainly. All that beet sugar gets on the market at a certain season of the year. It is all produced in about three months' time.

Now, gentlemen, listen to what follows:

They all want to market it just as rapidly as possible, and in order to do that, they come to the eastern points. California sugar goes into Chicago, and Michigan sugar into Buffalo and Pittsburgh, and eastern refineries, not only the American Sugar Refining Co. but the others, have to reduce their output or close down until the beet sugars are out of the way.

[Applause on the Republican side.]

This is the vice president of the American Sugar Refining Co. testifying, which company you propose to relieve of their portion of this $52,800,000 of revenue now collected by the Federal Government.

I want to say here that more than one of the great sugar trusts of the Atlantic coast in the last two years have been prosecuted by the Federal Government, and through confession or by decisions of the courts have disgorged millions of dollars of which they robbed the Federal Government in underweighing and in misrepresenting the values of sugar. Those are the people, those are the only people this bill will aid, if enacted into law. [Applause on the Republican side.] Mr. Atkins continues:

Any refining that is done between the 1st of October and the 1st of January is done without any profit, and very often at a loss.

That is when they are competing with domestic sugars.

Mr. MADISON. You stated a moment ago, Mr. Atkins, or this morning, that you decidedly opposed going into the beet-sugar business. What was the reason of that?

Listen to Mr. Atkins's reply. I will show you, if I have the time, that the American Sugar Refining Co. owns stock in several of the beet-sugar factories of this country, some in Michigan, some in Colorado, some in Utah and Idaho, and some in California, but in this connection the fact was developed that in no case are they dominating the management or the production or controlling the territory in which beets are raised or where sugar is disposed of. Here is Mr. Atkins's complaint and his reason for wanting to sell their stock and get out of the beet-sugar business:

The beet-sugar business was a competitive business. It is produced in the western territories where our markets lay. That is, I say our markets—

He caught himself there—

I mean the markets of the refiners—the various refiners. As that industry grew—and I foresaw that it would grow rapidly—I believed that it would reduce the volume of business, not only of the American Sugar Refining Co., but of all the refiners on the Atlantic coast. And, although we had millions of dollars invested in the business there, we were building up a competitive business, one that would compete with ourselves and one which was bound to get away from us. We could not control it in the end. [Applause on Republican side.]

Therefore they wanted to sell their stock in the company. An industry that they could not control they wanted to dispose of.

Mr. Chairman, Dr. Wiley, a gentleman well known to us all, the expert from the Agricultural Department, was called upon to give testimony before that committee, and I want to read just a portion of his testimony. At great length the committee questioned him upon the necessity of having remain in the law this sixteen Dutch standard color test, and so on. He brought before the committee a polariscope, which he produced to demonstrate to us what was being done in the matter of testing sugar values by the polariscope. On the question being asked him about the importance of this great industry, Dr. Wiley said:

But the point I am making is this: That under the present system we are absolutely dependent upon the refiners of this country for our sugar. They have taught us to use white sugar, and we will not take any other kind, and, therefore, they can fix any price thereon they please. I will say, on the question of price, that I think they are reasonable about it, and do not try to squeeze us so very much, but at the same time whenever the Louisiana sugar comes in the price of sugar drops, and whenever the crop of beet sugar comes in the price of sugar drops. Again, as soon as the Louisiana and beet-sugar men sell all they have to sell, the price of sugar goes up again.

[Applause on Republican side.]

And yet, my friends, after the majority members of the Committee on Ways and Means have shown conclusively that the cost of production of beet sugar in this country, as compared with Europe, is more than 1 cent per pound, and after reviewing such testimony as has been given by experts which was at their disposal, they say that the industry is not going to be injured. I asked the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] a while ago a question, if their contention—the Democrats—were true, why it was that the price of sugar last summer during the months of July, August, September, and October had advanced away beyond all reasonable price? He answered that it was undoubtedly due to the Payne tariff law, for which I stood, I wish now to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that the Payne law has not changed in any respect since 1909, and prior to July the price of sugar in this country was fixed by the competitive industry, the domestic industry, and during those four months, when there was no domestic sugar upon the market, the American Sugar Refining Co. advanced their prices to $6.75 per hundred pounds on refined sugar, free on board, New York, and the Federal Sugar Refining Co., of which Mr. Spreckels is the president, and this yellow-journal man the sales agent, Lowry, advanced their price to $7.25 per hundred pounds for refined sugar, while the Arbuckle Bros. advanced their price to $7.50 per hundred pounds. My friends, these refiners stated that their prices were based upon the quotations of European raws on the markets of New York.

Who made those prices on European raws in the city of New York? Why, the refiners. I will show you what the facts are in respect to that. I went to the Bureau of Statisics and secured from that office a list of all sugars imported into this country for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1911, and for the months of July, August, September, and October, 1911. They gave me the importations in quantities and values, taken from the invoices on those imports of sugar coming into every port of entry in the United States from every country in the world at a time when those high prices prevailed, which I have stated were as high as $7.50 per 100 pounds. It was shown that in the month of September the highest price prevailed for raw sugar f. o. b. New York, the price being $2.74 per 100 pounds. The highest price of imported sugar during the whole year, I say, was in September, and instead of being as quoted by the refiners of New York, $6.40, European quotations, they were purchasing their raw sugar for an average of $2.74 per 100 pounds. Add to this the Cuban duty, because the largest portion of that sugar came from Cuba, and the major portion of the balance of it came from our insular possessions—add to $2.74 $1.348, which is the duty on Cuban sugar, and to that add 40 cents per 100 pounds for refining and 60 cents per 100 pounds for profit, and that sugar could have been sold to the consumers of this country for 5 cents a pound, and yet some of the refiners were asking the American people $7.50 per 100 pounds wholesale. What happened in October?

In October our beet-sugar crop in the State of Michigan came onto the market and was sold at $5.55 per 100 pounds, and in less than 30 days those hydra-headed monsters over there in New York were obliged to lower their price and quote refined foreign-made sugars at $5.75, or 20 points above the price of beet sugar. I will say that from 20 to 40 points difference is maintained by them at all times between the price obtained for domestic sugar and the price obtained for refined sugar made from imported sugars.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORDNEY. Certainly.

Mr. GARRETT. Is it not fair to state that those sales of beet sugar had been made from 20 to 40 days in advance?

Mr. FORDNEY. It is fair to say that all sugars are sold on 30 days' delivery, and it was stated by this man Lowry—and I want to call your attention to some of his testimony and leave it to you as to whether or not he appeared to be a fair-minded man and an honest witness—that the beet-sugar people had sold ahead and had been caught in a trap and had not received the full benefit of the advance in the price of sugar. This statement is contradicted by the beet-sugar men, and I have here, if I have the time to show you, the figures where the Michigan Sugar Co. had sold up to the 20th day of November. I went to their office in the city of Detroit and examined their sales book and their invoices—they turned them over to me for examination—and another gentleman and myself took from their records their total sales made up to that date, the 18th of November, 1911.

And out of about 850 cars sold by them 809 cars had been sold at $5.55 per hundred pounds, and the balance at a slight advance. They deny Lowry's statement that they had sold ahead. They deny that they were caught in a trap on prices. I have in my possession a letter from the general manager of that company and two citizens of my home town, whom I know, Mr. George B. Morley, a banker, and Mr. Benton Hanchett, one of our high-class lawyers of the State, who state that the directors of the Michigan Sugar Co., on the 11th day of September, met in the company's office at Detroit and discussed the question as to the price at which they should sell their sugar; and it was agreed there and then by 16 out of 17 directors that the price of $5.55 per hundred pounds should be their selling price, which price would give them a reasonable profit, and they should pay no attention at all to the wildcat prices asked by the refiners in New York.

Mr. J. M. C. SMITH. While you are upon the question of the high price of sugar during the fall of 1911, will you please give us your opinion of, or the reason for, the increase of the price of sugar last fall?

Mr. FORDNEY. I will be pleased to say this, gentlemen, that the increased price asked by the refiners of this country was based upon the statements made by them that the world's production of sugar was short about one million and a half tons, and on that report, I say, they based their prices. They were quoting European raws as offered on the New York market, but none came in from Europe. Search the records, to which I have referred, the importation from all the countries of the world, and you will not find a pound of sugar during these 16 months coming from Europe, except confectionery and high-priced sugar. What transpired? There was no change in the condition of the world's crop of sugar between July and November, except, my friends—and bear this in mind—the domestic crop of the United States had come onto the market.

Mr. WARBURTON. May I interrupt the gentleman?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes, sir.

Mr. WARBURTON. At the same time that the domestic beet sugar comes on the market, is it not true that there comes on the market from Europe the full beet-sugar crop there, which amounts to about 8,000,000,000 pounds?

Mr. FORDNEY. I will ask a question in answer to the gentleman's question. Are you for or against this Democratic free-trade bill?

Mr. WARBURTON. I am for this bill. I introduced it myself.

Mr. FORDNEY. I have known you for about a year, my friend, and I will answer your question before I get through. Your home is in Tacoma, Wash., in which city no more loyal Republicans ever lived than are to be found there, and during the year I have known you I have never heard a word from your lips supporting a Republican policy or a Republican measure. [Applause.]

Mr. WARBURTON. May I suggest, in answer to the gentleman——

Mr. FORDNEY. You can do it in your own time.

Mr. WARBURTON. I have not any time, but I would like to answer the gentleman's one question there.

Mr. FORDNEY. I decline to yield. I will say to the gentleman that the crops from the sections from which our supply comes, from Porto Rico, Hawaii, the Philippine Islands, Cuba, Louisiana, and the domestic beet-sugar crop, come onto the market practically all at the same time.

And in answer to the gentleman's question, let me say that in 1897, a little over a decade ago, we imported from Europe and from other foreign countries full duty-paying sugar to the amount of 74.1 per cent of our consumption.

In the year of 1910 we imported full duty-paying sugar to the extent of but 2.1 per cent.

Mr. WARBURTON. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. FORDNEY. I decline to yield to the gentleman. In 1897, when the Dingley law was adopted, it gave adequate protection to this domestic-sugar industry. We then produced from beets only 2 per cent of our total consumption in the United States. Four years later, in 1901 or 1902, or a little over a decade ago, we produced 7 per cent of the consumption of sugar in this country from beets, and this year, gentlemen, based on this year's consumption, we are producing from beets in this country 15 per cent of the consumption of sugar in the United States. In the last decade the total consumption of sugar in the United States has increased 30 per cent.

Mr. WARBURTON rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Michigan yield to the gentleman from Washington?

Mr. FORDNEY. I will.

Mr. WARBURTON. I do not think the gentleman has answered my question, but I want to ask another. He just stated that our per cent of production equals 15 per cent of our consumption. I have it from the Bureau of Statistics that this year our production will be 1,026,000,000 pounds, and our consumption almost equal to it.

Mr. FORDNEY. Get that out of your system in your own time, if you please.

Mr. WARBURTON. Is that correct?

Mr. FORDNEY. The gentleman quotes in pounds. I have never studied sugar statistics in anything but tons.

Mr. KITCHIN. In the Statistical Abstract, issued by the Department of Commerce and Labor, it is stated in pounds.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. Will the gentleman explain how it is there is such a discrepancy between the gentleman's statement and that of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD], our leader, concerning the amount of production of beet sugar in this country in 1911? I understand you claim there is twice as much as he claimed.

Mr. FORDNEY. I will give you the production in 1911. The production of beet sugar in the United States in 1911 was 455,000 long tons. The crop this year is estimated at 540,000 long tons, and the crop of Louisiana sugar 325,000 long tons. We will import from Cuba this year about one-half of the sugar consumed in the United States, as we did last year, and the balance of our consumption from our insular possessions. Since we have had Porto Rico, the Philippines, and Hawaii under the control of the United States and given them free trade on their sugar their crop has increased as follows: In Porto Rico from 38,000 tons to 300,000 tons this year; from the Philippines last year we imported 168,000 tons, if I have it correctly; and in the neighborhood of 500,000 tons from the Hawaiian Islands.

I have it here, and I can show it very quickly, the importations of sugar. Here I have the quantity of sugar produced in the United States from 1891 and 1892 down to 1912. In long tons it is as follows: Beginning with 6,000 tons, the next year it is 13,500; the next year, 22,500; the next year, 22,500; then, 33,000 tons, 42,000 tons, 45,000 tons; the next year year we drop back to 36,000 tons; next year, 82,000 tons; 86,000 tons; 192,000 tons; 219,000 tons; 232,000; 235,000 tons; 316,000 tons; 433,000 tons; 463,000 tons; 504,000 tons; and now, 540,000 tons. That is the production of beet sugar in the United States since 1891 and 1892.

Gentlemen, while we are producing from beets this year in the United States 15 per cent of our total consumption of sugar, that sugar is on the market only about four or five months of the year. Therefore, my friends, it constitutes about 36 per cent of our consumption in the United States during those four or five months. And as the territory in which beet sugar is sold is limited to a territory not east of Buffalo or Pittsburgh, but little south of the Ohio River, or southwest beyond St. Louis, Mo., during the time the beet sugar is on the market in that territory it supplies or furnishes the people of the United States 70 per cent of their consumption during those months. And do you think for an instant, my friends, that the American Sugar Refining Co., and the Arbuckle Bros., and the Federal Sugar Refining Co., and the Warner Sugar Refining Co., which constitute nearly all the refineries on the Atlantic coast, and the small producers on the Pacific coast can fix different prices in the territories to which beet sugar does not go? No, my friends. Beet sugar supplies 70 per cent of the consumption during those four or five months in the territory in which it is marketed, and it fixes the price of sugar for all the consumers in the United States during that period of time?

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. May I ask a question?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. In your opinion, what effect would this bill have on the sugar industry of the country?

Mr. FORDNEY. If this bill becomes a law, there is one of two things must happen, gentlemen. If the domestic industry is permitted to exist, then the Sugar Trust of this country, which refines the balance of our sugar, must hold the price up where it is to-day and receive themselves the benefit of this reduction of duty, and if they put the price down where they can still make a reasonable profit after the duty is removed, the domestic industry must cease at once and go out of existence.

There is invested in the beet-sugar industry of the United States about $100,000,000, and a like amount is invested in the cane-sugar industry in the South.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Michigan yield to the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes, sir.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I do not know whether the gentleman has stated this or not, but I would like to know how the price of sugar in this country to the consumer compares with the price in other countries, if the gentleman can state?

Mr. FORDNEY. I have a table here, prepared by Secretary Knox, which is very interesting. It is a public document. I am sorry that I have not the average rates figured out. But offhand I would state to the gentleman from Ohio that, taking all Europe, which is the chief beet-sugar country outside the United States, a dollar in money will buy more sugar in United States markets than in any other country, with the single exception of England, except at stated times, when our price is abnormally high, as was the case last summer, when the price in Germany and Sweden was lower. But only at a time when our sugar prices are abnormally high can the purchaser of sugar get as many pounds for a dollar in any country under the sun as he can in the United States, with the exception of England; and England has a duty of 40 cents on 100 pounds.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORDNEY. Let me go a little further. Taking the report of a gentleman who came here, representing the London Board of Trade, to study labor conditions in the United States as compared with those in England, he reports that where an Englishman earns $1 an American laborer engaged at the same class of labor earns $2.40, and where the Englishman spends $1 for his living the American, at the same standard of living in this country, spends $1.38 and has a profit of $1.02 remaining.

But taking the price of refined sugar as quoted in New York on the 15th day of February last and as quoted on the same day in England and comparing those two prices, the Englishman can purchase 21 pounds of sugar for $1 while the American can purchase for his $2.40 43 pounds of sugar, or, in other words, he can purchase more than twice as much sugar with his day's earnings in the United States as an Englishman can who buys sugar at a less rate per pound than our consumers pay for sugar here.

Now I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. HAUGEN. The gentleman stated a moment ago that there was $100,000,000 invested in the beet-sugar industry in this country. Can the gentleman give the amount that is held by the so-called Sugar Trust?

Mr. FORDNEY. I can come pretty near it. I will not attempt to be absolutely correct. In the State of Michigan we have the Michigan Sugar Co., which company owns 6 out of the 17 factories in that State. The testimony taken before the sugar investigating committee shows that the American Sugar Refining Co., acting in accordance with the policy advocated by Mr. Atkins, its vice president, is disposing of its beet-sugar interests, and, at the time we made our report, that company owned in Michigan factories 34.9 per cent of the total stock of that company. In Colorado, if I am correct, they owned something like 50 per cent of the stock of the Great Western Sugar Co. I think the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK] can give those figures more accurately than I. In California the holdings of the American Sugar Refining Co. bear another and smaller ratio to the total amount of stock. They have sold their interest in the Carver County Sugar Co. in Minnesota, and they have sold all their interest in the company that was formed out of the purchase of the Oxnard factory in California—as I remember it, the California Sugar Co. All those interests have been disposed of. In fact, they seem to be disposing of all the interests in all the beet-sugar factories in which they have been interested, as I have said, under the policy advocated by Mr. Atkins. In the factories in Utah alone they had, I think, about 50 per cent of the stock.

Mr. HAUGEN. Is it a fact that they are disposing of their interests and have disposed of their stock and they are not interested in the sugar-beet industry to the extent that they were?

Mr. FORDNEY. That is a fact. In addition to that, gentlemen, I have here a list of the cities in which all of these beet-sugar companies have disposed of their entire product, showing that each year they have reached out and captured more and more territory which has heretofore been absolutely controlled by the refining companies. In some instances, in small amounts, Michigan has sold sugar in the States of New York, Pennsylvania, and Maryland, and as far south as Tennessee, taking away from the trust, as Mr. Atkins said, their territory for the disposition of refined sugar.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. Will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Michigan yield to the gentleman from Colorado?

Mr. FORDNEY. I yield with pleasure.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. I want to say to the gentleman that my best information is that the Sugar Trust commenced to buy the stock of the beet-sugar factories because they thought that was the easiest way to get control of them and close them up, but that they stopped buying and began to sell their interests in those factories as soon as they thought they would get such legislation as this in Congress—closing up the beet-sugar factories. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. FORDNEY. Let me say to the gentleman that he is correct. When Cuban reciprocity was advocated in this House in 1901 and in 1902 and 1903, and before Cuban reciprocity became a law in December, 1903, I have the record of 86 projects—86 firms, in this country—which had organized and paid in more or less capital to build beet-sugar factories, and 80 of them immediately suspended, sir, and only 6 were built. Why? Because the American Sugar Refining Co. and other refining companies sent lobbyists here who brought great pressure to bear on Representatives in Congress urging the adoption of the Cuban treaty, claiming its adoption would be of great benefit to our people, the consumers; and they at that time purchased some interest in our beet-sugar factories and discouraged further opposition (from those companies in which they purchased stock) to Cuban reciprocity, which the Sugar Trust was advocating.

That is the result, my friends—a destruction of 80 factories all at one blow, all at one fell swoop, by reducing the duty on imported sugar from Cuba 20 per cent below the Dingley rate.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Michigan yield to the gentleman from North Carolina?

Mr. FORDNEY. I do.

Mr. KITCHIN. The gentleman was in Congress then?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes, I was; and all the Democratic Members in the House except the Louisiana Members voted for that proposition. With you, it is true, there were some Republican Members who voted for the law, but that number did not include myself.

Mr. KITCHIN. Your Republican President signed it, and the bill would not have become a law if you gentlemen in control of the House had not passed it. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. FORDNEY. I think some of my Republican friends are subject to criticism for voting for that bill. But they could not possibly have enacted that bill into law if you Democrats on that side had not helped them and voted almost solidly with them to do it.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. As to the point of suspending the beet-sugar factories in this country, I am advised now by the Democratic press, and of course that has reliable information always [laughter], that in Colorado to-day there is a suspension in the building of 10 sugar factories in the southern part of the State, brought about by this threatened legislation.

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes, my friend; and I have to-day a list of factories in which construction was recently begun east of the Mississippi River that have suspended operations pending the consideration and the outcome of this proposed law.

Mr. JAMES. Are they afraid of the Republican Senate and the Republican President on free sugar? [Laughter.]

Mr. FORDNEY. You are starting the ball rolling. You are breeding the free-trade theory. Let me say here that a producer of sugar from Louisiana came before the sugar investigating committee, and while testifying he spoke of the ravages of the boll weevil in that country which had caused the people of Louisiana to abandon the production of cotton and to turn their attention to the production of sugar. I asked him, "My friend, you are a Democrat?"

Yes.
You are a protectionist on sugar?
Yes.
Which of the two evils do you consider the greater in Louisiana, the boll weevil or the free trader?

He said:

My friend, the free trader, a thousand times over.

[Laughter on the Republican side.]

Mr. JAMES. Does the gentleman mean to class the Republican Senate and President in the boll-weevil class? [Laughter.]

Mr. FORDNEY. My friend, I have great hope that when in the Congress of the United States we are compelled to fall back to our second trench—the Senate of the United States—we will flay the life out of you free traders. [Applause on the Republican side.] If not, I have confidence in our good President who was elected on the Republican platform of 1908, which declares for protection sufficient to offset the difference in cost here and abroad, and, in addition thereto, a reasonable profit. I have confidence in him that he has the stamina, the courage, and the intelligence to place his stamp of disapproval upon that bill if it comes up to him. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. Chairman, how much time have I remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has seven minutes.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. Four years ago President Taft lost the State of Colorado because we thought he was an advocate of free sugar.

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes; and I have in my scrapbook a copy of the President's speech made at Denver, where he pledged himself to protect that industry if elected, and you can bank on it that he will stand by that pledge.

Now, gentlemen, Mr. UNDERWOOD has said the raising of sugar is a hothouse industry. Let me call your attention to this fact: Last year in the production of beet sugar we had less than one-half million acres of land in the United States planted to sugar beets. The Secretary of Agriculture, after careful investigation, shows that we have in this country soil well adapted to the production of beet sugar, in area 274,000,000 acres of land. For the last five years Germany's crop of beets has covered 1,107,000 acres, a territory equal only to about 48 of our townships, on which she produced over 2,000,000 long tons of sugar, or about two-thirds of the quantity we consume annually. Instead of this being a hothouse industry, if you will only give this domestic industry adequate protection to offset the difference in cost in this country and abroad, so as to maintain our high standard of wages, and give it that measure of protection required against foreign countries which have the cheapest labor on earth, we will in a short time produce all the sugar in this country that all the people consume.

The Secretary of Agriculture goes further and says that if but one crop of beets were planted on these 274,000,000 acres of soil well adapted to the production of beets and a crop was raised such as we raised per acre last year we could produce from that one single crop more sugar than has been consumed by all the people of the whole world since the birth of Christ. Then talk about it being a hothouse industry and our territory limited! Such folderol is about the maximum of wisdom displayed by the friends of this bill. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Again, the gentleman has said that our beet-sugar industry has the protection of a freight handicap which protects it sufficiently against free sugar. I have here a list, which I have not the time to read, showing that the highest rate of protection that the freight rate gives to any beet-sugar industry in the United States is that afforded to the Michigan and Ohio factories, which receive an advantage of 5.82 cents per hundred pounds, or less than 6 cents per hundred pounds advantage out of the freight rate. Going farther on to the west, there is a handicap of as much as 30 to 35 cents a hundred pounds instead of an advantage.

But let me quote just for a minute my beloved free-trade friend, Mr. Lowry. Mr. Lowry testified here before our sugar committee at much length. I can state the substance of his testimony without reading it. Mr. Lowry poses as the secretary and treasurer of a groceryman's association—a committee of wholesale grocers representing a large number of wholesale grocers in this country. Under oath, Mr. Lowry admitted that this association never had a meeting, even of two or more members; that the association had never paid a single penny of dues, initiation fees, or anything else in the shape of money. Mr. Lowry admits that he elected himself secretary and treasurer of that fictitious committee or association, and when asked where he got the money to send out this yellow journal he admitted that Mr. Spreckels, the president of the Federal Sugar Refining Co., contributed it all, $12,000. [Applause on the Republican side.] Now, gentlemen, enact your bill into law. Let me be just a little sarcastic, my brother KITCHIN. The gentleman is a member of the Ways and Means Committee.

Mr. KITCHIN. Go ahead.

Mr. FORDNEY. Enact this bill into law and Mr. Lowry and Mr. Spreckels will no longer find it necessary to spend $12,000 a year in sending out yellow journals. In my opinion it looks very much like a contribution to the Democratic campaign fund. [Laughter on the Republican side.]

Mr. KITCHIN. When did these people stop contributing to the Republican campaign fund? It must have been since 1910, for I see by the sworn reports that they contributed to the Republican campaign fund then.

Mr. FORDNEY. If my friends, the Republican Party, will call on me for contributions to advance Republican principles, I will go the limit at all times to help them out.

Mr. Lowry testified before the committee that the rate of duty on German, French, Belgian, and Austro-Hungarian sugar was 47 and 48 cents. He testified under oath that the duty on German sugar was 47 cents per hundred pounds and on refined sugar 52 cents per hundred pounds. The fact is that the duty on raw sugar imported into Germany, instead of being 47 cents is $1.99, and on refined sugar, instead of being 52 cents, as Lowry testifies, it is $2.03 per hundred pounds. On French sugar the duty, instead of being 48 cents, as the gentleman states it, is $2.67 per hundred pounds, and on refined sugar, $2.90. The duty on sugar imported into Austria-Hungary, instead of being 47 cents per hundred pounds, is $3.99 per hundred pounds, and on refined sugar, $4.03.

In closing, Mr. Chairman, let me say the maintenance or the destruction or even the retarding of the growth of our domestic sugar industry, both beet and cane, in the United States is a question of greater importance to the American people, in my judgment, than some of us will admit. If adequate protection and a settled policy in this direction is given to this industry, it will go forward with leaps and bounds, and in the next decade, under such protection, beet-sugar factories would be built all over the territory in which beets can be successfully raised, and within that decade from one-half to three-fourths of the sugar consumed by the people of the United States will be produced in this country. Give our industry such protection as all other beet-sugar-producing countries give to theirs and we can in a very short time say to the whole world, so far as our sugar is concerned, "We can get along within our own borders." But put this free-trade measure into law, and before half a decade has expired every pound of sugar consumed by the people of the United States will come through the melting kettles of the Sugar Trust.

I repeat, Mr. Chairman, that this measure might well be entitled "An act to surrender revenue, destroy competition, and create monopoly."

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. MANN. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman have 10 minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Michigan be given 10 minutes' more time. Is there objection?

Mr. JAMES. Mr. Chairman, in the absence of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD], the chairman of the committee, I shall have to object. He said he would object to the extension of any gentleman's time beyond an hour. That was all the time he consumed. While he is not on the floor I feel constrained to object.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is made.

Mr. FORDNEY. I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, by arrangement with the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK], I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. MALBY].

Mr. MALBY. Mr. Chairman, in May last I was appointed a member of the special committee on the investigation of the American Sugar Refining Co. and others, under a resolution giving that committee a broad scope of inquiry. The committee sat in practically continuous session from June 12, 1911, to August 11, 1911, and from December 5, 1911, with an adjournment at the holidays, until January 16, 1912. During that time there appeared before us representatives of practically every branch of the sugar industry in America. The heads of most of the great refineries, both on the Atlantic and Pacific coasts, were witnesses, as well as the officers of beet-sugar manufactories in various States, farmers who grow beets, and the producers of cane sugar in Louisiana. In addition to these, the committee employed the most expert sugar statistician in the United States, Mr. Wallace P. Willett, both to give expert testimony and statistics and to digest and arrange information from foreign countries. The result of this could not fail to give the members of that committee a comprehensive view of the present status of the sugar industry of the United States. The question of the tariff, although not strictly within the jurisdiction of the committee, was extensively gone into by the various witnesses, as it seemed inseparable from any practical consideration of the questions at issue.

GROWTH OF DOMESTIC SUGAR INDUSTRY.

The testimony before that committee disclosed that under the policy of protection continuously in force since the beginning of this Government—the period of the McKinley bill not excepted—the production of domestic beet and cane sugar has become a great industry. Others have given detailed statistics of this marvelous growth. It will suffice for me to say that at present 16 States are engaged in the cultivation and manufacture of beet sugar, and 12 States, together with Hawaii, Porto Rico, and the Philippines, in the production of cane sugar. On the continent of the United States there are 257 separate establishments in the industry, valued, according to the census estimate, at over $80,000,000. The production of beet sugar has risen from 3,000 tons in 1890 and 78,000 tons in 1900 to 530,000 tons during the past year. The sugar now produced in continental United States, Hawaii, and our insular possessions supplies over half our total consumption, while that admitted under Cuban reciprocity brought the total in 1910 up to 97 per cent, and this year will in all probability supply our total needs.

Considering our beet-sugar industry alone, the following table, prepared for the committee by Willett & Gray, gives an idea of its recent expansion:

Beet-sugar industry progress in United States during the past 24 years.

[The production stated for the present season (1911–12) is necessarily estimated, as some factories have not yet completed their run.]

[1] Sept. 9, 1876, Hawaiian reciprocity, admitting Hawaiian sugar to the United States free of duty, subject to termination after seven years by one year's notice.

[2] July 24, 1897, Dingley tariff bill passed, affording protection to home sugar industry.

[3] 1897–1910, long tons. 1898 Hawaii annexed. Free-trade relations permanently assured.

[4] May 1, 1900, Porto Rican sugar admitted to United States at 85 per cent reduction of duty.

[5] July 26, 1901, Porto Rican sugar admitted to United States free of duty.

[6] July 1, 1902, Philippine sugar admitted to United States at 25 per cent reduction of duty.

[7] Dec. 27, 1903, Cuban sugar admitted to United States at 20 per cent reduction of duty.

[8] Aug. 5, 1909, Philippine sugar to extent of 300,000 tons annually admitted to United States free of duty.

Statistics 1877–1897, except United States beet and Louisiana cane from Summary of Commerce and Finance, July, 1902, Hawaii, p. 2665; Porto Rico, p. 2737; Cuba, p. 2651; Philippines, pp. 2753–2754; statistics for Louisiana cane sugar and United States beet sugar 1877–1897 from 1908 Statistical Abstract, p. 199; Statistics for 1897–1909 from Willett & Gray's Statistical Sugar Trade Journal; 1910–11 estimated by W. & G. Louisiana cane and United States beet-sugar figures are "production"; all others are "exports."

FURTHER EXPANSION OF DOMESTIC INDUSTRY.

Further than this, the testimony shows that this industry is capable of indefinite expansion. While Hawaii and Porto Rico have about reached their natural limit of production, the production of cane in the Philippines is capable of expansion to practically any limit to which we will admit its product free into the United States. It is, however, in the production of beet sugar on the mainland that we may look for the greatest expansion if the present policy of protection is continued. In a recent report the Secretary of Agriculture says:

During the past five years our average production of beets per acre has been 10 tons, and the average extraction of sugar by the factories 12 per cent. The average production of sugar per acre has, therefore, been 2,400 pounds, or 1⅕ short tons. During the fiscal year 1907–8 we imported from strictly foreign sources (not including the island possessions of the United States) 1,666,795 short tons of sugar.

To have produced this sugar at the average rate of 1⅕ tons per acre in 1907 would have required 1,389,000 acres of sugar beets. In other words, if our beet acreage for 1907 had been increased by 1,389,000 acres, yielding at the average rate for the past five years, and we had possessed factories to work up the beets, we would have produced enough sugar to supply the entire home demand.

Dividing, now, the 274,000,000 acres lying within and adjacent to the sugar-beet belt, having soil and climatic conditions adapted to the production of satisfactory beets, by 1,389,000 acres we find the quotient to be 197. If, therefore, beets had been grown only 1 acre out of every 197 acres of adapted area, the beets produced would have yielded enough sugar to replace all the foreign sugar we used. Speaking in round numbers, we would at the present time have to grow beets on only one two-hundredth part of our demonstrated sugar-beet areas (in addition to the area already in use) to make this country self-sustaining in the matter of sugar. If we suppose but one-fourth of the sugar-beet area to be actually devoted to crops, the growing beets on but 1 acre out of every 50 tilled acres would enable us to stop using foreign sugar. (Report of Secretary of Agriculture, Senate Document 22; Hearings, special committee, p. 2705.)

WHO WANTS FREE SUGAR.

Among all of the different interests represented at the hearings before the special committee, it might well be expected that there would be a great difference of opinion on many subjects. On two vital questions, however, there was a practical unanimity of opinion, both among those who opposed and those who would benefit by a reduction or the removal of the tariff. The first was that removal of the tariff would be greatly to the advantage of the interest controlling the great refineries, and the second was that the removal of the tariff would result in the utter destruction of the domestic sugar industries of the United States, both cane and beet.

Both of these propositions would seem to be easily demonstrable, but since there has been an effort to becloud the issue upon this point I shall quote some, though by no means all, of the evidence upon these points from the witnesses representing the various interests, the references, of course, being to the hearings before the special committee.

REFINERS WANT FREE SUGAR.

CLAUS A. SPRECKELS, PRESIDENT FEDERAL SUGAR REFINING CO.

Mr. HINDS. In other words, perhaps, you would take it (the tariff) all off, would you not, and have free trade?

Mr. SPRECKELS. I would have free trade. (Pt. 27, p. 2277 of Hearings.)

Mr. HINDS. You would have free trade in sugar?

Mr. SPRECKELS. Absolutely. (Pt. 27, p. 2278 of Hearings.)

CHARLES R. HEIKE, SECRETARY AMERICAN SUGAR REFINING CO. FROM 1887 TO 1910.

Mr. FORDNEY. Now, if the duty were removed absolutely on sugar, could we produce either cane or beets in this country?

Mr. HEIKE. I doubt it very much.

Mr. FORDNEY. Then that would destroy the industry absolutely in this country?

Mr. HEIKE. Yes.

Mr. FORDNEY. And you would approve of that?

Mr. HEIKE. Yes. (Pt. 4, p. 292 of Hearings.)

WILLIAM G. GILMORE, PARTNER, ARBUCKLE BROS., SUGAR REFINERS.

Mr. MADISON. In other words, you think the thing to do is to take off the duty, and that it would be to your advantage to take it off as a refiner of cane sugar?

Mr. GILMORE. Yes, sir.

Mr. MADISON. And you would advocate the taking off of the duty?

Mr. GILMORE. I would, personally. I am only speaking now personally. (Pt. 14, p. 1169 of Hearings.)

JAMES H. POST, PRESIDENT NATIONAL SUGAR REFINING CO.

Mr. POST. If Congress did not need the revenue from sugar. That is a different proposition. But they have to have it from something, and sugar seems to be the thing that has paid a part of it for a great many years. As far as I personally am concerned, I would like to see free sugar. As we look at the country at large, however, I think it would be a very unfair proposition. (Pt. 6, p. 527 of Hearings.)

WILLIAM A. J. JAMISON, PARTNER, ARBUCKLE BROS.

Mr. RAKER. How would it affect you if there was no tax on the importation of sugar—raw sugar?

Mr. JAMISON. I think it would enable us to run more constantly.

Mr. RAKER. What do you mean by that, now?

Mr. JAMISON. To keep up the capacity.

Mr. RAKER. Will you explain it?

Mr. JAMISON. I mean we would be able to sell more sugar.

Mr. RAKER. Do you not have a supply all the time?

Mr. JAMISON. Well, we are not able to run full at all times.

Mr. RAKER. Because of the way raw sugar is shipped into the United States?

Mr. JAMISON. Oh, no; on account of the beet product. If there was no duty, I do not think the beet would be so prosperous, and we would probably sell more sugar; if the duty was removed, I mean to say. * * *

Mr. RAKER. * * * What would you think would be a fair compensation [reduction]?

Mr. JAMISON. I think there should be a cent a pound taken off at the present time at least, and later——

Mr. RAKER. A little more?

Mr. JAMISON. Yes; until it is entirely removed. (Pt. 14, p. 1195–1196 of Hearings.)

EDWIN F. ATKINS, VICE PRESIDENT AND ACTING PRESIDENT AMERICAN SUGAR REFINING CO.

Mr. HINDS. So that a reduction of the tariff, passing beyond a moderate amount, would tend to the prosperity of the refiners and to the detriment of the beet-sugar people?

Mr. ATKINS. Take the independent refiners, outside of our concern at all, that represent more than half the supply of the United States. They say—and I think they say truly—that it is for the refiners' interest to have a low rate of duty rather than a high rate of duty and reduce the basis of value upon which they can sell. The lower the price of the refined sugar the greater is the consumption. I think their position is well taken. (Pt. 2, p. 174 of Hearings.)

EFFECT OF FREE SUGAR ON THE DOMESTIC INDUSTRY.

Edwin F. Atkins, vice president and acting president American Sugar Refining Co.:

(Hearings, p. 144.)

Mr. ATKINS. I think the taking off of all the tariff would so cripple the beet-sugar industry in this country and so cripple the Louisiana industry that the effect would be to put up the basis of value of the imported raw sugars. A moderate reduction in the tariff, which would not cripple those industries, would reduce the cost of refined sugar to the consumer. There is a great deal between a reduction in your tariff rates and an abolition of your duties.

(Hearings, p. 145.)

Mr. HINDS. You think that the taking the tariff off would cripple the beet-sugar industry?

Mr. ATKINS. Undoubtedly.

Mr. HINDS. That is, you mean drive them out as competitors?

Mr. ATKINS. It would cripple a great many of them.
Mr. HINDS. And what would it do to the Louisiana and Texas people?
Mr. ATKINS. I do not think they could produce in Louisiana without some protection.

(Hearings, p. 165.)

Mr. MADISON. Suppose we were to have absolute free trade in sugars in this country; suppose we just simply took down the bars and absolutely eliminated our tariff duties on sugar. You said a while ago that it would destroy the beet-sugar man, did you not?
Mr. ATKINS. Absolute free trade would destroy very many of the beet factories; not all of them.
Mr. MADISON. It would practically destroy them all, would it not?
Mr. ATKINS. It would injure the industry—absolute free trade.
Mr. MADISON. I just want to get the fact of the matter, whatever it may be. Would it injure it materially or only slightly?
Mr. ATKINS. Under absolute free trade there are very many beet factories in the country that could not operate at all. Some of them could. Some of the factories that are protected by 1,000 and 1,500 miles of freight rates could get along, where they get their beets cheap and produce at a very low cost, as in California; they could survive, in my opinion. They saw they could not. But absolute free trade would cripple many of the beet-sugar manufacturers. It would cripple the Louisiana people by bringing prices down to a point below their cost of production. That would not be the case with a little reduction in the tariff. They would go on and reduce their expenses where they could and continue producing. If you wipe out a large source of supplies temporarily, you are going to advance the price of that merchandise.
Mr. MADISON. What would be the effect on the Hawaiian and the Porto Rican producers of sugar?
Mr. ATKINS. It would reduce their price.
Mr. MADISON. What effect would it have on the industry, as to whether it would materially impair and injure it or not?
Mr. ATKINS. They would tell you that it would destroy the industry completely. And I will tell you no; that it would not. The better of them would go on.

(Hearings, p. 173.)

Mr. HINDS. If we should reduce in this country the tariff on sugar, if we should wipe it out, you say it would almost destroy the cane-sugar industry in this country and the beet-sugar industry?
Mr. ATKINS. Why, I think it would; because $1.34 a hundred is a great part of the price, you know.

CHARLES R. HEIKE, SECRETARY AMERICAN SUGAR REFINING CO. FROM 1887 TO 1910.

(Hearings, p. 208.)

Mr. FORDNEY. If the duty were removed on foreign imported sugar, would the benefits inure to the beet-sugar industry and not to the refiners that refine foreign imported raw sugar?
Mr. HEIKE. The refiners would have the advantage.
Mr. FORDNEY. That is what I meant.
Mr. HEIKE. The beet-sugar companies probably would find great difficulty in making beet sugars at all.

(Hearings, p. 238.)

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Heike, I do not know that I made myself fully clear in one question this morning. I think we agreed on the same point, which is the reason I want to be clear. I think you stated to me a reduction of the duty on imported raw sugar would quite surely be disastrous to the domestic beet and cane industry and would inure to the benefit of the refineries?
Mr. HEIKE. Yes, sir; I think the disaster depends upon the extent.
Mr. FORDNEY. If we were to have free trade on sugar, the beet-sugar industries would be obliged to cease?
Mr. HEIKE. Yes; except the favored localities.
Mr. FORDNEY. That is, if the price of raw——
The CHAIRMAN. What is the answer, Mr. Heike?
Mr. HEIKE. I say yes; except the favored localities; for instance, California; I guess they could.
Mr. FORDNEY. If the price of raw sugar were to be reduced to the extent of the duty?
Mr. HEIKE. Yes; and if we had absolute free trade.
Mr. FORDNEY. The beet-sugar industry would have to go out of business?
Mr. HEIKE. At least the Michigan, I think, would. Perhaps not. For that reason, if there was a reduction, it should be very slowly made.

(Hearings, p. 292.)

Mr. FORDNEY. Now, if the duty were removed absolutely on sugar, could we produce either cane or beets in this country?
Mr. HEIKE. I doubt it very much.
Mr. FORDNEY. Then that would destroy the industry absolutely in this country?
Mr. HEIKE. Yes.
Mr. FORDNEY. And you would approve of that?
Mr. HEIKE. Yes.

HENRY T. OXNARD, BEET AND CANE SUGAR MANUFACTURER.

(Hearings, p. 440.)

Mr. RAKER. How much do you say the duty could be reduced?
Mr. OXNARD. Not a bit, not one farthing. If you reduce it, you are going to knock out the beet business. The beet business has not yet developed to that point where it is time to talk of reducing the duty on sugar if you are going to build it up. If you want to stop it, reduce the duty.

JAMES H. POST, PRESIDENT NATIONAL SUGAR REFINING CO.

(Hearings, p. 525.)

Mr. SULZER. If the duty was taken off raw sugar entirely, what reduction in price to the consumer would that bring about, in your opinion.
Mr. POST. In a few years it probably would reduce it a cent a pound. It would materially curtail, of course, the production of sugar in this country—Louisiana and Hawaii.

(Hearings, p. 536.)

The CHAIRMAN. You said that if we had all sugar, raw and refined, free, that within a year you thought it would reduce the price of sugar to the consumer about a cent a pound?
Mr. POST. It would not reduce it the full amount of the duty. It would put some out of business. It would take two or three years to adjust the business.

(Hearings, p. 542.)

Mr. FORDNEY. If we were to deduct the duty from the sugar—abolish the duty altogether on sugar—you would then be able to lay down in our markets refined sugar at 2.86$\frac{1}{10}$ cents?
Mr. POST. Yes.
Mr. FORDNEY. And with those prices your profits would be just as great as they are at the present time?
Mr. POST. Yes.
Mr. FORDNEY. Or more, because you would not have to use that capital for the payment of duties?
Mr. POST. Yes.
Mr. FORDNEY. At that price can any domestic cane or beet sugar industry in this country survive?
Mr. POST. It can not, in my opinion, except at a few places—in Colorado, California, and Utah.
Mr. FORDNEY. They would be wiped out at one stroke of the pen by that kind of a law, would they not?
Mr. POST. Yes, sir.

HORACE HAVEMEYER, FORMERLY DIRECTOR AMERICAN SUGAR REFINING CO., NOW SUING FOR CONTROL OF NATIONAL SUGAR REFINING CO.

(Hearings, p. 597.)

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Havemeyer, let me put it in this way: If the duty were removed on all imported raw sugars right now—it has been clearly brought out here by several witnesses that the domestic industry can not survive without protection—and if the duty were removed right now, there is no question in your mind that the beet and cane industry of this country would have to cease doing business?
Mr. HAVEMEYER. Yes; that is my belief—if it were removed.

CHARLES B. WARREN, PRESIDENT MICHIGAN BEET SUGAR CO.

(Hearings, p. 721.)

Mr. GARRETT. Free sugar would reduce the price?
Mr. WARREN. You gave the Cubans a concession, you know——
Mr. GARRETT. Free sugar would reduce the price?
Mr. WARREN. Certainly, for awhile, until they drove us out of business, and then the Germans would take care of the price of dry granulated in Germany, and the Russians in Russia, and the French in France, and they would put the price on raw sugar up, and you would pay the price, and they would get it easier. That is what would happen to the United States.

THOMAS R. CUTLER, PRESIDENT UTAH-IDAHO BEET SUGAR CO.

(Hearings, p. 810.)

Mr. CUTLER. I think they ought to be inquired into further. You are asking a question, and I will elaborate on it a little bit. The refiners are clamoring, of course, no doubt, for a reduction of the tariff. Who would be benefited by a reduction of the tariff? Why, the refiners, as against the beet-sugar factories. The refiners, if they can buy their sugar for two-thirds of what they are paying to-day will, of course, be benefited.
Mr. MALBY. Raw sugars, you mean?
Mr. CUTLER. Yes; raw sugars. They will continue in business and they will sell more sugars. Sugar will become cheaper. They will sell more sugar because sugar is cheaper. They will have less money invested in their business. There is a greater opportunity to make profits when sugars are low than when they are high. It is all in favor of the refiners. There is a great howl for free trade on sugars, but they will kill the beet-sugar industry, sure.

(Hearings, p. 851.)

The CHAIRMAN. You said this morning, during the progress of the examination, that the beet-sugar people could not get along without the present tariff. Am I quoting you correctly on that?
Mr. CUTLER. I feel that way—that they could not and pay dividends.
The CHAIRMAN. And pay dividends; and you also said charge off the proper amount for depreciation of the plant?
Mr. CUTLER. I said I could not. I did not apply it to anyone else. I let everybody else make their own statements.

CHESTER S. MOREY, PRESIDENT GREAT WESTERN (BEET) SUGAR CO.

(Hearings, p. 894.)

Mr. MALBY. Something has been said with respect to the effect upon the beet industry in case of the repeal of the present tariff. Is that found to be advantageous?
Mr. MOREY. We could not live without the present tariff. I do not believe there would be a beet factory in the United States if the tariff were removed. That is my honest opinion.

JOHN D. SPRECKELS, PRESIDENT WESTERN SUGAR REFINING CO. AND SPRECKELS SUGAR CO.

(Hearings, p. 957.)

Mr. SPRECKELS. Take the tariff off of the sugar, and it means the death of the beet-sugar industry in this country. They employ lots of labor in the factories. Of course, they will have to seek other employment if those factories are closed.

(Hearings, p. 991.)

Mr. SPRECKELS. My statement is that if the duty was taken off that would mean the annihilation of the beet-sugar interests in this country.
Mr. MADISON. Yes.
Mr. SPRECKELS. I mean the utter destruction of it.

(Hearings, p. 1018.)

Mr. HINDS. So it is not absolutely certain that by doing as this circular advises—taking off the protection from the beet-sugar companies and turning it to the refineries, the trust, and the other refineries—you would get cheaper sugar?
Mr. SPRECKELS. No; not at all; because you are going to drive out the beet business, and, of course, there will be that amount of deficiency; and the question is, Can that deficiency be made up elsewhere? And if it can not be made up, of course there will be a shortage, and then the law of supply and demand is going to rule.

CHARLES W. NIBLEY, DIRECTOR, UTAH-IDAHO SUGAR CO.

(Hearings, p. 1107.)

Mr. SULZER. I say, so you believe that there is no legislation that Congress can enact in regard to the product of sugar and the price of sugar to the people that would cheapen the cost of sugar to the consumer thereof?
Mr. NIBLEY. Oh, yes; I think they could. If they took the tariff off of sugar entirely I think it would probably—probably cheapen the price a little temporarily, but it would be at the ruin of the great beet-sugar industry—the utter ruin.

Mr. SULZER. You are pretty sure of that, in your judgment.

Mr. NIBLEY. I am.

(Hearings, pp. 1107–1108.)

Mr. RAKER. There is one other question I would like to ask Mr. Nibley. He has been very positive in one answer, and I would like to have him take his time and get it in the record as he understands it. You say, if the tariff was taken off of sugar, the importation of sugar, raw and refined—I understand both—or either, that it would ruin the beet-sugar industry?

Mr. NIBLEY. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. Will you explain, Mr. Nibley, why it would?

Mr. NIBLEY. Because sugar would be temporarily, for a year or two or three, cheaper, so much cheaper that it would ruin that industry, and my opinion is—of course, that can only be a matter of opinion with you or I or anybody—my opinion is that in a little while the price would come back to about where it was before, and that it might be fixed up in some way so that it would be even more.

Mr. RAKER. But you did not get the purport of my question, and when I get that I am through. You say it would ruin the beet industry?

Mr. NIBLEY. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. Which means the cultivation of the beets, the beet manufactories, and those engaged in either of them?

Mr. NIBLEY. That is what it means.

Mr. RAKER. It would ruin their business?

Mr. NIBLEY. Certainly it would.

Mr. RAKER. They could not stand a reduction of half a cent?

Mr. NIBLEY. No, no. I think some of the factories now are not making half a dollar a bag, on an average, where they have to ship it to the river.

WILLIAM F. GILMORE, PARTNER IN ARBUCKLE BROS.

(Hearings, p. 1168.)

Mr. MADISON. Suppose we just went to work and took the duty off, then what would occur?

Mr. GILMORE. There would be cheaper sugar.

Mr. MADISON. What would be the effect as to your people—beneficial or otherwise?

Mr. GILMORE. It would be beneficial in so much that we would have only about half the money invested in the job.

Mr. MADISON. It would be beneficial inasmuch as it would destroy the beet-sugar people?

Mr. GILMORE. It would keep them at home.

Mr. MADISON. Keep them in a limited locality?

Mr. GILMORE. Yes.

Mr. MADISON. And leave the field to you people that is naturally yours, as you feel?

Mr. GILMORE. Our natural field; yes.

WILLIAM A. JAMISON, PARTNER IN ARBUCKLE BROS.

(Hearings, p. 1195.)

Mr. JAMISON. If there was no duty, I do not think the beet would be so prosperous, and we would probably sell more sugar. If the duty was removed, I mean to say.

F. C. LOWRY, SALES AGENT, FEDERAL SUGAR REFINING CO.

(Hearings, p. 1612.)

Mr. FORDNEY. You do not care a snap about the domestic industry, do you, in reference to this statement, if your statement just now is true?

Mr. LOWRY. You say I do not care a snap about the domestic industry?

Mr. FORDNEY. No. You do not care whether it succeeds or not. You are not interested in the welfare of the beet and cane sugar industry of this country.

Mr. LOWRY. Not particularly; no.

Mr. FORDNEY. You, then, would be willing to have sugar put upon the free list, even though it crushed out this domestic industry?

Mr. LOWRY. No, sir; I do not think it woud be quite fair to put sugar on the free list. I think it would be very desirable from the consumer's standpoint, but I am frank to say that I do not think it would be quite fair at this time.

(Hearings, p. 1735.)

Mr. FORDNEY. If taking off the duty would destroy the industry, you would destroy it, would you?

Mr. LOWRY. How is that?

Mr. FORDNEY. If by putting imported raw sugars on the free list the domestic beet and cane industries in this country would perish, you would destroy them, would you?

Mr. LOWRY. I testified yesterday that I did not think it would be fair to the domestic industry to put sugar on the free list.

JOHN DYMOND, LOUISIANA SUGAR PLANTERS' ASSOCIATION.

(Hearings, pp. 1792–1793.)

Mr. RAKER. Will you just tell me how it will affect the Louisiana planters, supposing we should reduce the tariff by about one-half on the importation of sugar, raw sugar and refined sugar?

Mr. DYMOND. I should say they would not be able to pay their debts, if they had any.

Mr. RAKER. Why?

Mr. DYMOND. Simply from the fact that they would get still less for their sugar than they now do, and they are right on the fighting line now, and it is only the most enterprising, skillful ones who are successful.

THEODORE S. WILKINSON, LOUISIANA CANE PLANTER AND MANUFACTURER.

(Hearings, p. 1814.)

Mr. FORDNEY. Now, Mr. Wilkinson, you are familiar with our tariff laws and know what the duty is on sugar. The bulk of our raw import sugars that pay duty come from Cuba, and the duty on Cuban sugar is 1.348 cents per pound. If that duty were removed and it were possible for refiners to buy foreign sugar for just that much less, how long would your sugar industry in Louisiana continue to do business?

Mr. WILKINSON. It would go out very soon. Of course there would be intermediate steps. The first step would be to grind up our stock in hand, but that would go out very soon.

Mr. FORDNEY. The refiners could refine foreign sugar and undersell you and drive you out of business?

Mr. WILKINSON. Yes.

J. E. BURGUIERES, VICE PRESIDENT NEW ORLEANS SUGAR PLANTERS' ASSOCIATION.

(Hearings, p. 1872.)

Mr. MADISON. Do you think a material cut could be made in the tariff without seriously injuring your industry?

Mr. BURGUIERES. I maintain, and our records will prove it, that no cut could be made without seriously hampering the industry and withholding any further developments.

Mr. MADISON. Suppose the sugar tariff was cut in two?

Mr. BURGUIERES. If the sugar tariff was cut in two, it would completely and immediately annihilate the sugar industry of Louisiana.

Mr. MADISON. Wipe it off of the face of the earth?

Mr. BURGUIERES. Wipe it off of the face of the earth.

(Hearings, p. 1876.)

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Burguieres, you have stated that one-half of the people of the State of Louisiana, if I am correct in my assertion, are engaged in the production of sugar. You have also stated that the boll weevil is a great menace to the cotton industry of your State.

Mr. BURGUIERES. It has reduced it 75 per cent in the last two or three years.

Mr. FORDNEY. Is it not true, sir, that the agitation of men who believe in free trade on sugar or a material reduction in the duty on sugar are a greater menace to the people of the State of Louisiana and the sugar industry than the boll weevil is to the cotton industry?

Mr. BURGUIERES. I have never had a doubt about that, sir.

Mr. FORDNEY. I agree with you. They are worse, ten times over, than the boll weevil.

Mr. BURGUIERES. I think ten times would be putting it very mildly, sir.

Mr. FORDNEY. I agree with you, sir.

Mr. BURGUIERES. A million times would not be too many times.

WILLIAM C. STUBBS, LOUISIANA SCIENTIFIC AND AGRICULTURAL ASSOCIATION.

(Hearings, p. 1910.)

Mr. FORDNEY. Doctor, in calling you back here to testify further, is it not your opinion right now that they might just as well right now as ever dissipate any idea they may have that they can get any opinion out of you that this industry can live without a tariff?

Mr. STUBBS. I want to say, Mr. HARDWICK, it is only a question of this: If you, as a Democratic Party here, are willing to sacrifice the beet-sugar industry of the United States and the cane-sugar industry, all you have to do on earth is to take the tariff off.

Mr. FORDNEY. Good.

Mr. STUBBS. And I want to say another thing. It takes three years to go out of the sugar industry and it takes three years to go back. If you were to come to Louisiana to-morrow and start cane growing, it would be three years before you would have a product for sale. When you abolish this tariff or interfere with it in such a manner as to make sugar growing unprofitable, we would live two or three years, because it would take us that long to get out of the industry. Then you can expect our biggest factories to go to Cuba and Porto Rico and our small ones to go to the junk heap.

If you are willing to destroy an industry like our sugar industry in Louisiana and to destroy this beet-sugar industry, and I do not know how much that is worth, and do not want the revenue from sugar, all you have to do is to do that, and you can write our obituary the day you do it.

The CHAIRMAN. That is what every beneficiary of the tariff says, from California to Maine.

WASHINGTON B. THOMAS, CHAIRMAN BOARD OF DIRECTORS AMERICAN SUGAR REFINING CO.

(Hearings, p. 2025.)

Mr. THOMAS. Yes; I think a material reduction in the tariff would possibly increase the business of the refineries on the eastern seaboard.

Mr. HINDS. That is, of the cane refineries?

Mr. THOMAS. Of the cane refineries, and would adversely affect the beet-sugar factories.

Mr. HINDS. So that in the grand strategy of the sugar situation a little lowering of the tariff would tend, probably, to help the cane refineries and check, perhaps, the beet-sugar refineries?

Mr. THOMAS. To some extent. That would be the tendency, I think.

TRUMAN G. PALMER, BEET-SUGAR STATISTICIAN.

(Hearings, p. 2785.)

Mr. PALMER. Not only would our eight or nine hundred thousand tons be wiped out, but the wonderful stimulus that free entry into our market has had on the sugar produced in Hawaii and in Porto Rico would be gone, and those countries not only would not increase, but, in my judgment, would decrease their production.

The CHAIRMAN. Can not those prominent countries hold their own with the beet countries of Europe?

Mr. MALBY. The difficulty is they did not do it before.

The CHAIRMAN. They are built up now; they are established and on their feet.

Mr. MALBY. I think they could help.

Mr. PALMER. Porto Rico can not produce as cheaply as Cuba.

WALLACE P. WILLETT, EXPERT SUGAR STATISTICIAN.

(Hearings, p. 3087.)

Mr. HINDS. You would not think, then, that free sugar is compatible with the conditions of the beet-sugar industry?

Mr. WILLETT. Decidedly not.

Mr. HINDS. Decidedly not. So that, if you had free sugar, you would have to have some other method of encouraging the beet-sugar industry?

Mr. WILLETT. Well, yes, sir. You mean a bounty?

Mr. HINDS. You would have to have something of that sort, would you not, unless you wished to let the beet-sugar industry go?

Mr. WILLETT. Yes; you would have to have something of that kind. There would be none of the domestic industry that could live under free sugar.

Mr. HINDS. I just wanted to find out exactly what was in your mind on that question, which I thought was a very important question.

Mr. WILLETT. Yes. All the evidence shows that, I think, before the committee or anywhere.

(Hearings, p. 3752.)

Mr. MALBY. When we assemble ourselves and say "If it were not for the tariff we would get sugar 1¼ cents per pound less," I sincerely doubt it, because of the fact that if our expectations were realized, and it was reduced 1¼ cents per pound, I venture the suggestion there would be no sugar produced in the United States; and if no sugar were produced in the United States, which production now amounts to 850,000 tons, the price of sugar would not be reduced 1¼ cents, but by reason of that quantity being taken from the world's supply the chances are more than equal the price to the consumer under those conditions would be the full amount of the duty now paid. Now, those are matters which I want to submit to you and ask you whether or not they are entitled to very careful consideration at all times when we are dealing with this subject.

Mr. WILLETT. I think, Judge MALBY, you are absolutely correct in every statement you have made, in the event of the entire duty being taken off of sugar.

THE TWO CONFLICTING INTERESTS.

It thus appeared from the testimony before the special committee that the sugar industry was divided into two branches, whose interest would be diametrically affected by a reduction or the removal of the duty. On the one hand are the great refineries, which import large quantities of raw sugar of an average basis of, say, 96 per cent of purity and whose sole business is to transform this into pure granulated sugar. On the other hand are the sugar producers of the country, who raise the sugar from the soil. Of these, the cane producers sell their raw sugar to refiners or, as in the case of the large part of the Hawaiian crop, refine it in a refinery which they control. In the case of beet growers, however, no raw sugar is manufactured, but the product leaves the factories as pure granulated sugar equal for every practical purpose to that refined by the refiners.

It is not difficult to discover the underlying reason for the desire of the refiners for the abolition of the duty. They will get their raw material cheaper and, consequently, will have less capital invested in their raw material, or, as they express it, tied up in the tariff. They will lose less money in the 7 pounds of raw sugar which is lost in the manufacture of 100 pounds of refined sugar. They will be able to make the same, or a greater, margin of profit upon the difference in prices between raw and refined, and will, therefore, make a larger percentage on their decreased capital. (Testimony of Edwin F. Atkins, 174; Chas. R. Heike, 287; James H. Post, 542; Wm. G. Gilmore, 1168; Wm. A. Jamison, 1211; F. C. Lowry, 1611–1612; C. A. Spreckels; 2249–2250, 2277.) They claim, and I see no reason to doubt their contention, that their differential, or difference, of 7/8 cents per hundred pounds in the duty between pure raw sugar and refined sugar is of no practical benefit to them, and that they will cheerfully sacrifice it for the sake of the advantages to be gained by a removal of the duty. (Testimony of Edwin F. Atkins, 130, 132; Chas. R. Heike, 257; Wm. G. Gilmore, 1141; Wm. A. Jamison, 1212; C. A. Spreckels, 2255. See also Dr. H. W. Wiley, 3446.)

All these facts are so well understood that it is difficult to conceive of the sincerity of the claim that the refiners are benefiting by the tariff and would be injured by its abolition. Yet this claim is a popular one among those who are seeking political capital out of the present bill, particularly so far as the interests of the American Sugar Refining Co., commonly known as the Sugar Trust, are concerned. The testimony before the committee, however, shows that the interests of the American are substantially identical with those of the other refiners doing a similar business. It is true that the founder of the corporation, H. O. Havemeyer, after vainly attempting to get a reduction of the tariff (Hearings, p. 79), conceived the brilliant idea of making large investments in beet sugar so that the American would be on both sides of the tariff fence (Hearings, p. 2036), but if his plans contemplated a domination of the beet-sugar industry, they proved abortive, for that industry, as foreseen by the present acting president (Hearings, p. 86), grew beyond his control, and since his death the beet-sugar holdings of the corporation have been steadily reduced. At present the profits of the American from refining are $3,000,000 a year. (Hearings, p. 50.) So that the interests of the corporation are overwhelmingly with the other refiners in favor of a reduction or removal of the tariff.

THE CHIEF REASON WHY REFINERS WANT FREE SUGAR.

The reasons above given by the refiners as to the benefits to be derived from free sugar seem to be sufficient, but there is another and more cogent reason for their anxiety in this behalf. It appears that the competition of the beet-sugar producers is making serious inroads upon the profits of the refiners and that a reduction or removal of the tariff is looked forward to as a means of checking or destroying this active and growing competition and restoring the complete supremacy of the refining interests. On this point I will let the refiners speak for themselves:

The CHAIRMAN. Is it really on account of the competition, Mr. Atkins?

Mr. ATKINS. I think so. * * * There is very much larger capacity than is required, and the beet sugars are taking away the trade of the refiners year by year. (Atkins, 48.)

Mr. MADISON. So you can hardly ascribe it to the fierce competition by the beet-sugar people?

Mr. ATKINS. Certainly. All that beet sugar comes on the market at a certain season of the year. It is all produced in about three months' time. They all want to market it just as rapidly as possible, and in order to do that they come to the eastern points. California sugar comes into Chicago and the Michigan sugar into Buffalo and Pittsburgh, and eastern refineries—not only the American Sugar Refining Co., but the others—have to reduce or close down until the beet sugars are out of the way. Any refining that is done between the 1st of October and the 1st of January is done without any profit and very often at a loss.

Mr. MADISON. Then, as a matter of fact, your competition with the beet-sugar people only exists during a few months of the year?

Mr. ATKINS. Three months, and that is 25 per cent of the whole time. (Atkins, 49.)

Mr. MADISON. You stated a moment ago, Mr. Atkins, or this morning, that you decidedly opposed going into the beet-sugar business. What was the reason of that? * * *

Mr. ATKINS. The beet-sugar business was a competitive business. It produced in the western territories, where our market lay. That is, I say our market, I mean the market of the refiners, the various refiners. As that industry grew, and I foresaw that it would grow rapidly, I believed that it would reduce the volume of business, not only of the American Sugar Refining Co., but of all the refiners on the Atlantic coast, and although we had millions of dollars invested in the business there we were building up a competitive business, one that would compete with ourselves and one which was bound to get away from us—we could not control it in the end. I say we. I had no connection whatever with it; that was simply a business man's opinion. (Atkins, 85–86.)

Mr. GARRETT. Do you know whether last year, at the time that beet-sugar manufactories began operations, any of the refining plants belonging to the American Sugar Refining Co. received instructions to, or did, without instructions, withdraw from the territory usually covered by the beet-sugar trade?

Mr. ATKINS. No; not through any instructions. They were forced to withdraw from the territory owing to the cutting of prices. We could not pay duty on imported sugars and get them so far west as would enable us to sell in competition with these beet sugars. (Atkins, 94.)

Mr. RAKER. How far west do you ship?

Mr. ATKINS. We ship, when we are able to do so, out to Omaha and Kansas City.

Mr. RAKER. You ship no farther than those points?

Mr. ATKINS. We would if we could, but we can not get in there owing to the competition of the beet factories. * * * (Atkins, 99.)

Mr. HINDS. You think that the taking the tariff off would cripple the beet-sugar industry?

Mr. ATKINS. Undoubtedly.

Mr. HINDS. That is, you mean drive them out as competitors?

Mr. ATKINS. It would cripple a great many of them.

Mr. HINDS. And what would it do to the Louisiana and Texas people?

Mr. ATKINS. I do not think they could produce in Louisiana without some protection.

Mr. HINDS. If those people were eliminated, of whom would the American people buy their sugar?

Mr. ATKINS. They would buy sugars abroad. They could get a little more from Cuba; probably Germany.

Mr. HINDS. You think the Sugar Trust would still be in business selling to them?

Mr. ATKINS. Buying from them?

Mr. HINDS. No; selling to the American people.

Mr. ATKINS. In all probability. (Atkins, 145.)

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Heike, you spoke about the duty on sugar being an advantage to the refineries?

Mr. HEIKE. Of the beet-sugar companies, did I not?

Mr. FORDNEY. As against the beet-sugar industry?

Mr. HEIKE. No; in favor of the beet-sugar industry, the duty is.

Mr. FORDNEY. If the duty were removed on foreign imported sugar, would the benefits inure to the beet-sugar industry and not the refiners that refine foreign imported raw sugar?

Mr. HEIKE. The refiners would have the advantage.

Mr. FORDNEY. That is what I meant.

Mr. HEIKE. The beet-sugar companies probably would find great difficulty in making beet sugars at all. (Heike, 208.)

Mr. MADISON. It would be beneficial (removing the duty from raw sugar), inasmuch as it would destroy the beet-sugar people?

Mr. GILMORE. It would keep them at home.

Mr. MADISON. Keep them in a limited locality?

Mr. GILMORE. Yes.

Mr. MADISON. And leave the field to you people that is naturally yours, as you feel?

Mr. GILMORE. Our natural field. Yes.

Mr. MADISON. In other words, you feel that all east of the Mississippi River, where they can not very well produce sugar beets, is the natural field of the cane-sugar refiners, while the plains and mountain States, where conditions are favorable to the production of beet sugar, is the natural field for the beet-sugar people?

Mr. GILMORE. Yes; I think so. (Gilmore, 1168.)

Mr. RAKER. Michigan sugar, you say, competes with yours in New York?

Mr. JAMISON. Yes; the Michigan sugar has been down to New York State and all through there. It has interfered with us very largely in sales in Ohio and Pennsylvania.

Mr. RAKER. And West Virginia?

Mr. JAMISON. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. How would it affect you if there was no tax on the importation of sugar—raw sugar?

Mr. JAMISON. I think it would enable us to run more constantly.

Mr. RAKER. What do you mean by that, now?
Mr. JAMISON. To keep up the capacity.
Mr. RAKER. Will you explain it?
Mr. JAMISON. I mean we would be able to sell more sugar.
Mr. RAKER. Do you not have a supply all the time?
Mr. JAMISON. Well, we are not able to run full at all times.
Mr. RAKER. Because of the way raw sugar is shipped into the United States?
Mr. JAMISON. Oh, no; on account of the beet product. If there was no duty, I do not think the beet would be so prosperous, and we would probably sell more sugar. If the duty was removed, I mean to say. (Jamison, 1195.)
Mr. SULZER. I understood you to say that you believed the tariff on raw sugar should be materially reduced.
Mr. JAMISON. Yes.
Mr. SULZER. Just to what extent, in your judgment, should it be reduced?
Mr. JAMISON. I should think it should certainly be reduced 1 cent a pound.
Mr. SULZER. One cent a pound?
Mr. JAMISON. Yes.
Mr. SULZER. If it were reduced by legislation 1 cent a pound what, in your opinion, would be the result?
Mr. JAMISON. Well, I think it would confine the sale of beets very largely into their own territory instead of permitting them to absorb freight rates and sell their product about 10 or 20 points under the eastern granulated coming into this territory. It costs them anywhere from half a cent to three-quarters of a cent per pound freight to get it here. (Jamison, 1201.)
Mr. HINDS. Can you tell me how far in the East the beet-sugar people are able to market their sugar?
Mr. SPRECKELS. There is the dividing line on the Missouri River. They sometimes come as far as Pittsburgh. I think the American Beet Sugar Co. has come once as far as New York City.
Mr. HINDS. Have they not come into New England, Mr. Spreckels?
Mr. SPRECKELS. They have come into the State of New York.
Mr. HINDS. Have they not also come into New England some?
Mr. SPRECKELS. I think so.
Mr. HINDS. One member of the firm of Arbuckles testified that they had come into New England.
Mr. SPRECKELS. Yes, sir.
Mr. HINDS. Are they showing a tendency to come farther east all the time?
Mr. SPRECKELS. They are.
Mr. HINDS. And they make the competition severer, if it is competition?
Mr. SPRECKELS. Yes.
Mr. HINDS. Continually?
Mr. SPRECKELS. Yes, sir. They have frequently come as far as Pittsburgh. (C. A. Spreckels, 2267.)
Mr. HINDS. Mr. Spreckels, you have been carrying on a campaign to reduce the tariff as beneficial to the cane-sugar refiners?
Mr. SPRECKELS. I have.
Mr. HINDS. Of course, that will be damaging to the beet-sugar refiners?
Mr. SPRECKELS. To some extent it will. (C. A. Spreckels, 2275.)
Mr. HINDS. In other words, perhaps, you would take it (the tariff) off, would you not, and have free trade?
Mr. SPRECKELS. I would have free trade.
Mr. HINDS. You would have free trade in sugar?
Mr. SPRECKELS. Absolutely. (C. A. Spreckels, 2277, 2278.)

With the interests of the two great branches of the sugar industry thus diametrically opposed, the present bill proposes to sacrifice one absolutely and leave the field in the possession of the other, the reason being as stated in the report of the Committee on Ways and Means accompanying this bill:

Beet sugar leaves the first manufacturing establishment in a refined condition, but all cane sugar, which constitutes about four-fifths of our consumption, must be refined; consequently the refining interest is the most important factor connected with sugar manufacturing in the United States. Therefore the industrial position of refining requires primary consideration. (Majority report, Committee on Ways and Means, p. 5.)

I can not subscribe to this conclusion. I do not think the mere magnitude of the refining interest output requires that it be given primary consideration in the struggle for control of the American market now in progress between the refiners and the beet-sugar producers. I would not wantonly attack either of these great industries, preferring to hold the scales of justice even, but I say, unhesitatingly, that if it becomes necessary to sacrifice one to the other it should not be the beet-sugar industry that should be sacrificed, provided the best interests of the whole country are to be considered.

VALUE OF BEET-SUGAR INDUSTRY.

The whole history of the culture of the sugar beet shows that low prices for sugar throughout the world began when men turned their backs on the plausible theory that the world's supply could be most cheaply raised by the cheap labor of the Tropical Zone and began to raise sugar in the Temperate Zone by the cultivation of beets. The history of the world further shows that in every country this has been regarded as a new and untried experiment, that all sorts of protective tariffs, bounties, and other forms of so-called "hothousing" were necessary before farmers could be educated, capital interested, manufactories established, and consumers converted, but that in the end that production could be stimulated until the age-long supremacy of tropical cane sugar was successfully challenged and beet sugar established as an equal competitor in the race. The story of this struggle is interesting even in the figures of a statistical table. (Hearings, p. 3613.)

Not only have the European nations which have protected the beet-sugar industry become self-supporting and exporters of sugar, but the cultivation of the sugar beet has had an extraordinary effect upon their general agricultural prosperity. Not only does it necessitate careful farming, but the beet itself by breaking up the deep soil with its tap-root and innumerable rootlets greatly increases the yield of cereal crops planted in rotation with it. (Hearings, pp. 2497–2498.)

The effect in Germany was thus described:

(Hearings, p. 2506.)

Mr. PALMER. This is showing what Germany has done in the way of increasing her yield. In wheat in 25 years Germany increased her yield per acre 58.8 per cent. During that time the price of wheat increased 53.5 per cent. But Germany reduced her acreage of wheat notwithstanding that 4.5 per cent. On rye she increased her yield 85.1 per cent; the price of rye increased 42.4 per cent, and she increased her acreage but 5.1 per cent. Of barley she increased her yield 64.8 per cent; the price of barley increased 13.3 per cent; she reduced her acreage of barley 5.4 per cent. Of oats she increased her yield 77.4 per cent; the price of oats increased 46.2 per cent; she increased her oat acreage 14.2 per cent. Of those four cereals the average increase in yield in Germany was 78.5 per cent; the increase in price per bushel was 39.2; and Germany's increase in acreage of those was 5 per cent. Of potatoes she increased her yield 65.6 per cent per acre; the price of potatoes advanced 38.6 per cent; and she increased her area 14.3 per cent, making of these five crops an increase in yield of 88.6 per cent, an increase in price per bushel average, of 45.4 per cent, and an increase in area of 6.7 per cent. Now we come to sugar beets. Her sugar-beet yield per acre increased but 7.1 per cent, as against 88.6 of all these other crops that she has not increased any in her area. The price of sugar on the Magdeburg Exchange during that time instead of going up to 45.4 per cent, as these other crops have, dropped 53.3, and yet she increased her sugar-beet area 60.4 per cent. Why did she do it?

The CHAIRMAN. That is what we would like to hear you explain about; why do you think she did it?

Mr. PALMER. On account of the indirect advantages, nothing else.

The CHAIRMAN. Indirect agricultural benefit to the land?

Mr. PALMER. Yes, sir.

In America a case was cited where a farmer in Utah increased his yield of wheat from 25 bushels to 45 bushels to the acre by planting it after sugar beets. (Hearings, p. 2498.) In Germany a like experiment on 135 farms showed an increase in wheat of 24 per cent, in rye 15 per cent, in barley 25 per cent, in oats 41½ per cent, and in potatoes 102 per cent. (Hearings, p. 2787.) That our Department of Agriculture does not believe that the refining interest requires primary consideration is shown by the following testimony of Dr. Wiley:

(Hearings, p. 3455.)

The CHAIRMAN. Let us see how far you will go in this matter of protection. Suppose the truth is that it costs about 4 cents a pound to produce every pound of beet and cane sugar in the United States, while other countries may, on account of their condition, method of production, labor, or other causes, produce cane sugar for 1 cent per pound and beet sugar for 2 cents per pound, do you still think the American consumer ought to pay the difference in price?

Dr. WILEY. That is a pretty difficult proposition; you are asking me to consider a good many things.

The CHAIRMAN. I just want to see how far you are a protectionist.

Dr. WILEY. I will tell you very frankly how far I will go. When I consider the beneficial effect of this sugar industry on other agricultural industries I would go as far as it would be profitable to the farmers of the United States to maintain that industry.

The CHAIRMAN. No matter how much it cost the people who consumed that sugar?

Dr. WILEY. Yes; no matter how much it cost. If it were a benefit to the agricultural interests of this country as a whole, then I am for it. If I look at it simply from a standpoint of the interest of the man making the sugar, as I stated before, I would not want to tax myself as a consumer too much, but if I see by paying a little more for my sugar the great agricultural industry in this country is benefited, I am willing to pay it. I would go just that far.

There are still other matters which should be taken into consideration in determining which interest deserves primary consideration. For economic reasons refineries must be located on the seacoast (Hearings, pp. 595, 1012), where the supply of raw sugar is available. Their history shows a large percentage of failures while they were split into small, competing concerns, and their officers claimed emphatically that only through combination into a few large concerns were they able to effect those economies necessary to successful operation. (Hearings, pp. 20, 180, 2022.) Beet-sugar factories, on the other hand, are established at numerous points in the interior in comparatively small and independent units, where combination on a large scale does not seem to be necessary or possible to produce efficiency. (Hearings, pp. 1090, 1101.)

THE INTERESTS OF THE CONSUMER.

Where, then, are we to seek for the reason for this sudden and unexpected solicitude on the part of the majority of this House for the interests controlling the refining of foreign raw sugar? It is stated as a convenient makeshift that the removal of duty is in the interest of the consumer.

Who has spoken for the consumer? It is true that the mails of every Member of this House have been flooded with petitions on yellow, perforated paper, praying for a reduction or removal of the duty. Some members of the special committee, during the early stages of the hearing, showed that they had mistaken this for the voice of the people. One of the most important results of the committee's investigation, however, was to disclose the source of this agitation. Mr. Frank C. Lowry, whose name has extensively appeared as "secretary of the committee of wholesale grocers," was summoned before the committee. It soon developed that Mr. Lowry was the sales agent of the Federal Sugar Refining Co., one of the concerns vitally interested in the reduction of the tariff. It was further shown that his "committee of wholesale grocers" was a hollow sham, having no organization, no dues, and no meetings, even to the extent that no two had ever met together. (Hearings, pp. 1607–1611.) The entire initiative in the matter had come from the Federal Sugar Refining Co. and its president, Mr. Claus A. Spreckels. The money for this campaign had been contributed solely by the Federal Sugar Refining Co. (Hearings, pp. 2276, 3379), no grocer or consumer having paid a dollar for the cause (Hearings, p. 1608). The yellow petitions had been sent out, together with a circular which was shown upon cross-examination to abound in misstatements of fact and erroneous conclusions. Seldom has a bubble blown to such proportions as to resemble a popular demand been so effectually pricked by a little cross-examination as were the statements in this circular when its author appeared before the committee. (See particularly pp. 1634–1637 and testimony of T. G. Palmer, pp. 2603, 2621, 2670, 2675–2677.)

The real position of the consumer in this country is not difficult to discover. To one who appreciates the significance of actions as compared with words, it can be found summarized in the following table:

American and European per capita consumption.

Otto Licht's monthly report, dated Magdeburg, December 9, 1910, gives the following table, showing the per capita consumption in Europe:

Countries.	Population.	Consumption of sugar per head.
		Kilograms.	Pounds.
Germany	64,724,000	19.75	43.45
Austria-Hungary	51,018,000	11.43	25.14

United States (Willett & Gray, 1910)	91,972,266	37.05	81.60

The position of the American consumer in consuming more sugar per capita than any other nation in the world except England, more than twice as much as the inhabitant of France, Austria, Russia, and Belgium, and more than four times as much as the inhabitant of Italy, Spain, and Portugal, is deeply significant of his satisfaction with the price of sugar as compared with the wages he earns and the standard of living which he is able to maintain.

This per capita consumption is a sensitive barometer. During the last five months of the year 1911 the price of sugar was abnormally high, with the result that the consumption for the entire year was brought down from 81 pounds per capita to 79 pounds per capita. Except for such temporary checks, however, the following table from Willett & Gray's Statistical Journal for January 4, 1912, shows that the satisfaction of the American consumer has been expressed by a steadily increasing per capita allowance for himself and his family.

RESULT OF FREE SUGAR.

The removal of the duty on sugar being ostensibly for the benefit of the consumer, ordinary regard for his interest should seem to demand that before such a radical departure from the system existing in every civilized country is made the probable effects should be carefully studied. So far as the testimony taken before the special committee is concerned, it indicates neither the certainty nor even the probability that the total abolition of the duty will be of any ultimate benefit to the consumer whatever.

The assertion is made that this bill will reduce the price of sugar to the consumer by 1½ cents a pound. Even if the statement were given full weight, it must be remembered that certainly not more than 50 pounds per capita, and probably not much more than 30 pounds, is consumed directly as sugar (Hearings, pp. 613, 915, 1165, 2652, 3158), while the rest finds its way into a thousand different forms of manufacture, from candy and condensed milk to chewing gum and tobacco, where the saving of a fraction of a cent per unit can not conceivably make any material difference in the retail price to the consumer. Accepting the saving to the consumer at its full value, therefore, the destruction of the domestic industry is to be purchased at the magnificent price of a saving of 75 cents a year to each inhabitant.

The truth of the assertion, however, finds no support from the testimony taken before the special committee. On the contrary, the indications are strong that after a temporary drop in price has put the American producer out of business the shortage in the world's supply thus created will force the price above the original level.

THE WORLD'S SUPPLY OF SUGAR.

The great fallacy in the proposition is the underlying assumption, seldom expressed but necessarily implied, that if our tariff is removed our markets will be opened to a large or practically inexhaustible supply of sugar which is waiting on the outside ready to come in at a low price. No testimony before the committee showed the existence of any such continuous source of supply. It is true that at the present moment Russia has nearly 1,000,000 tons of surplus sugar locked up under the artificial arrangements of the Brussels Convention, which govern European production and distribution. (Hearings, pp. 3543, 3562.) This sugar is entitled to the equivalent of an export bounty at present reckoned by the United States Treasury Department at 72 cents a hundred pounds (Hearings, p. 3588), and as the present bill does not even save the countervailing duty this sugar would be freed to swamp our beet-sugar industry during the first year.

After that, however, we are met with the portentous fact that in the face of an increasing world's consumption the world's production fell from 16,900,000 tons in 1910–11 to 15,500,000 tons estimated for the coming year, a decrease of 1,400,000 tons. (Hearings, p. 3585.) In other words, there is no great quantity of sugar permanently available for the American consumer above that already required for the world's consumption. I have no doubt that, in addition to the immediate dumping of the Russian surplus upon us, every effort possible will be made to lower the price of sugar until the American producer is driven out of the business; but the fact that the resulting shortage of nearly 1,000,000 tons in the world's supply will permanently increase the price to the American consumer appears as reasonably certain as any forecast of market conditions can be.

THE WORLD'S PRICE OF SUGAR.

Besides throwing the American consumer upon the mercy of a world's production, which does not exist in quantities adequate to his needs, we are further throwing him upon the mercy of the most artificially controlled price of a staple article in the world. It is a matter of congratulation that the speculative features of buying and selling which are so prevalent with respect to wheat, cotton, and other crops are absent from the sugar industry in America. (Hearings, p. 3072.) In Europe, however, where the world's market and world's prices are controlled, the situation is quite otherwise. Not only was Europe described as a network of sugarhouses and exchanges, facilitating constant specification (Hearings, pp. 3067, 3583), but the very Governments of European countries, acting through the Brussels Convention, exercise an artificial control over sugar which can at any time affect the world's price. The situation as regards Russia, already referred to, is a case in point. During the past six months the price of sugar in Europe has been determined not by the law of supply and demand, but by the action of a committee which was called to determine how much, if any, additional sugar Russia should be allowed to export and by the predictions of the speculators as to the action of that committee. (Hearings, p. 3584.) Under the Brussels Convention Russia is allowed to export only 200,000 tons of sugar a year to convention countries. In view of the world-wide prevalence of high prices during last fall Russia applied for permission to export 500,000 tons, but after much delay and negotiation the amount was finally fixed at 350,000 tons, an amount not sufficient to relieve the present shortage.

Should the present bill become a law, it is to the artificial conditions of this kind, of which the American consumer knows little and over which he has no control, that his interests are to be intrusted.

Under these circumstances it would apparently be the duty of those seeking to serve the interests of the consumer to inquire most carefully if any other form of relief, if relief is needed, would be more likely to give more permanent benefit to the object of their solicitude. Here again the testimony before the special committee would seem to indicate that such a method is readily available. It was pointed out by Mr. W. P. Willett, the sugar expert, in the following language:

(Willett, pp. 3083–3084.)

Mr. SULZER. What, in your judgment as an expert, would bring about a permanent reduction of the cost of manufactured sugar to the consumers of the United States?

Mr. WILLETT. By increasing the amount of domestic production and in Porto Rico and Hawaii—that is, by increasing the quantity of sugar within the United States to the extent that we would be required to purchase no sugar whatever at world prices. Last year we bought only 77,000 tons at the world price. We were as near as that to that condition in 1910. We did come within 77,000 tons of being entirely free and independent of the world's prices, whereas a few years before we had been importing 6,700,000 tons. (Misprint; should be 670,000.)

Mr. SULZER. In other words, you think it advisable for the Government of the United States to do everything within its legitimate scope to encourage the growth of cane and beet sugar in the United States?

Mr. WILLETT. Yes, sir.

Mr. SULZER. And in our insular possessions?

Mr. WILLETT. Yes, sir; in our insular possessions.

(Willett, p. 3589.)

Mr. HINDS. Then, Mr. Willett, the world's price for sugar is not a supply-and-demand price entirely, is it?

Mr. WILLETT. What reference has that to Russia?

Mr. HINDS. With all these arrangements of bounty and these other arrangements, it results that the supply and demand of sugars——

Mr. WILLETT (interposing). You mean it is not free to seek a proper level?

Mr. HINDS. Yes.

Mr. WILLETT. No; it is not free throughout the world to seek a proper level of price.

Mr. HINDS. And the world's price is an artificial price?

Mr. WILLETT. To the extent that the trade of the world is not free and open and clear and it is subject to bounties and restrictions and conditions. What we want to do is to get independent of all that, and we can do it.

Mr. HINDS. Suppose we increase considerably in the Philippines and Cuba increases considerably and the beet-sugar supply in this country doubles, will not that make a revolution in sugar?

Mr. WILLETT. Most decidedly. That is what I say—increase the Cuban, Porto Rican, Hawaiian, Philippine, and domestic cane and beet sugar industry to a point above our requirements for consumption up to 500,000 tons, so that if Cuba should give out some year and not produce much sugar we would still have enough for our consumption. Then we would be independent of the world, and we would make our own (world's) price.

Mr. HINDS. And what ought that price to be in the United States?

Mr. WILLETT. That price, after equalizing the production to consumption, will depend upon the competition between the different interests—between Cuba, Porto Rico, Hawaii, and the domestic beet and cane industry. They will all be working to get our market, and the consumer then will get the advantage.

Mr. HINDS. And probably we would get the cheapest sugar on earth?

Mr. WILLETT. We would get the cheapest sugar on earth under those conditions. There is no doubt about that.

Mr. HINDS. And is that situation really in sight, do you think?

Mr. WILLETT. We came within 74,000 tons of it in 1910, and this year, according to the outlook of the Cuban crop at the present moment, we will come—I should say that we might meet it, provided that the shortage in Europe does not infringe upon our Cuban reserve. Already the United Kingdom has bought 140,000 tons away from our supply in Cuba, but they are reselling to, or trying to.

(Willett, pp. 3556–3557.)

Mr. WILLETT. * * * This promotion of our industry is a much more vital point (from the consumers' standpoint included) than is a reduction of tariff to a point that lets in foreign sugar and thereby diminishes the home protection. Whenever we reach the condition indicated, competition between our free and partially free duty producers will begin and the consumers will benefit thereby and the United States will be entirely free from the speculative and other influences which control the world's price, and it is not unreasonable to expect that, under the conditions indicated, the United States will become a considerable exporter of its surplus production to the foreign countries which may be short of supplies, as under present conditions abroad.

As showing the ultimate effect of home production equal to or surpassing home consumption, I call attention specially for earnest consideration to the fact that in 1910 we reached this desired consummation within 74,000 tons, and as a result we were almost independent of Europe; so much so, in fact, that we got our supplies from Cuba at over one-half cent per pound under world's prices, during which time one man (Santa Maria) was carrying on a big bull speculation in Europe in which we would certainly have been involved but for this limited amount we required that year. In 1911 the Cuban crop fell short of 1910 by 320,898 tons, and we required 212,182 tons from abroad to complete our supplies; hence we were involved in the world's prices in 1911, and the result was a hue and cry against the high prices of sugar. I am not making an argument, but am simply pointing to the facts that appear to me to make the consideration of the increase in our local supplies of greater importance in legislation than a reduction of duties beyond certain limits, those limits to be such as will positively exclude all sugars outside those of our States and dependencies.

(Willett, p. 3978.)

In all these analyses I reach the same conclusion—that to decrease the price of sugar to the consumer, increase the domestic production as rapidly as possible.

In view of this testimony the present bill seems to have been framed and presented with deplorable ignorance of the actual conditions existing within and outside of the United States, or else as a deliberate attempt to make political capital out of the popular misapprehension as to the ultimate effects of free sugar.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. Chairman, in the year 1910, which was a normal year in both sugar consumption and sugar production, the total consumption of the United States of refined sugar was about 3,350,000 long tons. Of this amount we produced 330,000 tons of domestic cane in Louisiana and Texas, 457,000 tons of domestic beet in the West, and 15,000 tons of domestic maple and molasses in Louisiana, Texas, and the West, thus making the total sugar production in continental United States 805,000 tons.

From our insular possessions we get the following amounts, free of duty: From Hawaii, 459,000 tons; from Porto Rico, 217,000 tons; from the Philippines, 96,000 tons—a total from our insular possessions of 832,000 tons.

From Cuba we import 1,640,000 tons and from all other countries, except Cuba, 73,000 tons, making up the total consumption of 3,350,000 tons.

It is thus apparent, Mr. Chairman, that Continental United States is now producing about 25 per cent of the country's consumption of sugar; that our insular possessions are producing another 25 per cent of that consumption, and that the island of Cuba produces almost all of the other 50 per cent. To-day Continental United States is only producing one-fourth of the sugar that we consume. We have not failed to do better than this because of the absence of sufficient stimulation to the industry in the way of tariff duties on sugar, for since the very beginning of this Government heavy tariff duties have been levied on sugar with the exception of one brief period, that from 1890 to 1894. The act of 1879 carried a sugar tax of 3 cents per pound and in 1790 the tariff was 5 cents per pound; in 1794, 4 cents per pound; in 1816, 3 cents per pound on brown or raw sugar, 4 cents per pound on white or refined sugar, 10 cents per pound on lump sugar, and 12 cents per pound on loaf sugar In 1832 the tax was 2½ cents per pound on brown sugar and 3½ on refined sugar; in 1842 it was 2½ cents per pound on brown sugar and 6 cents per pound on refined sugar; in 1846, three-fourths of a cent per pound on raw sugar and 2 cents per pound on refined sugar; in 1861, 2 cents per pound; in 1862, 2½ cents per pound; in 1864, 3 cents per pound; in 1870, 4 cents per pound; in 1883, 2.24 cents per pound on raw sugar and 3½ cents per pound on refined sugar; in 1890, five-tenths of a cent per pound on refined sugar; and all other sugar under 16 Dutch standard in color. free, with a bounty of 2 cents per pound on domestic production; in 1894, 40 cents ad valorem and an additional tax of one-eighth of a cent per pound on refined sugar; in 1897, 1.685 cents per pound on raw sugar and 1.95 cents per pound on refined sugar; in 1909, 1.685 cents per pound on raw sugar and 1.90 cents per pound on refined sugar.

So, Mr. Chairman, the truth of the statement that the production of sugar has been substantially and almost uniformly stimulated by our tariff laws must be apparent to all, and if, during all the years that have elapsed since 1789, we have been unable to produce in this country the sugar that we consume, it is not because of a failure to grant long, permanent, and excesssive "protection" to sugar.

I next invite the attention of the committee to a table showing the total consumption of sugar in the United States and the percentage of that consumption produced in the United States, beginning with the year 1830 and ending with the year 1911:

Consumption and production of sugar in the United States in certain years, in long tons.

Year.	Total consumption.	Production in continental United States.	Per cent of consumption produced in continental United States.
1830	69,711	24,321	49
1840	107,177	51,556	48
1850	239,409	111,787	47
1860	428,785	120,845	28
1870	607,834	63,200	10.5
1880	956,784	151,736	16
1890	1,522,731	265,439	18
1894	2,012,714	312,079	15
1897	2,070,978	355,371	17
1898	2,002,902	293,905	14.5
1899	2,078,068	233,426	11
1900	2,219,847	269,833	12
1901	2,372,316	439,986	18
1902	2,571,359	473,126	18
1903	2,529,421	496,463	19
1904	2,678,060	423,135	16
1905	2,566,680	544,722	21
1906	2,825,343	613,717	21
1907	2,913,928	663,610	23
1908	3,097,153	780,200	25
1909	3,190,430	739,010	23
1910	3,302,938	785,595	24
1911	3,351,000	756,000	25

In the last column of this table I have figured the percentage of our consumption that the domestic industry has supplied in each of the years for which the figures are given. You will observe that as far back as the year 1830 we were producing 49 per cent of our sugar consumption; that the percentage remained practically unaltered until the beginning of our Civil War, when it fell to 28 per cent. You will also observe that in the year 1890, the year of the McKinley bill, it was 18 per cent. In 1894, the year of the Wilson bill, it was 17 per cent, and the last year for which the figures are given, 1911, it was 25 per cent. Since the passage of the Dingley bill, in 1897, consumption of sugar in the United States has increased from 2,070,978 tons to 3,351,000 tons in 1911, or an increase in consumption of 1,280,000 tons. During that same time production of sugar in continental United States increased from 353,371 tons to 756,000 tons, an increase in production of 420,629 tons as against the enormous increase in consumption of 1,280,000 tons, to which I have just alluded.

In 1830 we produced 49 per cent of the sugar we consumed; in 1897, 17 per cent; in 1911, 25 per cent; so that it does seem to me that, looking at this question solely from the standpoint of the ability of this country to produce its own sugar, there is any reasonable ground upon which to base the hope that the time will ever come when it can be done in our continental territory at least.

Mr. Chairman, in presenting this bill to the committee I am compelled, on account of the somewhat limited time at my command, to take up the subject in a rather desultory way. The question is so large a one and there are so many angles from which it ought to be considered that I can only hope, as I shall endeavor, to cover the whole ground as best I can and to discuss it from as many of those angles as possible. I shall discuss it first from the standpoint of the beet-sugar production, because that production is greater than cane-sugar production, and because so far during this debate we have heard more about beet-sugar production than about cane-sugar production, although I do not know but that that will be remedied at a later period in the debate.

Mr. WICKLIFFE. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HARDWICK. Not now.

Mr. WICKLIFFE. It is right on this particular point.

Mr. HARDWICK. I am going to discuss the cane-sugar question a little later.

Mr. WICKLIFFE. If the gentleman will only permit me——

Mr. HARDWICK. No; I can not.

Mr. WICKLIFFE. It is right on this point.

Mr. HARDWICK. Very well; make it short.

Mr. WICKLIFFE. From the initial pound produced in Louisiana down to the year 1857, or the year 1859, the eve of the Civil War, the production of cane sugar in Louisiana went from that initial pound up to over a quarter of a million tons. With the coming on of the war, as the gentleman well knows——

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. Chairman, I can not yield further.

Mr. WICKLIFFE (continuing). It went down to practically nothing, but by 1879, as they were coming out of the reconstruction period and out of the effects of that war, the cane production had got up to 79,000 tons, and by 1889 it was 189,000 tons——

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. Chairman, I can not yield any further.

Mr. WICKLIFFE. Mr. Chairman, I think out of courtesy the gentleman ought to yield to me further.

Mr. HARDWICK. The gentleman from Louisiana frames with his own lips the strongest indictment that can be made against the sugar-cane industry in Louisiana. He says its production was over a quarter of a million tons at the beginning of the Civil War, and yet from 1861 up to the present moment it has only reached 330,000 tons.

Mr. WICKLIFFE. But do not these figures show that it went down in 1870 as the effect of the war?

Mr. HARDWICK. That may be true, but, in my judgment, you will never be able to recover——

Mr. WICKLIFFE. From the war?

Mr. HARDWICK. No; you will never be able to recover the lost ground, because your industry has been hothoused from the very beginning, artificially stimulated from its inception, because it can not continue to exist except at the continued and tremendous expense of the American consumers, and, in my judgment, they are not going to stand it any longer. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. Chairman, how much is invested in the beet-sugar industry of the country? How much real money has been put in it and is in it to-day? In this connection I call attention to the report of the special committee that investigated the great sugar industry of the country, a report unanimous in its findings, and according to that report—page 26—the real investment in the beet-sugar industry of the country is about $60,000,000, although their capitalization, according to the evidence taken by the committee, was about $104,000,000, and is claimed to be $129,000,000, according to one of the census reports referred to by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD].

Pardon me, Mr. Chairman, if I digress for just a moment to discuss a somewhat tangential question. How much interest has the American Sugar Refining Co., commonly known as the Sugar Trust, in the beet-sugar companies of the country; to what extent are the latter real independents and actual competitors of the trusts? The beet-sugar companies produce 14 per cent of the country's consumption of sugar, and of those companies the trust owns the majority of the stock or is the largest and most influential and, I believe, the controlling stockholder in companies that produce more than one-half of the total beet-sugar production of the country. And yet the contention is seriously made to this House and to the country that the beet-sugar producers are real independents; that they are engaged in a battle royal with their largest stockholder and strongest ally; that they can not stand the removal of the "protection" that they have so long enjoyed. It is contended for them that they are the only real competitors of the trust, that their margin of profit is small, and that they can not live without continued governmental favor and unabated tariff protection; and my friend from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY], who preceded me in this debate, sings their death wail upon this floor, as he tells this House and the American people that the beet-sugar industry of this country is doomed to destruction if this bill should become a law.

It is well to weigh with some care the soundness of this appeal; it is well to consider with some caution the accuracy of this claim. Let us take the great beet-sugar company from the gentleman's own State, the Michigan Beet Sugar Co., in which the trust is the largest and most potent stockholder, exercising what I believe to be a dominating and controlling influence over its business and its policy.

On May 25, 1910, the company held its annual meeting at the Eddy Building, Detroit, Mich. Let me quote to you briefly from the Beet Sugar Journal of June, 1910:

The Michigan Sugar Co. reports a profitable year. The regular annual meeting of stockholders of the Michigan Sugar Co. was held at the Eddy Building, Detroit, Mich., Wednesday afternoon, May 25, 1910. There was a representative attendance to hear the statement of the officers as to the year's business. The year was a profitable one, the company being able to show a surplus of $3,025,000 after expending $3,500,000 for labor and beets, and also paying regular dividends not only on the preferred, but on the common stock as well. As the Wednesday meeting was the regular annual meeting, no dividend was declared.

I next invite your attention to an extract from the Beet Sugar Journal of July 6, 1910:

Offers of 121 for stock in the Michigan Sugar Co. have been made within the last month, and the stock is now considered one of the best on the Detroit or, for that matter, any market. The enormous profits, coupled with the favorable prospects, are the causes for the increase in interest and price in stock. The net profits of the Michigan Sugar Co. in 1909 exceeded $1,500,000, and the financial statement submitted at the annual meeting last month showed a surplus of $3,000,000. By a person in close touch with the workings of the company it is stated that the earnings from the sale of the by-products is almost enough to meet the dividend payments. The stock has trebled in value in little more than a year.

"Michigan sugar stock is now one of the best investments possible," says a local broker who has been prominent in handling the stock; "there are more buyers for it than there is stock for sale, and probabilities are an even higher mark than already touched will be reached before the break comes. All Michigan sugar companies are prospering. When the 'trust' came into the State some years ago it smashed many independent companies, but in recent years, due to the improved methods of growing and manufacturing, which permits large profits to the farmer and extraordinary profits to the factory, several independent companies have been rehabilitated and are now sharing in the general prosperity."

This company was chartered with a capital stock of about $9,000,000, one-half common and one-half preferred. The combined daily slicing capacity of its six factories is very little in excess of 4,000 tons of beets per day. Measured by the standard of cost given us by beet-sugar factory men themselves, the six factories of the Michigan Sugar Co. do not represent an actual investment of more than $4,500,000, or about the amount of its preferred stock. The four and one-half millions of common stock was water, promoter's profit, and tariff capitalization, nothing more and nothing less, and yet it has increased its capital stock from $9,000,000 to $12,000,000 out of its earnings, and from 1906, when it was organized, to 1910, if we may believe the Beet Sugar Journal, it has more than trebled the value of its stock, until to-day the stock that was originally water is selling at $121 per share, and yet this selfsame Michigan Sugar Co. is one of the loudest of all in its protest against tariff reduction, and especially against free sugar, pleading the baby act and crying that it can not stand without protection from the Government.

Let us take another specific case. I refer next to the Great Western Sugar Co., "a corporation under the laws of New Jersey," operating in Colorado, and in which the American Sugar Refining Co. is again the largest and, I believe, the controlling stockholder. It is capitalized at $30,000,000, one-half common and one-half preferred stock; possibly one-half value and certainly at least one-half water.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. Is the gentleman sure that it is only half water?

Mr. HARDWICK. Testimony at the hearings indicated that, to my mind. It is capitalized at $30,000,000; its slicing capacity is 9,700 tons of beets daily. Tested by the standard of cost given us by the beet-sugar factory people themselves, this would make a total real value for the nine factories of the Great Western Sugar Co. of about $12,000,000, and, as the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HUGHES] has suggested, it would seem to be true that even a little more than one-half of the total capitalization of $30,000,000 is water. At any rate, when we say that only one-half is water we think we have been more than fair to the company. This great sugar company long has reaped a rich, golden harvest from the patient and long-suffering people; and yet how much do you suppose that this great sugar company values its property for taxation when it comes to make its tax returns to the State of Colorado? Two and one-half million dollars. You ask me how much water there is in its stock? Under oath to the tax officers of the State of Colorado, its officers claimed that its property is worth about two and one-half millions, and yet it is capitalized at $30,000,000 and is crying aloud to-day because we are unwilling to let them declare dividends on water for all the years to come at the expense of every housewife and every grocery-bill payer in the land.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. It seems to me that the gentleman is making an awfully poor showing as to the sugar company, if it has an actual value of only $2,500,000 and is capitalized at $30,000,000. They ought to take example from the Standard Oil Co.——

Mr. HARDWICK. I do not claim that this mania for overcapitalization is peculiar to the sugar industry alone. I admit that it is everywhere, in every line of industry, but I am opposed to it all, and I especially object to it when they seek to capitalize the tariff and lay the heavy burden of continued dividends on watered stock upon the backs and stomachs of the American people.

Now, let us take another of these puling infants—the American Beet Sugar Co. This company is capitalized at $20,000,000—$5,000,000 preferred and $15,000,000 common; $5,000,000 value and $15,000,000 water. With a slicing capacity of about 4,000 tons per day, the real value of its five plants, four in Colorado and one in Washington, can not exceed $5,000,000, according to the standard of value fixed by one of its chief owners, Mr. Oxnard, and yet to-day preferred stock of the American Beet Co. is above par and the common is above 50. They have capitalized the tariff to the extent that they have made seven and one-half million dollars' profit in 12 years, besides paying 6 per cent on their actual investment. I invite your attention to a statement in the Beet Sugar Journal of April, 1911, in reference to the profits of this company:

"American Beet Sugar Co. sets new high record. The report of the American Sugar Co. for the year ended March 31, 1911, shows total income of $8,357,012, an increase of $1,347,368 over the previous year, and a surplus, after preferred-stock dividends, of $1,643,659, equal to 10.95 per cent earned on the $15,000,000 of common stock, compared with $1,097,252, or 7.31 per cent, earned in the previous year. The common stock has not yet paid any dividends. The preferred pays 6 per cent. Comparative results for the past three years follow."

Then are given the figures for 1911, 1910, and 1909. For 1909 the gross receipts were $7,135,326; total income, $7,156,855; expenses, interest, tax, etc., $5,863,713; balance, $1,293,143. Well, now, we will take 1910: Gross receipts, $6,983,772; total income, $7,009,644; expenses, tax, interest, etc., $5,612,391; balance, $1,397,252. For 1911: Gross receipts, $8,344,792; total income, $8,357,012; expenses, interest tax, etc., $6,413,353; balance, $1,943,659. Preferred dividends, $300,000 in each of the years 1911 and 1910 and $245,400 in the year 1909, leaving a surplus of $1,643,659 in the year 1911, $1,097,252 in the year 1910, and $1,047,743 in the year 1909. "The general balance sheet as of March 31 shows total assets of $22,577,371."

"The reserve for working capital is $1,825,637, against $832,151 a year ago, and there is a reserve for betterments and improvements of $377,246, a new item. Bills payable to the amount of $1,266,000, which appeared in the previous balance sheet, have been paid off. H. R. Duval, president, says: 'The surplus has been applied to working capital, which is now adequate for ordinary operations. The company is now free of all debt. There was an increased production of 196,741 bags, exceeding that of any former year. The increase was principally due to California, though Grand Island increased 31,704 bags. In Colorado the decrease was 88,624 bags. Due largely to increased efficiency of the plants, the cost of making sugar, as compared with previous campaigns, was somewhat diminished. Taxes increased $30,989, of which $25,560 was the Federal corporation income tax. Depreciation and maintenance cost $344,842—was $13,119 less than last year.' The design of this expenditure (included in the above statement in expenses) is to keep the plants up to their original condition."

I next invite your attention to a statement in the American Sugar Industry of March, 1912, in reference to the profits of this same company—the American Beet Sugar Co.—for the year ending March 30, 1912:

The net earnings of the American Beet Sugar Co. for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1912, will probably not exceed 12 per cent, instead of the 15 per cent estimated last December. The reason assigned for this is that the company began to sell its 1911 crop too early. Sales were made in advance of production in order to take advantage of what seemed a very flattering profit. Sugar prices advanced, and it is estimated the difference to the company amounted to between $300,000 and $500,000. The company then went to the other extreme and held back the remainder of the 1911 crop on a declining market.

And yet this American Beet Sugar Co. protests that it can not exist without protection, and urges that it should be allowed to continue to extort excessive profits on watered capitalization from the pockets of the American consumer.

Let me cite one more example of exactly the sort of "protection" we are urged to continue at the expense of the American consumer for the benefit of these lusty "infants." Probably the first beet factory in the country in recent years was established about 1887 by Mr. C. A. Spreckels, sr., at Watsonville, Cal. According to the sworn evidence of Mr. C. A. Spreckels, jr., a son of the man who built it and owned it, this factory made 12 per cent the first year of its operation. The following year it made 80 per cent. It was capitalized at $500,000, of which only $400,000 was paid in actual cash, so that its owners got back more than its entire capital from two years of its operation, and finally suspended because the Sugar Trust had then acquired an interest in it and would not pay more than $4 per ton for beets, and by this niggardly policy caused the farmers to plant fruit orchards instead of beets.

This brings me next, Mr. Chairman, to the discussion of another important phase of the beet-sugar question. Our good friends from the beet-sugar regions, where the sunshine of God is very bright and is so easily coined into sugar, protest against this bill in the name of the American farmer. Mr. Chairman, it is my experience that there have been more appeals to demagogy, more appeals to prejudice, more appeals to ignorance, in this House and in Congress in the name of the American farmer than in almost any other name that I can think of, except possibly the American laborer, and it does seem to me that this particular appeal is the most unjustifiable I have ever heard, and I protest against it as emphatically as I can in the name of the great masses of American farmers throughout the country who constitute in a very large measure the backbone of its prosperity and well-being and who demand no more than a square deal and an even chance to earn their living by the sweat of their own brows in the sunshine of the Almighty unhampered by excessive and unnecessary burdens and unfair discriminations against them and demanding neither discrimination in their favor against other people nor special privileges of any kind whatsoever.

It is contended, in the first place, that the American farmer is paid more for his beets than the European farmer, and must be paid less if the tariff on sugar is removed. I dispute both propositions. First, I say the American is not paid more for his beets than the European farmer. In connection with that proposition I desire to first cite an extract from Willett & Gray's Sugar Journal of June 12, 1901, when that journal was advocating Cuban reciprocity:

The heavy protection now granted to beet-sugar producers all goes to the manufacturers, who do not pay the farmers any more than is received by the farmers in Germany for beets. German factories produce refined sugar at a cost of less than 2½ cents per pound, exclusive of bounty, and American factories suitably located and ably managed should be able to do as well. American manufacturers have already demonstrated their ability to produce sugar at 3 cents per pound; therefore the heavy protection now granted is not needed and the removal of duty on Cuban raw sugar will neither ruin the business of the beet-sugar manufacturers nor injuriously affect the farmer.

In answer to the tables furnished by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY] on this subject, I wish to invite attention to the fact that the tables cited by that gentleman contain prices paid in Germany throughout a series of years, and that they have not been compared by the gentleman with any similar tables giving averages in prices paid for beets in this country during the same period of years. On the contrary, the gentleman undertook to compare them with American prices paid in the year 1911. This is manifestly unfair, because the prices paid for beets were higher in 1911 than they were in 1902, for instance, both in this country and in Germany. It would seem to me that the fairer comparison would be to take the year 1911 and compare the prices for that year in Europe and America. In 1911 the prices of beets, according to the findings of the special committee, were $5.30 per ton in California, $5 per ton in Utah and Idaho, from $5.50 to $6.50 per ton in Colorado and Nebraska, and between $5 and $6 in Michigan. Compare these prices with the prices paid in Europe. Mr. Czarnikaw, of London, one of the most eminent authorities on sugar conditions in the whole world, states that the usual price paid for beets in countries that are parties to the Brussels convention—and that includes most of the beet-sugar producing countries in Europe—was $5.11 to $5.48 per ton. Messrs. L. Behrens & Son, of Hamburg, fix the price at from $5.32 to $6.70 per ton. Messrs. H. J. Merck & Co., of Hamburg, reporting for the district of Stettin, fix the average price at $5.78 per ton. In Posen the price varied from $5.59 to $6.49, the average being $6.27 per ton. In Belgium and Holland the average in 1911 was $5.79 per ton.

In addition to the above, in Denmark at least, and probably in Germany and other European countries, besides receiving payment for his beets according to the agreed scale, the farmer is also given in payment for his beets a percentage of the factory profits. So it seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that the American farmer is not well treated by our beet factories in comparison with the treatment the European farmers receive from the European beet factories, and that the American farmer is not as well paid for his beets as the European farmer. It seems to me that the "protection" that has been so bounteously given the beet-sugar people has gone to swell profits of overcapitalized factories rather than to increase the profits of American farmers. In this connection I wish to read you a telegram that I have just received this morning and that bears directly on this subject:

NEW YORK, March 14, 1912.

THOMAS W. HARDWICK,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

Referring to our conversation of the other day, I am unable to ascertain the name of the gentleman whom I met on the train coming East on March 2 last. He stated in the presence of a number of witnesses that he had been to California for the purpose of selling beet-sugar seed, and was on his way to see Mr. Joseph Smith, head of the Mormon Church, and exhibited a telegram stating arrangements were made for him to lunch with Mr. Smith on March 4. He was met at Ogden by a number of gentlemen, indicating his being of some importance. He claimed to be a manufacturer of beet sugar in Germany, and stated that he and manufacturers of beet sugar in general had to pay about $7.50 per ton this year for sugar beets, while during the last year they paid only from $5.50 to $6 per ton. The reason for this was that farmers were dissatisfied and could no longer be induced to raise them for less. He stated, further, that the manufacturing cost was about the same; labor in Europe, perhaps, being less, but fuel, on the other hand, higher.

C. A. SPRECKELS.

Mr. MONDELL. I would like to ask the gentleman from Georgia who is this man who is being quoted?

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. C. A. Spreckels.

Mr. MONDELL. But the gentleman who made this statement, who is he?

Mr. HARDWICK. If the gentleman from Wyoming had listened to the reading of the telegram, he would not have asked the question.

Mr. MONDELL. It seems to have been some gentleman whose name is unknown. His identity is unknown.

Mr. HARDWICK. That is just what the telegram says.

Now, I want to make this one other suggestion along the line of the hypocrisy of this cry that this tax on American consumption ought to be retained to "protect" the American farmer. Let me suggest to the gentlemen who raise that cry, who are so solicitous of the interest of the American farmer, that it is rather wonderful to recall that when they and their party came to protect the American farmer from competition with his Canadian neighbor they imposed the low tax of "10 per cent ad valorem on sugar beets," and that in 1909, 37,731 tons of sugar beets were imported from Canada into the United States, and in 1910, 57,950 tons, all of this importation being sold to the Michigan Sugar Co. and the Mount Clemmons Sugar Co.

I next invite your attention to another phase of this question. It appeared from the testimony of many of the witnesses who were engaged as farmers in the production of sugar beets in the various Western States that the net profits per acre of the sugar-beet farmers varied from $19.20 to $76. Taking the average of the figures given by the first 14 witnesses on this subject, it would appear that the average net profit per acre of the sugar-beet farmer throughout the West was about $43.37 in the year 1911. According to the figures of the Department of Agriculture, the average net profit of the American farmer in the production of wheat was $3.07 per acre, and the average net profit of the American farmer engaged in the production of corn was $8.15 per acre. The above averages do not include any allowances whatever for rent of land. These are given by the department for the year 1909, but I do not believe that the figures of 1911 or 1912 will materially vary from them. The estimate of the average net profit of the American farmer engaged in the production of cotton is not above $6 per acre. It is often much less, but certainly never much larger. Now, is the American farmer who makes $3.07 on his acre of wheat, or $6 on his acre of cotton, or $8.15 on his acre of corn, to be taxed in order that other American farmers, infinitely smaller in number, shall be allowed to make $43.37 on an acre of beets? Such a contention does not appeal to my sense of justice, nor do I believe that it will ever be indorsed by the people of America, if any party should have the temerity to present it.

As I have already stated, I firmly believe that sugar can be put on the free list without a cent's reduction to the farmer who raises sugar beets, if the beet-sugar factories will simply be content to accept a fair and reasonable return on their actual and legitimate investment; but in any event, I am unwilling to tax all of the American people in order to give a few thousand American farmers a better price for their sugar-beets.

Mr. Chairman, I next wish to invite your attention to a comparison between the cost of production of beet sugar in the United States and in Germany. According to the findings of the special committee on sugar, the average American cost of production of refined beet sugar was 3.54 cents per pound, against the German average cost of production of 2.415 cents per pound. It must be remembered, however, that the American figures were given by witnesses who are interested in making the cost of production here appear as high as possible, so as to give greater force to their demand for continued protection; and it is worthy of note that, according to their own admissions, the Spreckels Sugar Co., of California, is producing beet sugar at 2.71 cents per pound, and the Oxnard factory of the American Beet Sugar Co. at 2.81 cents per pound, and according to the testimony of Mr. Coombs, of Colorado, the Great Western is producing it at 2.59 cents per pound. I quite firmly believe that the best equipped and most favorably located of our beet-sugar factories are to-day producing beet sugar at nearly if not quite as low a cost as their European competitors and that they can stand alone against Germany without any tariff protection whatever, pay the farmer the present price for his beets, and make a fair and reasonable profit on their actual investments, although I think it quite probable that without tariff aid they will find it difficult, if not impossible, to continue to pay huge dividends on excessively watered stock.

I call the attention of the committee to the fact that in 1910 the export price of granulated sugar at Hamburg (first marks) was 3.21 cents per pound. Add 0.12 cent per pound for freight to New York and 0.18 cent per pound for difference in grade, and this makes a price of 3½ cents per pound, which the American beet-sugar factories would have to meet at the Atlantic coast. When the freight rate of 0.38 cent per pound from New York to Missouri River points, which are the principal competitive points, is added, then this makes a price of 3.88 cents per pound, which the beet-sugar factories must meet in Missouri River territory. In addition to this, it must be remembered that the freight rate from New York to Michigan, Colorado, Utah, Idaho, California, Minnesota, Ohio, and Iowa points is much greater in all instances than 0.38 cent per pound and that German sugar could not get into the home territory of the beet-sugar factories under 4 cents per pound.

It is thus evident that almost every beet factory that is willing to take a reasonable profit on honest capitalization can live under free sugar and do fairly well at that.

Mr. HOWELL. While there is that margin, do you suppose that the German producer is going to sell his sugar at the bare cost of manufacture any more than the Americans?

Mr. HARDWICK. No; the cheapest price, exclusive of duty, at which German beet sugar got into New York in the year 1910 was 3.5 cents per pound, and the cheapest price at which it could have gotten into Missouri territory was 3.88 cents per pound.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARDWICK. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman has said that the average German cost is about 1¼ cents less than the American cost?

Mr. HARDWICK. I have given the committee the figures.

Mr. MONDELL. Can the gentleman, on the face of that, contend that the American can live at that rate?

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. Chairman, I can not yield further on that point, as I have already shown the committee how he can live and do fairly well at that if he will only be content to take a reasonable profit on the capital really invested in his business. I earnestly contend that he will get along if he will do that, and I earnestly contend that the Congress of the United States ought to require him to do that for the benefit of the American consumer. I will now yield to the gentleman from Utah.

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. Chairman, I want the gentleman to state what are the freight charges from the factories of Utah, Colorado, and California to the Missouri River points.

Mr. HARDWICK. From Michigan it is 38 cents per hundred pounds, or the same as the rate from New York; from Colorado it is 25 cents per hundred pounds; from Utah it is 50 cents per hundred pounds, as I understand and remember the figures.

Now, as I have already stated, there is a large scope of territory where imported sugar could not come at all without paying a freight rate of 78 to 80 cents per hundred pounds. It would cost them at least that to get into Colorado, and possibly more to get into Utah. They could not get into California unless they absorbed an even greater freight rate, unless the operation of the Panama Canal should make a difference.

Now, Mr. Chairman, it is contended for the beet-sugar people that they have been philanthropists and public benefactors in more than one respect. They contend, and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY] has made an elaborate effort to sustain that contention, that they are responsible for the decline from the high price which sugar touched during September, 1911. Such is not the case, in my judgment, nor does the testimony taken before the committee on sugar substantiate the contention. That the beet-sugar factories would have taken a lower price than the prevailing and current market price is too ridiculous a contention to merit serious argument. I believe it is almost, if not quite universally, true that the seller of an article gets the highest possible price therefor. I am sure that this is true of the producer of cotton, corn, and wheat, and everything else that I know anything about, and I am sure that it is equally true in the manufacturer of beet sugar. It is quite true that they sold it at a lower price on some occasions, but only when they had sold it in advance of the market and before the rise in the market. Quotations for beet sugar f. o. b. Hamburg fell 2 shillings and 9 pence between the high-water mark in September and December 4, 1911, a reaction of 0.66 cent per pound; in the meantime, the American beet-sugar factories sold their product in September for 6.5 cents per pound, and on December 4 it declined to 5.9 cents per pound, a reduction of 0.60 cent per pound. Over 500,000 tons of domestic sugar had begun to come on the market in July—before the sharp advance—and was in no way responsible for the decline in the price of sugar which came after the 1st of October, 1911. It seems more reasonable to conclude that the 6,500,000 tons produced in Europe and coming into the market about the 1st of October was responsible for that reaction in price. As an indication of what the American consumer may expect from the American beet-sugar industry, let me call the attention of the committee and of the country to a recent occurrence. About the middle of February, in anticipation of higher prices, the beet-sugar factories with one accord withdrew their product from the market, although 25 per cent of their production was then unsold. On February 29, 1912, Willett & Gray's Statistical Trade Journal contains this statement: "The beet-sugar factories are still quoting 5.90 cents less 2 per cent, and thus practically withdrawn from the general market." When it is remembered that the cane refineries were then selling at 5.80 cents and that the beet-sugar factories suddenly withdrew from the market, with one-fourth of their product unsold, in an effort to force higher prices, although the price was then nearly 2½ cents per pound above the figure that they had themselves fixed as their cost of production, their philanthropy and public-spirited generosity to the consuming public will be well understood and properly appreciated.

Now, let me refer to just one other proof that these highly protected beet-sugar factories are real "philanthropists" and sell sugar cheaper than the market price simply to benefit the American consumer. They all admit that they add to the price of every pound of sugar sold at their factory doors the freight rate from New York to that factory door, and so far as even giving to the local consumers and their own neighbors the benefits that should accrue from the location of these beet factories among them, they simply say to their neighbors and local consumers, "If we were not here you would have to pay the freight on your sugar from New York, so you must pay us that freight rate, too, although the sugar we sell you never travels a mile."

Mr. HELGESEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Georgia yield to the gentleman from North Dakota?

Mr. HARDWICK. Yes.

Mr. HELGESEN. As to the prices which the gentleman gave as German prices, the Germans will not sell without a profit, will they?

Mr. HARDWICK. No.

Mr. HELGESEN. Therefore the price of sugar landed in New York from Germany must include a profit to the manufacturer?

Mr. HARDWICK. Yes; you can rely on the figures I have given because they are the export prices in Hamburg.

Mr. HELGESEN. If they are export prices, they must be the cost plus their profit?

Mr. HARDWICK. Yes; but even after meeting the transportation charge they will have half a cent profit.

Mr. HOWELL. I did not understand it was so.

Mr. HARDWICK. You will find it so when you examine the record.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Georgia yield to the gentleman from Iowa?

Mr. HARDWICK. Is the question right on this point?

Mr. GOOD. No; on the point the gentleman was just leaving.

Mr. HARDWICK. All right.

Mr. GOOD. I do not understand from the report whether the average cost that the committee found in Germany was 2.41. I thought the average cost was 3.24 cents per pound. I would like to ask whether that included the interest on the capital and the depreciation?

Mr. HARDWICK. I think it does in both cases.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARDWICK. I do.

Mr. HAUGEN. The gentleman has given this subject a great deal of investigation. I would like to ask him if he can inform the House as to the number of tons of sugar beets required to make a ton of sugar?

Mr. HARDWICK. About 250 pounds of sugar, I believe, are made out of a ton of sugar beets.

Mr. HAUGEN. Can the gentleman give me information as to what the cost is of manufacturing a ton of sugar, outside of the sugar beet?

Mr. HARDWICK. Yes; I will attempt to do that later, if I have the time.

Mr. MONDELL. I have just come in. Will the gentleman show how the beet sugar of the West could bear competition with the cane sugar of foreign countries?

Mr. HARDWICK. I can not let the gentlemen take all of my time. I think I have covered that. I am sure the gentleman will not think me discourteous when I say I have not the time to yield to him further.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman show how beet sugar can compete with cane sugar produced abroad at a cost of 1½ cents a pound?

Mr. HARDWICK. I regret that I am unable to go into that question further just at this juncture. I am sorry the gentleman did not hear all of my argument.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I am coming next to the cane-sugar situation. In the first place, let us inquire what amount of money is invested in that industry in Louisiana. The interest in Texas is relatively small and need not be considered, as the total investment in Texas does not materially increase the size of the investment in cane sugar in the South. Mr. John Dymond, one of the most intelligent of the sugar planters of Louisiana, stated before the special committee that he estimated the total investment in Louisiana, "directly and indirectly," to be from $150,000,000 to $175,000,000. We have, however, much more recent and an even more authoritative estimate as to the nature, extent, and details of this investment. In the body of the resolution adopted by certain citizens and representative sugar planters of Louisiana and New Orleans at a public meeting held in New Orleans, La., on February 12, 1912, the following statement was made:

> There is invested in this great agricultural industry in Louisiana alone, to say nothing of the other 17 or more sugar-producing States, in lands, with buildings and field improvements, $70,000,000; in factories, $35,000,000; in mules, $10,000,000; in implements, $2,000,000; in plantation railroad equipment, $2,000,000; making a total of $119,000,000.

It will be observed that neither the $70,000,000 in lands nor the $10,000,000 in mules can be fairly charged up as an investment in the sugar industry, for the reason that the land can be used for other and doubtless equally as profitable crops, and the mules can be used in cotton or in other fields as well as in the sugar fields. Taking these two items, amounting to $80,000,000, from the total of $119,000,000 given by the Louisiana planters, it will be seen that the total investment in the industry in Louisiana is not placed at more than $39,000,000, even by the people who are engaged in the industry. The sugar planters of Louisiana, who appear to be most intelligent and courteous gentlemen, appointed a committee to appear before the special committee of the House and to make a statement in behalf of the sugar industry of Louisiana. These gentlemen fixed the cost of producing a pound of 96-degree cane sugar in Louisiana at 3¾ cents per pound. To-day the island of Java makes it at 1½ cents a pound, Cuba at 1$\frac{7}{10}$ cents per pound, and the greatest sugar experts in the world contend that the Philippines can do better even than Cuba or Java with sufficient capital and modern machinery. The world figure of the cost of producing a pound of 96-degree cane sugar has already reached 1½ cents per pound, and it is gradually, if not rapidly, approaching 1 cent per pound. Yet we are asked, in the name of a great southern industry, to keep this tariff up so that we may produce in Louisiana about $29,000,000 worth of sugar a year that can not be produced there for less than 3¾ cents per pound, and in order to do so to force the people of the United States to pay the difference—fully $150,000,000 a year—in the cost of sugar.

I love my friends from Louisiana. I have the greatest respect for them. I love Louisiana and glory in its history. I would not willingly lay—though some of my Louisiana friends may think otherwise—a hard hand upon one of their industries unless my conscience and sense of public duty compelled me to do so; but, gentlemen, the time will never come when I will vote to protect a hothoused industry, whether that industry is in Georgia or Louisiana. [Applause on the Democratic side.] It is not right, and it costs the people too much.

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. Chairman, does the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARDWICK. Yes.

Mr. HOWELL. The gentleman has given a great deal of consideration to the sugar question. I want to ask him in this connection if he believes beet sugar can be produced in competition with the figures which he has named for cane sugar?

Mr. HARDWICK. No.

Mr. HOWELL. One cent a pound?

Mr. HARDWICK. No. I will tell the gentleman right now that I believe beet sugar is hothoused all over the world. The industry does not live anywhere on earth, either on this continent or in Europe, except where it is protected by high tariff laws that unduly and unfairly burden the consumers of those countries.

Mr. HOWELL. Does the gentleman believe the beet-sugar industry is a benefit to this country?

Mr. HARDWICK. I believe a reduction of the price of sugar will be a benefit to the men, women, and children who eat it. I believe that it will be beneficial to the whole country. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. HOWELL. Is there a civilized nation on the face of the globe where beet sugar is produced that does not offer it some encouragement?

Mr. HARDWICK. If every civilized nation on earth does wrong, that is no reason why we should follow them. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HARDWICK. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN. In the judgment of the gentleman, if all the nations which now foster the beet-sugar industry should cease to do so, and the world should become dependent upon the cane-sugar industry, would those countries that now produce cane sugar at a low rate be able to produce a sufficient amount of sugar for the world's consumption at the low price?

Mr. HARDWICK. The best experts on earth say that in the Philippine Islands alone enough sugar can be produced to supply the wants of the civilized world, and at the lowest cost in the world. They can make it now at 1½ cents per pound, and, finally, I believe, at 1 cent a pound. It is my judgment that we should not stay out of a lunatic asylum if we continue to pay 4 cents for making it over here.

Mr. MANN. If that be the case, does the gentleman believe that this country should aid the Philippines financially so as to develop the industry there, in order that the world may have cheap sugar, as the gentleman desires?

Mr. HARDWICK. In the confusion I did not hear the conclusion of the gentleman's question.

Mr. MANN. If the Philippine Islands can produce sufficient sugar for the world, provided they are given financial aid, does the gentleman believe that we ought to furnish that financial aid, so that the world may enjoy the benefit of cheap sugar produced in the Philippine Islands?

Mr. HARDWICK. We have been doing a great deal for them already, and under the policy inaugurated by the gentleman's own party I suppose it will be difficult to get rid of them. As they have already been such a source of burden, I would have no objection to deriving some benefit from them, and we will get that benefit, in my judgment, without any governmental aid whatever, as soon as the capital of the world begins to understand the splendid advantages in the Philippine Islands for the production of sugar.

Mr. FITZGERALD. In the establishment of the Philippine Agricultural Bank we did provide the means for financing these operations.

Mr. MANN. But they have not been financed.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is because they did not find it a good proposition.

Mr. HARDWICK. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] of course does not mean "that sugar in the Philippines is not a good proposition." But, Mr. Chairman, following still the line suggested by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], I invite the attention of the committee to the fact that besides the Philippines the United States has other and exceedingly rich sugar storehouses among her insular possessions where cane sugar can be produced at an exceedingly low cost. I refer to Hawaii, which imported into the United States about 500,000 tons in the year 1911, and to Porto Rico, which gave us about 300,000 tons in the same year. Besides these two islands, we have lying at our very door, connected with us by the closest ties, geographical, strategic, sentimental, and political, the island of Cuba, long termed by the Spaniards "the sugar bowl of the world." With sufficient capital, sound and progressive business methods, with the latest and most improved machinery, and with stable conditions, it is probable that Cuba alone can produce all the sugar we consume, and produce it at a cost of between 1 cent and 1½ cents per pound.

The next question to which I wish to invite the attention of the committee is the question as to what extent the removal of the duty on sugar will affect its price to the consumer.

At the outset of my discussion of this question I wish to invite attention to the remarkable attitude in which the opponents of this bill put themselves. In one breath they assert that the removal of duty from sugar will ruin the producer by lowering the price of his product, and in the next breath they assert that the removal of the duty will not lower the price of sugar to the consumer. If not, what harm can it do them and why do they oppose the bill?

I next invite your attention to the table of sugar prices that is printed on page 6 of the report by the Ways and Means Committee on this bill.

Comparison of export price of sugar at Hamburg and wholesale price of same at New York, 1900 to 1911.

[Cents per pound.]

The figures contained in the above report can not be questioned. They are taken from the statements, before the special committee, of Mr. E. F. Adkins, vice president of the American Sugar Refining Co., and of Mr. Truman G. Palmer, secretary of an association of American beet-sugar factories. The figures presented by these gentlemen are from authoritative and unquestioned sources—the records of the standard trades journals of the sugar industry. They show that during the 12 years for which the figures are given the average difference between the export price of raw sugar at Hamburg and the New York wholesale price of raw sugar averaged 1.84 cents per pound, whereas the tariff on raw sugar was 1.685 cents per pound, and the insurance and freight from Hamburg to New York 1.2 cents per pound, a total of 1.805 cents per pound. They also show that during this same period of years the average difference between the export price of granulated sugar at Hamburg and the wholesale price of granulated sugar at New York was 2.32 cents per pound, whereas the tariff during three-fourths of this period was 1.95 cents per pound—and during the last three years 1.90 cents per pound—and the cost of insurance and freight from Hamburg to New York 0.12 cent per pound, to which should be added 0.18 cent per pound for difference in grade, making a total of 2.25 cents per pound. In other words, the table demonstrates conclusively that during the 12 years that it covers the American consumer paid every penny of the duty on sugar and could have bought his sugar almost 2 cents per pound cheaper but for the existence of the tariff tax. Let me call your attention to another specific proof that the consumer pays every penny of this tax and that the removal of the tax will cheapen the price of sugar by the amount of the tax. When the sugar schedule of the McKinley bill went into operation, on April 1, 1891, the effect of the removal of the duty on sugar was made instantaneously apparent. Granulated was quoted in New York on March 26, 1891, at 6¼ cents per pound, and on April 2, 1891, the day after the tariff change went into effect, it fell from 6¼ to 4¼ cents per pound, and by May 14, 1891, it had fallen to 4⅛ cents per pound.

In this connection I invite your attention to the tables furnished the special committee by Mr. Wallace P. Willett, of the firm of Willett & Gray, the greatest sugar statistician in America, and one of the very greatest in the world. Mr. Willett furnished the special committee with a number of tables in proof of his statement to the committee that every one of our tariff changes in sugar have been followed by a corresponding change in the price of sugar to the American consumer. He contended that, other conditions being equal, such as crop conditions and the world-wide law of supply and demand, that any increase in duty necessarily increased the price of sugar to the consumer by the amount of such increase, and any decrease in duty, with the same qualification, necessarily decreased the price of sugar to the consumer. These tables will be found on pages 3548 to 3552 of the hearings before the special committee, and they show some very interesting facts. For instance, Mr. Willett states that, comparing the three years and three months preceding free sugar—January 1, 1888, to April 1, 1891—with the three years and five months of free sugar—April 1, 1891, to August 1, 1894—the consumer paid 2.512 cents per pound less for his sugar in the last period of time, when there was no duty, than in the first period, when there was a duty of 2.24 cents per pound.

Next Mr. Willett shows, in Table No. 4, on page 3548 of the hearings before the special committee, that the effect of the imposition of the 40 per cent ad valorem duty on sugar carried in the Wilson bill, which he says was equivalent to a duty of 0.979 cent per pound, was to raise the price of refined sugar 0.834 cent per pound, and that the effect of the Dingley law of 1897, which still further increased the Wilson duty by 0.824 cent per pound, was to increase the price of sugar to the consumer 0.586 cent per pound, and he accounts for the fact that the price did not increase to the full extent of the increase in duty, in these periods, by stating that it did not so include "because of the lower range of prices for raws, owing to overproduction of supplies." Of course, Mr. Chairman, the committee will understand that as to sugar, and as to all other commodities, prices are affected by causes that are entirely independent of changes in the tariff. For instance, in September, 1911, our price of sugar advanced about 2 cents per pound because of a reported, though possibly somewhat exaggerated, report of more than a million tons shortage in the German beet crop, and this advance occurred without any tariff change whatever, but the point is that whatever change is made in the price because of crop conditions, and in obedience to the law of supply and demand, we pay the tariff tax just the same, whether the crop is short and price rises or whether the crop is long and the price falls. In other words, while sugar went up 2 cents a pound in September last, entirely independent of the tariff, yet even then we would have gotten our sugar at 2 cents a pound cheaper than we did get it if it had not been for the duty on sugar.

After analyzing the changes in our tariff laws on sugar to which I have just referred, Mr. Willett summed up the situation in the following striking and significant statement:

> The chairman remarked (p. 3072, at bottom of page), "and the less will be the worth of the sugar lost in refining." All the analyses of changing from duty to free sugar show that whenever duty is taken off the cost of refining decreases and when duty is added the cost of refining increases, but these analyses also show that whenever duty is taken off the consumer gets the full benefit of the amount of duty taken off and also a part of the lower cost of refining.

Mr. Henry C. Mott, buyer of raw sugar for the American Sugar Refining Co., testified (Hearings, pp. 2451, 2452) that the amount of duty is always charged to the consumer.

Mr. C. A. Spreckels, president of the Federal Sugar Refining Co., testified (Hearings, pp. 2245, 2246) that to place sugar on the free list would reduce the price of sugar to the consumer—> by the amount of the duty, approximately 2 cents a pound.

Mr. Edwin F. Adkins, vice president of the American Sugar Refining Co., testified (Hearings, p. 142) that if we reduce the tariff on sugar the effect would be to reduce the price of refined sugar—> practically by the amount of the reduction, always subject to the fluctuations of supply and demand for raw sugar.

Mr. Frank C. Lowry, when asked the question (Hearings, p. 1721) as to whether or not the removal of the duty on sugar would guarantee to the consumer the full benefit of such removal, replied:

> Exactly, because then there would be no combination of dealers in this country, because they would have to compete with the dealers in other countries, and you can not get the dealers in the entire world into a combination.

Mr. Henry T. Oxnard, of the American Beet-Sugar Refining Co., testified (Hearings, p. 406) that by admitting Hawaiian and Philippine sugar free the advantage was given to the Hawaiians and Filipinos rather than to anyone in the United States, because the sugar people in Hawaii and the Philippines had simply "increased their price just the amount of duty removed," and following that statement he had a very interesting colloquy with the distinguished gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY], who preceded me in this debate, to which I wish to invite special attention:

Mr. FORDNEY. Would not Europe do that to-day if we were to take the duty off of European sugar, and Cuba?
Mr. OXNARD. They would to a certain extent; but they could not, because they would be competing against the world.
Mr. FORDNEY. Suppose the duty was removed to the whole world. Suppose we removed the duty on all imported sugar from all countries of the world; would they not take advantage of it?
Mr. OXNARD. They would compete with the other countries.

So, Mr. Chairman, it seems to me to be both demonstrated by history and proven by the testimony, without conflict or dispute, that the removal of duty will reduce the price of sugar by the amount of the duty, and we present this bill to the American people, to the overburdened American consumer, with the confident hope that we have demonstrated the contention and that the enactment of the bill into law will reduce the price of every pound of sugar consumed in this country to the extent of about 2 cents.

Mr. Chairman, the remarkable contention is made on this floor by men who ought to know better, and who could know better if they took the trouble to inform themselves and to read the testimony taken before the special committee, that the American Sugar Refining Co., commonly known as the Sugar Trust, favors free sugar. The fact is precisely otherwise. It is true that the Federal Sugar Refining Co. and Arbuckle Bros., the former of which is the most active and independent competitor of the trust, favor free sugar, but it is not true that the American Sugar Refining Co. also favors free sugar. On page 144 of the Hearings Mr. Edwin F. Adkins, vice president of the American Sugar Refining Co., expressed himself as in favor of the moderate reduction of the tariff and as opposed to an abolition of duties.

Mr. Washington B. Thomas, president of the American Sugar Refining Co., stated (Hearings, pp. 2036–2037) that some of the directors of the trust favor a reduction of the duties on sugar, others opposed any reduction, while none of them favored free sugar.

It will be remembered also that when the Payne-Aldrich tariff bill was enacted the American Sugar Refining Co. sent to the Ways and Means Committee of the House of Representatives a statement signed by its secretary, Charles H. Heike, earnestly protesting against any reduction in the duty on sugar, and that is absolutely the last and official position that the trust has taken in reference to this matter.

In testifying before the special committee, Mr. Charles H. Heike called attention to the fact that he was "speaking as a private citizen throughout and not as an officer of the American Sugar Refining Co."; that he had had no connection with the company since July, 1910. Mr. Heike frankly stated that his personal opinion as a citizen was in favor of free sugar, making the following statement on that subject:

Mr. HEIKE. Each country should produce that which it can produce best. The beet-sugar industry can only sustain itself on a tariff of nearly 100 per cent, and we should have no industry that can not stand on its own feet. A high tariff will do that. I remember a very clever Congressman who remarked once that we might have orange groves in New Hampshire if the duty was only high enough.

It must be remembered that this is the same man who favored a retention of every cent of duty so long as he was connected with the Sugar Trust, and filed the company's statement before the Ways and Means Committee in 1909, urging the retention of duty on sugar. Nor can it be forgotten that the famous architect of the Sugar Trust, Henry O. Havemeyer, told the Industrial Commission, years ago, that the "Tariff is the mother of trusts." In view of the record, in view of what the whole truth is, is it not simply remarkable that our Republican friends stand here to-day shedding crocodile tears over a wholly imaginary partnership between the Sugar Trust and the Democratic Party?

It seems to me that the only partnership there is is between the Sugar Trust and the Republican Party.

Mr. HINDS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARDWICK. Certainly.

Mr. HINDS. The gentleman spoke of this side of the Chamber being in partnership with the Sugar Trust. In our colloquy a few moments ago one specific instance was brought up where it is true—that is, I suppose it is true; there are circumstances to indicate it—that a contribution to the Democratic Party was returned. I did not wish at that time to go further because I wished to refresh my memory by consultation with my colleague, Mr. MALBY, who went over those books with me. There is another instance where that account shows that in the same campaign the Sugar Trust contributed both to the Democratic and the Republican campaign funds.

Mr. HARDWICK. To what campaign does the gentleman refer?

Mr. HINDS. I would ask the gentleman from New York [Mr. MALBY] to answer that.

Mr. HARDWICK. I regret I have not the time to go more fully into this matter. I did not see the books the gentleman refers to. I took the gentleman's statement about them. I understood the gentleman to say, as I still understand the gentleman to admit, that the check sent to the Democratic committee was returned. I will say, in justice to the gentleman and his party, as I should have said during the previous colloquy between us, that had it been in any way involved in the precise question then at issue that I do recall that Mr. John E. Parsons, counsel for the Sugar Trust, did state that at various times the Sugar Trust had made political contributions to the several parties, but my recollection of Mr. Parsons's statement was that he had limited it, so far as the Democratic Party was concerned, to contributions made to Tammany Hall at various times; but in reference to the check sent to the national committees of the two parties in the campaign of 1904, there is no doubt that the check sent to the Democratic committee was returned. Not only that, I think the gentleman will find that, if he will refresh his memory, the check was never deposited in the bank and was not indorsed, but merely had a hole in it where it appeared to have been stuck on the file of some gentleman's desk; that when those in charge of the committee and responsible heard of the matter the check was returned to the Sugar Trust.

Mr. MALBY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a moment there?

Mr. HARDWICK. I have not the time.

Mr. MALBY. I happen to have seen the check.

Mr. HARDWICK. The gentleman has already addressed the committee and can no doubt get further time in order to make any statement that he desires about the check or he can put any statement that he likes about it in the RECORD. My time is so limited that I can not take up more of it with this matter.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARDWICK. I regret that I have not the time to yield again.

Mr. MANN. I was not going to ask the gentleman a question, but was going to ask unanimous consent that the gentleman who was the chairman of a special committee, which cost considerable money, might have a little more time so that he would not be pressed at this time.

Mr. HARDWICK. I would be glad to yield to everybody if I had the time.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Georgia may have 20 minutes after the expiration of his hour.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. Chairman, I hope the gentleman will not press the request. I do not want to ask for it. I thank the gentleman, of course, for his courtesy.

Mr. MANN. It cost a good deal of money to get the gentleman's information, and I think we ought to have it.

Mr. RANSDELL of Louisiana. Mr. Chairman, the Louisiana people would like to ask a few questions if we could get some time.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I made the request and I desire that the Chair put it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Georgia be extended 20 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I understood the gentleman from Georgia to say that he did not care to have his time extended.

Mr. HARDWICK. That is true.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Then I object.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is heard.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. Chairman, before I proceed to a discussion of another branch of this question, I wish to insert in the record, as a matter of simple justice to him, a letter from a gentleman who has been previously assailed in this debate by opponents of this bill, and who has been severely criticized all over the country by the beneficiaries of the sugar tax. It seems to me that these gentlemen think that it is perfectly proper for any gentleman to favor a retention of duties for the "protection" of the industry in which he is interested and conduct as active and as aggressive a propaganda to save his "protection" as he may desire, but that it is hardly short of a crime for anybody who speaks for the millions of American consumers and urges a reduction of tariff burdens to conduct a propaganda in support of that view. The gentleman to whom I refer has, in my judgment, done a great work for the people of the country by his aggressive and forceful advocacy of the removal of the duty on sugar, and while he has necessarily earned the ill will of the protected interest, because of his aggressive fight, he is undoubtedly entitled to the gratitude and the good will of every American consumer who has a grocery bill to pay. I refer to Mr. Frank C. Lowry, of New York, sales agent for the Federal Sugar Refining Co., and secretary of the Committee of Wholesale Grocers, and I invite the attention of the committee to the letter from him, which follows:

NEW YORK, March 18, 1912.

Hon. THOMAS W. HARDWICK,
Chairman Special Committee on Investigation of The American Sugar Refining Co., and others,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: Those opposed to any reduction in the tariff on sugar have endeavored to besmirch the standing of the Committee of Wholesale Grocers, of which I have served as secretary, because I am also in charge of the sales department of the Federal Sugar Refining Co., an independent refinery. There has at no time been any mystery as to who I was or where I stood on this important matter. Certainly I was very glad to have the opportunity to state it clearly to your committee when I appeared before them last July. The Wholesale Grocers' Committee was formed in 1909 for the purpose, as stated on our letterheads, of "obtaining cheaper sugar for consumers through reduction of duties on raw and refined sugars." I believed in the principle advocated, was instrumental in forming this committee, and have served as its secretary, without any remuneration, direct or indirect, because the other members desired it. My name, and that of the other members of the committee, has appeared on all our stationary. We have been particularly careful about this, so that all might know exactly who was behind the movement. Had there been any desire on my part, or that of the other members of the committee, to conceal the fact that I was interested in this work, this would not have been done.

With the exception of myself, all our members are actively engaged in the wholesale grocery business. They are: Carl Schuster, Koenig & Schuster, New York City; W. H. Baker, Baker & Co., Winchester, Va.; B. F. Persons, Patsone & Scoville Co., Evansville, Ind.; H. C. Beggs, Dilworth Bros. & Co., Pittsburgh, Pa.; R. E. Collins, Collins & Co., Birmingham, Ala.; A. S. Hammond, Monypeny Hammond Co., Columbus, Ohio; G. Thalheimer, Syracuse, N. Y.; Henry Baden, Henry Baden & Co., Independence, Kans.; F. J. Dessoir, R. C. Williams & Co., New York City; H. T. Gates, E. W. Gates & Co., Richmond, Va.; W. E. Small, the A. B. Small Co., Macon, Ga.; E. L. Woodward, E. L. Woodward & Co., Norfolk, Va.; A. Blanton, A. Blanton Grocery Co., Marion, N. C.; Jacob Zinsmeister, J. Zinsmeister & Bro., Louisville, Ky.; A. Brinkley, A. Brinkley & Co., Norfolk, Va.; R. E. Bentley, Bentley, Shriver & Co., Baltimore, Md.; John E. Talmadge, jr., Talmadge Bros. & Co., Athens, Ga.; Isaac Horner, Henry Horner & Co., Chicago, Ill.; Edward Cumpson, T. & E. Cumpson, Buffalo, N. Y.; E. P. McKinney, McKinney & Co., Binghamton, N. Y.; H. Y. McCord, McCord-Stuart Co., Atlanta, Ga.; A. S. Webster, Webster Grocery Co., Danville, Ill.

These gentlemen are from 14 different States, and the firms represented have a total rating of nearly $8,000,000.

In the work we have been doing we have had the cooperation of a great many wholesale and retail grocery houses that are not members of the committee, but who would be glad to become members of it were it desirable to have the number increased. Furthermore, I am firmly convinced that 90 per cent of the wholesale grocery trade of the country is in sympathy with our efforts. The National Wholesale Grocers' Association, as an organization, has not take any action regarding the tariff on sugar, for the reason, as they have repeatedly stated, "As an organization we do not deal with political questions of any kind." They leave matters of this kind to be dealt with separately by the various local organizations and individual members, and the petitions now filed with the Ways and Means Committee show how thoroughly this has been done. I might mention, however, that the National Canners' Association, with a membership of over 3,000 firms, does not feel this way about it, but passed resolutions favoring a lower duty on sugar, and have instructed the chairman of their committee on legislation, Mr. Bert N. Fernald, to use his best efforts to bring about such a reduction. The National Bottlers' Protective Association have acted in a similar way, the only difference being that their resolution calls for "free sugar."

Previous to the time this committee was formed, in 1909, the general public knew little regarding the details of the sugar tariff, and all our efforts have been along the lines of publishing the facts, feeling satisfied that if the people were informed what the tax was and its effect they would demand and receive the relief from the excessive rate to which they are clearly entitled. As a result of our efforts thousands of petitions asking for a reduction in the tariff on sugar have been sent to Congressmen signed by individuals, firms, corporations, granges, civic associations, etc. Through these the signers have spoken for themselves and others who are in sympathy with the movement. These are the people who will hold their Congressman responsible for what he does or does not do to secure a lower tax rate on sugar.

To distribute this information, besides requiring effort on the part of this committee, required funds, and the Federal Sugar Refining Co. has helped us financially. Investigation by your committee disclosed that the Federal Sugar Refining Co. was absolutely independent, having no affiliation, directly or indirectly, with the Sugar Trust. Consequently their interest in the lower duties is identical with that of the consumer. A lower tariff rate will reduce the price of sugar, resulting in an increased consumption, so that a larger business can be done at a reduced expense.

The American Sugar Refining Co. is clearly on record as desiring no change in the present tariff, as reference to the Payne-Aldrich tariff hearings of 1909, pages 3430–3440, will disclose a letter and a brief filed by them, urging that the present tariff rate be maintained. Thus the line is clearly established with consumers, manufacturers, dealers, and independent refiners desiring lower duties, and opposed to this is the Sugar Trust and their allies, the domestic sugar producers.

As this committee think it should be clearly stated exactly who we are and also that the work we have done has been because we believe in the principles advocated, and for no other reason, we would appreciate if you can arrange to have this printed in the RECORD.

Very respectfully, yours,

FRANK C. LOWRY, Secretary.

Mr. Chairman, I next wish to invite the attention of the committee to the enormous expense to which the consumers of the United States have been put in order to make an unsuccessful attempt to produce our own sugar in this country, and the enormous burden we have placed upon American consumption in order to support and protect a relatively unimportant industry.

Granulated sugar is to-day quoted at wholesale in New York at 5.90 cents per pound. Mr. Palmer, secretary of the Beet Sugar Association, has shown from the figures for a number of years that the retail price in the United States has averaged 0.88 cent per pound above the New York wholesale price. This would make the present average retail price in the United States 6.78 cents per pound, or $151.87 per long ton. The consumption of the United States for 1912, as estimated by Willett & Gray, is three and a half million long tons. Multiply $151.87 by three and a half million tons and you have the enormous sum of $531,545,000 as the Nation's sugar bill for the year 1912, if the present high price of sugar is maintained. Multiply the consumption of three and a half million tons by the duty of $42.76 per ton (1.90 cents per pound) and you have $149,660,000—the saving that this bill would make to the American consumer in the year 1912 alone.

Again, to look at it from another angle, from 1897 to 1911, inclusive, the total consumption of refined sugar in the United States was 39,770,423 long tons. The duty of 1.90 cents per pound, or $42.76 per ton, has been added during all these years to the price of every pound of sugar we have consumed, whether it was produced at home, in our insular possessions, or in any foreign land. This represents an addition of more than $1,700,000,000 to the sugar bill of the country within the last 15 years, since the passage of the Dingley bill. It is even a few millions over that, because in all those years, except the last two, the duty has been 1.95 cents per pound instead of 1.90. Against this stupendous addition to the Nation's sugar bill, contrast the relatively small amounts invested in the industry in the United States, about $60,000,000 in beet sugar and about $39,000,000 in cane, less than $100,000,000 in both. So that, to weigh the burden for the last 15 years only, in order to protect an industry in which about $99,000,000 is invested, we have added 17 times as much as the total investment in that industry to the sugar bill of the country.

No wonder that this once appalled even our Republican friends of the protection faith and order, so that in 1890 the Republican Party proposed to pension off the sugar producers with a bounty. No wonder that the Democrats of the country are no longer willing to stand it and to-day repudiate the whole thing, bounty and all. Highly as we respect our friends from Louisiana and Colorado, much as we love them, we find their sugar industry entirely too costly an investment for the people of the country.

Upon this subject let me quote from two eminent authorities:

Mr. William Bayard Cutting, one of the first in this country to engage in the production of beet sugar, stated "That the beet-sugar industry is profitable under conditions of absolutely free trade, and that the United States, being an agricultural country, the industry has nothing to fear even from the annexation of Cuba."

Prof. F. W. Taussig, Henry Lee professor of economics at Harvard University, in the February, 1912, issue of the Quarterly Journal of Economics, says, regarding the beet-sugar industry: "If protection to young industries was needed, it has been given. The initial stages of trial and unfamiliarity are certainly passed. The industry in the far West has certainly passed the infant stage. Its difficulties in the farming region proper seem to be due to the competition of the other kinds of agriculture, which under the typical American conditions are more profitable. If this kind of agriculture needs protection, and if the familiar grain growing, cattle fattening, and dairying of the corn-wheat belt do not, the explanation is still to be found in the principle of comparative cost."

Mr. Chairman, just a word in reference to the contention advanced by my friend from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY] that the removal of the duty on sugar will be in violation of the reciprocal trade agreement of 1903 with the Republic of Cuba. I deny absolutely the soundness of that contention. Neither the Fifty-eighth Congress nor the then President of the United States had the power, or assumed to exercise the power, to make an agreement with the Republic of Cuba that future Congresses would continue to levy a duty on sugar. The agreement was simply to the effect that as long as we levy a duty on sugar Cuba should have a 20 per cent reduction on the same. As I have already shown, of this 20 per cent Cuban sugar planters get but one-fourth anyway, and it seems to me that the larger and better market that this country will afford them under free sugar will more than compensate for the slight advantage that Cuban reciprocity has conferred upon them.

Mr. Chairman, in concluding my remarks, I wish to say that the proposition that the Democratic Party presents to-day is neither new nor novel in this body. In the last Democratic House that ever sat in this Chamber before the present one the Wilson bill left that door, on its way across this Capitol, with free sugar written in it. It was in the Senate of the United States that the will of the people was defeated and the American consumer denied the relief to which he was so justly entitled.

Mr. WARBURTON. Mr. Chairman, did not all the Republicans vote for that?

Mr. HARDWICK. Not in 1894. They voted against it then, but I want to read you some arguments that were delivered on this floor and elsewhere for free sugar in 1890, and one or two in more recent years. I read first from the speech of William McKinley, delivered on this floor on May 20, 1890, when that distinguished gentleman presented the McKinley bill.

I would have preferred, Mr. Chairman, if the article of sugar could have been left in the tariff schedule upon the dutiable list. This, however, was not practicable in the presence of an almost universal sentiment in favor of the removal of the entire duties upon this article of universal family use.

I want to read you from the speech of the Hon. Nelson Dingley, of Maine, delivered on this floor on May 10, 1890:

The duty collected on sugar and molasses the last fiscal year was $55,975 610, or nearly 2 cents per pound. Adding to this the increased cost of 275,000,000 pounds of sugar produced in this country, equivalent to the duty of 2 cents per pound, and the duty imposed on these articles was practically a tax of $63,500,000, or $1 per head, on the people of this country.

Inasmuch as there is scarcely another article of common use not now on the free list which can not be promptly produced or made here nearly or substantially to the extent of our wants, the transfer of sugar and molasses to the free list will afford conspicuous relief to the people of this country.

I next read you from a speech of the distinguished gentleman who has had a long and illustrious career in this House, and who still sits in this Chamber on the Republican side. I refer to the Hon. JOSEPH G. CANNON, of Illinois, who on May 20, 1890, said:

Mr. Chairman, the placing of sugar on the free list will relieve each inhabitant, rich and poor, of $1 per annum of tax, and at least 50 cents of extortion levied by the sugar refiners.

The gentleman from California asks, Why give a bounty to the producers of sugar in the United States? Well, I answer my friend, I am not anxious to give a bounty if you do not want it. My principal anxiety is to place sugar on the free list and relieve the people from this great burden of taxation.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARDWICK. With pleasure.

Mr. CANNON. I have no time. I presume I shall have none; but I want to say to the gentleman——

Mr. HARDWICK. I will ask the gentleman to please ask his question.

Mr. CANNON. I will put it in the form of a question.

Mr. HARDWICK. I have only two or three minutes.

Mr. CANNON. I shall ask to have the gentleman's time extended.

Mr. HARDWICK. But that will not be allowed.

Mr. CANNON. Oh, I think they will allow it. That was a condition when we were getting over $100,000,000 of surplus. The gentleman does not state that.

Now, the whole truth is the whole truth. We passed a law giving 2 cents bounty——

Mr. HARDWICK. You said you did not care anything about that at all.

Mr. CANNON. And every Democrat, substantially, except Louisiana Democrats, if I recollect, voted against free sugar.

Mr. HARDWICK. We have gotten better and you have gotten worse, then. That is all there is to it.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I will call your attention again to the remarks of a gentleman, once a distinguished Member of another body, made in this Capitol on June 8, 1904. He said:

If I had my way I would strike from this bill every vestige which provides a duty on sugar.

The gentleman who uttered that Democratic sentiment was the late distinguished Senator from Iowa, Mr. Allison. This same Republican Senator also stated, on July 11, 1897, "whatever duty we place on sugar must, in the very nature of things, be added to the price."

Another distinguished gentleman, long a leader in another legislative body, said in this Capitol on June 5, 1894:

They have signalized that friendship to-day by joining their Democratic allies in forcing upon the people of the United States this unjustifiable, indefensible, and infamous sugar tax. I said this tax was infamous and if I could employ any stronger word than that I should be glad to do so.

The gentleman who uttered that sentiment was Senator Nelson W. Aldrich, of Rhode Island.

And yet Republicans say to-day that this bill presents a radical proposition and denounce the Democratic Party for attempting to destroy a great industry. These gentlemen are forgetful now, as always, of the great masses of the people, of the American consumer, and assert that the American consumer is not entitled to this relief, although the cost of living mounts higher and higher under Republican rule.

Mr. Chairman, it is my deliberate judgment that the one great reason why we have this Democratic House is because the American people are determined to reduce the cost of living so far as same can be reduced through tariff legislation, and I firmly believe that in presenting this bill for free sugar the Democratic Party is responsive to the will of the vast majority of American people and plants itself on impregnable ground when it asserts that it is unwilling to continue this burdensome tax on one of the great food necessities of life. [Loud applause.]

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Chairman, I yield 55 minutes to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. HINDS]. [Applause.]

Mr. HINDS. Mr. Chairman, under ordinary circumstances I would not take part in this debate on a subject which belongs so exclusively to the Ways and Means Committee, but this House honored me last summer with a place on the committee for investigating the American Sugar Refining Co., and I feel under obligations to lay before the Members such conclusions as I may have reached in the course of that inquiry and such facts as may be pertinent to this discussion.

The Ways and Means Committee have not given to us any testimony or any conclusions based on any investigation of their own. But the conclusions which they have given are based on the investigation made by our committee. Now, to the candor, industry, and fairness of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK], who presided over the investigation then undertaken, and of the Members associated with him, I pay every tribute of respect. But, in spite of that, the fact still remains that our committee was not instructed or expected to examine the question of the tariff on sugar, and such examination as was made by it on that subject was wholly incidental, imperfect, and inadequate. Perhaps the most striking proof of that fact is that our deductions as to the cost of the beet sugar in Germany and in the United States, showing over a cent difference in the cost of production, are antagonized by the distinguished chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, who gives reasonings of his own to indicate that the difference can not be of such harmful extent as those figures would indicate.

TARIFF BOARD INQUIRY NEEDED.

There is only one inquiry adequate to a subject so vast as this, and that would have to be made either by an examination longer than any committee of this House would be able to give or by an examination by a tariff board unencumbered by the general legislative duties resting upon members of committees here [applause], an examination that could be conducted with business thoroughness into the books of the companies and into the cost of production. That alone can give us the definite information needed for a subject so vast as this.

Do gentlemen realize how extensive this subject is and what a wide range it covers? The labor question alone concerns the toil of brown men under the suns of Java, of black men in the canebrakes of Louisiana, of white farmers in Michigan and Utah, of light-haired Norsemen who till the beet fields of Sweden on the extreme northern frontier of the Temperate Zone. Any determination of what may be done by this country must go into that great question of labor.

THE EUROPEAN SYNDICATE.

Any determination of what must be done by this country must also go into the question of the control of sugar production in Europe. Sugar on the Continent of Europe is not produced under the laws of trade as we understand them as to other commodities, and as we understand them as to sugar on this continent. There exists a great international syndicate which presides over the sugar industry as a board of directors might preside over a corporation, with a minuteness that often goes to the control of the supply of sugar that may come upon the European market. That great international combination grew up not on the initiative of the protectionist countries of the Continent, but on the suggestion of the one great free-trade nation of the world—England. It grew up at her suggestion, and is maintained with her concurrence, because the conditions of the sugar market are so abnormal that even she could not stand, with all her free-trade ideas, the cheapness of the sugar that was forced on her until it disarranged her industrial system.

Go beyond the syndicated nations of the Continent of Europe, and you come to Russia, which is outside the circle of the Brussels conference. We have made no investigation of the capacity of Russia or what she may do. And yet this bill before us to-day, by repealing, or, perhaps, a better word would be avoiding, the countervailing duty established in section 7 of the existing tariff law, as it certainly seems to do, opens our market to the bounty-fed sugar of Europe, which is exported to countries that will receive it with a premium paid to the exporter. We have not investigated that subject.

But the effect of bounty-fed sugar is notoriously so disastrous that no great civilized country is allowing it in its markets except in limited amounts, and even free-trade England is included in the list. Yet by this bill we would turn the bounty-fed sugar of Russia and Argentina onto the markets of the United States, in competition with the cane growers of Louisiana and the beet-sugar producers of the West.

PRICE OF SUGAR WOULD BE INCREASED.

We are opposed to this bill to-day; first, because there has been no adequate examination of a question so important; and, secondly, because we believe the facts of the situation show indisputably that the effects of the bill will not be to reduce the price of sugar to the consumer for any great length of time, but to increase it. We are opposed to it not only because it will increase the price to the consumer ultimately, but because it will prostrate the domestic sugar industry of Continental United States and the industries of those dependencies which within a few years have been united to us, Porto Rico, the Philippines, and Hawaii, and will disorder the finances and economic condition of that young Nation of which we are the guardian—Cuba.

THOSE WHO ADVISE CHANGES OF DUTIES.

I have said that our inquiry was not intended to cover the tariff question and from this point of view was inadequate. Many people came before us, but they represented the "interests" almost entirely. The managers of the great company called the trust, the other refiners of cane sugar, the manufacturers of beet sugar, the owners of cane plantations in Louisiana and Cuba, the farmers who raise beets in the West, all came and stated the case from their point of view. I do not think they intended to misrepresent, but no one could expect of them absolute fairness of perspective. The "ultimate" consumer did not come. He is too busy with his daily vocation to study so complex a problem. He seemed to have arrived one day when a gentleman appeared who drew a golden picture of the wealth coming to the consumer from the removal of the sugar duty. But we found, when we examined him under oath, that he was the agent of a great refinery, capitalized at $10,000,000, and that the refinery was financing the literary portion of the movement in favor of this bill. Out of all these conflicting conditions it is very difficult to reach a conclusion as to the real interests of the absent consumer.

A GREAT INDUSTRIAL CONTEST.

While the inquiry made by our investigating committee was entirely inadequate as to the tariff question, it did show certain great basic conditions which we must take into account. It seems that the first and most important of those basic conditions is that there is existing at this time a great contest between two branches of the sugar industry, the cane refiners of the seaboard and the beet-sugar producers of the interior. When I speak of the cane refiners of the seaboard I am speaking almost entirely of the great American Sugar Refining Co., which is called the "trust." With it are a few rivals, who, to use an expresssion given by a witness before our committee, go along "under the umbrella" of the "trust" in the matter of prices to the consumer. This is probably true as to most, if not all, of the independent refiners.

Now, I have stated that there is that condition of antagonism between those two great branches of our sugar industry. I think it is abundantly proved by our testimony. For instance, on page 1158 of the testimony, Mr. Gilmore, representing the sugar refiner Arbuckle, said of the beet-sugar industry that its product came as far east as Massachusetts, and, to use his own words, "did a lot of damage" in the market.

That testimony proves that there is a real competition in the sugar business, and that the cane refiners of the seaboard fear the rivalry of the western industry. Mr. Gilmore further said:

When they—that is, the sellers of beet sugar—come with hothouse protection and invade my territory, I do not like it.

Mr. Jamison, of the same firm, on page 1195, said:

If there was no duty, I do not think the beet would be so prosperous, and we would probably sell more sugar. It would enable us to run more constantly.

Mr. Jamison wished the duty entirely removed, but he was willing to say that he thought it ought to be removed by degrees. Against the reasonings of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK] that the removal of this duty will not tend to kill out the beet-sugar industry in the West, I cite the opinion of this practical business man, daily engaged in the selling of sugar, who knows thoroughly what competition is and what it does.

Mr. Atkins, of Boston, the vice president of the American Sugar Refining Co., on pages 144, 145, and 173 of our hearings, favored a reduction of the duty, and said that his company could get along under free sugar, inasmuch as the advantage from the present differential on refined sugar was of so little advantage to the refiner that it was not worth discussing.

Mr. Thomas, on page 2033 of the testimony, shows that a cane refinery that has no interest in the beet-sugar industry is in favor of reducing the duty, and in so far as the American Sugar Refining Co. was engaged in the cane-refining business—and that is by far the greater part of its business—it was undoubtedly interested in the reduction of the tariff. I call the attention of gentlemen——

Mr. STERLING. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HINDS. Yes.

Mr. STERLING. Who is Mr. Thomas?

Mr. HINDS. He is one of the directors of the American Sugar Refining Co. He is a director and possibly an officer otherwise.

I will call the attention of gentlemen here to the fact that the American Sugar Refining Co. holds about $15,000,000 of the stock of the western beet-sugar companies. I will also call attention to the fact that this property was acquired under the old domination of the company by militant monopolists. The men who waged that campaign to control the beet-sugar industry have passed out of its management and no others of similar purposes appear to succeed them. So far as I have been able to discover from the testimony—and I think the testimony of Mr. Atkins bears out this idea—they are anxious to get rid of that entangling property as fast as they can.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Maine yield to the gentleman from Kansas?

Mr. HINDS. Certainly.

Mr. MURDOCK. I would like to ask the gentleman what per cent of the total is $15,000,000? What per cent of the whole sugar-beet capitalization is that $15,000,000?

Mr. HINDS. The $15,000,000 represents the book value, the face value of the stock is considerably larger. I think it is something like thirty-odd millions. That thirty-odd million, as I understand it, would represent less than a half of the capitalization of the total beet-sugar industry.

Mr. MADDEN. The total capitalization is over $100,000,000, is it not?

Mr. HINDS. I believe it is so stated.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit me to state it in this way——

Mr. HINDS. Yes.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I understand that the showing of the trustized condition, so called, of the beet-sugar industry, is arrived at from a consideration of the fact that the Sugar Trust owns 41 per cent of the stock in those companies, which produced 54 per cent of the product.

Mr. HINDS. I think that is a fair statement.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. So that, as a matter of fact, the Sugar Trust owns only 20 per cent of the entire sugar product. I may say, further, that my congressional district contains eight beet-sugar factories, and the Sugar Trust never owned a dollar in any one of them or had any connection with them whatever.

Mr. HINDS. Undoubtedly the proportion of the beet-sugar factories outside of the dominion of the trust is large—over one-half—and is growing all the time, because the trust is disposing of its beet-sugar property as fast as it can, apparently.

Mr. FORDNEY. It should not be understood that the amount of stock that the American Sugar Refining Co. holds in the subsidiary companies is more than one-half of the stock of those companies. It is not so. They do not own one-half of the stock of any company, with the single exception of one concern.

Mr. HINDS. Is not the gentleman informed of the fact that that has been disposed of since the Government suit came on?

Mr. FORDNEY. I do not know. I knew the situation before that.

Mr. HINDS. The United States Government is prosecuting the American Sugar Refining Co. under the Sherman antitrust law, and the ownership of stock in the beet-sugar factories is one of the conditions on which a conviction would be likely to be based. They can not dispose of all that property at once. They will have to dispose of it by degrees, and I think the testimony of Mr. Atkins indicates that that is the purpose of his company.

The two industries are naturally antagonistic. On any scheme of economical production the beet-sugar industry should not be connected with the cane-refining industry. They are naturally opposed. On the Continent of Europe the beet-sugar industry has entirely driven out the cane-refining industry, and there is a probability that if the cane refiners of this country do not receive some such advantage as is contemplated in this bill they will find a constant and growing competition with the beet-sugar industry. Of course such competition, if not carried to destructive extremes, is of advantage to the consumer.

Mr. J. M. C. SMITH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HINDS. Surely.

Mr. J. M. C. SMITH The gentleman is on the Sugar Investigating Committee, is he not?

Mr. HINDS. I was.

Mr. J. M. C. SMITH. Will the gentleman please give us his reason for the rise in the price of sugar last year, if he is able to say?

Mr. HINDS. I will get to that presently.

THE HOUSE SHOULD CONSIDER THE CONSUMER.

Now, it is not the business of this House to become the champion or the partisan of either of those two branches of industry. I do not quite agree with the sentence in the report of the majority of the Committee on Ways and Means which states that the cane refiners are to receive a superior or a more important consideration than any other branch of this industry. We should not shape our legislation for the purpose of favoring one or the other or even for the purpose of umpiring the contest between them. We should look at but one thing, and that is what legislation by us, what imposition of conditions by us, will result in the long run in enabling the American consumer to get his sugar at the least expenditure—I am not going to say expenditure in dollars and cents, but I am going back to that older currency of humanity, that currency which is the only real test of value, the effort put out by the man who acquires the commodity by his labor. There are a great multitude of consumers to be considered. But we must not consider them entirely as consumers. It is essential for us to consider nearly every consumer—and in the case of the great mass of consumers it is so—as a producer also, and on his ability to get a fair return on what he produces depends his ability to become a consumer. [Applause on the Republican side.]

That is the key to the whole question before us. What does an American care if in the Empire of China he can be shaved for a cent and a half, get his hair cut for two cents, and his shoulders rubbed and queue braided free in addition? [Laughter and applause.] It amounts to nothing to a man on the soil of America. The question here in all these things is, What is the relation of the price to the money that you have in your pocket and your opportunities for replenishing the pocket? It seems to me that that question is at the foundation of this discussion.

SUGAR REALLY CHEAPER IN AMERICA THAN ELSEWHERE.
